The Sabbath Recorder.

ROBERT CORNTHWAITE,

Pastor of the Sabbath-keeping Church of Mill Yard, in Goodman's Fields, London, from 1726 to 1755..

ROBERT CORNTHWAITE was a native of Bolton, near Lancaster, where he was born in 1696. He lost his father when he was very young; and his mother being left with eight children, and but in very moderate circumstances, he engaged in the care of a school some years before the usual term for the completion of his own education had expired, that he might not be an incumbrance to his widowed parent, but contribute to the support of the family. Soon after he came to years of maturity, though his parents were members of the Established Church, he joined himself to the Dissenters of the Presbyterian denomination. The ground of this conduct was a conviction, that the Gospel had not prescribed any national religious establishment, and that the imposition of public forms of worship, and articles of faith, was an infringement on the most sacred natural rights of conscience.

From the place of his nativity, after staying a little time at one or two other places, he removed to, and for some years was settled at, Chesham, in Buckinghamshire. Here, finding reason to alter his sentiments both on the mode and the subjects of baptism, he entered upon the ministry among the Baptists. From Chesham he was invited to a Baptist congregation near Boston in Lincolnshire. Meeting with some uneasiness, he left that place before the expiration of a year, though he was very earnestly importuned, by persons of considerable distinction there, to continue amongst them, and had from one the offer of an immediate and handsome provision, if he would have conformed to the National Church. He was then wholly unprovided for, and the latitude of his sentiments damped his hopes of encouragement from the Dissenters. But though the offer was seconded by these powerful circumstances, his integrity determined him to reject it.

Soon after leaving Boston, Mr. Cornthwaite went to London. Here the controversy concerning the seventh day, and the observance of it as obligatory on Christians, came before him; and after a careful and deliberate examination of the question, he concluded that it was still incumbent on Christians to keep it according to the fourth commandment. He therefore commenced keeping the Sabbath; and, in 1726, he was chosen pastor of the Seventh-day Baptist congregation in Mill Yard, Goodman's Fields, in which connection he continued nearly thirty years, until his death, April 19, 1755, in the 59th year of his age.

The beginning of Mr. Cornthwaite's ministry was an important epoch in the history of the Mill Yard Church. For a time previous, they had been comparatively destitute of the regular and efficient ministration of the word. In the year 1720, they had endeavored to improve their condition by inviting the Rev. Joseph Stennett, (afterwards Doctor of Divinity,) who was at that time the minister of a church in Exeter, to take the pastoral care of them; but he had declined. To add to their embarrassment, the Cripplegate Sabbath-keeping Church was without a pastor, and its members had been accustomed to meet with the Mill Yard congregation since the death of the elder Joseph Stennett in 1713. In such circumstances, Mr. Cornthwaite's appearance seemed altogether providential, and was hailed with joy. He soon showed that his heart was intent upon building up the church. Meetings for social worship and prayer were instituted, discipline was maintained, and the Sabbath was made a frequent subject of discussion. The effects of this course were soon visible, and illustrate happily the power of a pious and energetic pastor. On the church records of 1730, only four years after Mr. Cornthwaite's election, we find notices of meetings held for thanksgiving and prayer in view of the interest manifested in various places respecting the Sabbath.

Mr. Cornthwaite was faithful and assiduous in the discharge of his ministerial duties. The subjects of his discourses were almost always practical. The strain of them was plain and easy, but manly, solid, and convincing. In explaining the Scriptures, he labored, we are told, "to give a rational and consistent sense of them; and showed them to be indeed such an inestimable fund of the most important truths, as renders them worthy to be received with the highest joy and gladness by every reasonable mind." One of the distinguishing parts of his character was diligence and industry. Possessing a peculiar degree of spirit and vigor, enjoying, for thirty years, an uninterrupted state of health, and understanding the great art of improving every portion of time, he was constantly devoted to his employment as a minister and school-master, and engaged also in a series of other labors and studies of a very important and useful nature. He was eminent for his great zeal to discover truth, and his inflexible adherence to every thing which, in his view, bore the stamp of truth, however contrary to the common sentiments of mankind, and obnoxious to general censure. He was equally zealous with respect to moral and practical truth, and to the performance of every part of his duty. As soon as he was convinced that any thing was his duty, he never consulted whether or not it was agreeable to his interest. But though he was so peculiarly cautious of violating any part of his own duty, he was always ready to make the most favorable allowances for the excusable failings of others. Nothing but hardened and flagrant acts of vice could deprive any person of his affectionate good wishes, or of any kind offices and assistance that were in his power. An extensive charity, benevolence, and candor, formed an eminent part of his character; and he was well satisfied with every one whom he found to be governed by principles of sincerity, benevolence, and piety. The particularities and distinctions arising from religious differences, were no obstructions to his affection and friendship. His death was sudden; but previous to it, he had expressed a complete and absolute resignation with respect to the length and shortness of his life.

Mr. Cornthwaite's publications were devoted principally, though not exclusively, to the subject of the Sabbath. In his discussions, he had to contend with several able writers, among whom were Dr. Samuel Wright and Dr. Caleb Fleming. His productions show that he had made the subject one of profound study, and that he was well qualified to give instruction upon it. Six works are now extant in which he maintains that the seventh day is the true and only Sabbath. The first was published in London in 1730, and was entitled, "Reflections on Dr. Wright's Treatise on the Religious Observation of the Lord's Day." The second appeared in 1735, under the bold title, "The Seventh day of the week the Christian Sabbath." The third and fourth were both issued in the year 1736, and their titles indicate that the subject was then receiving more or less attention. One was entitled, "The Seventh-day Sabbath Further Vindicated, or a Defence of some Reflections on Dr. Wright's Treatise," &c.; the other, "A Second Defence," &c., directed against Caleb Fleming. Mr. Cornthwaite's fifth work on this subject, and probably the last which he wrote, was published in London, 1740, and called, "An Essay on the Sabbath," &c., occasioned by articles written upon that subject by Mr. Hallett, Mr. Jephson, Mr. Chubb, Mr. Killingworth, Mr. Dabol, and Dr. Watts. Besides these five, there is a pamphlet in the library of the church at Natton, Eng., entitled, "Mr. Foster's Sermon, Of the Sabbath, examined with candor." From some allusions in this pamphlet to works which the writer had previously issued, it is quite certain that Mr. Cornthwaite was its author. When we add to the foregoing his pamphlet on Transubstantiation, and his Occasional Sermons, it will be seen that he must have been a man of good attainments and great industry.

Mr. Daniel Noble, a pupil of Mr. Cornthwaite, and his successor in the pastoral care of the Mill Yard Church, preached his funeral sermon. Mr. N.'s remarks on the utility and importance of a conscientious regard for speculative truth, may properly conclude these brief memoirs of a man who exhibited, in this respect, a singular and meritorius example. "Though such a strict attachment to bare speculative truth may appear," says this judicious writer, "at the first view to be very far from being one of the principal and most amiable parts of morality, yet it is certainly an attainment of very high importance, as it is a good foundation for the superstructure of every other virtue. And, if we view the world around us, how many deplorable instances shall we find of the unhappy and fatal consequences of the present reigning indifference with respect to the truth or falsehood of opinions, sentiments, and professions? But it seems scarcely conceivable, that he who has a strict and inviolable regard to truth, for its own sake, can be indifferent to any branch of virtue whatever."

THE DEAD.—How little do we think of the dead! Their bodies lay entombed in all our towns, villages and neighborhoods. The lands they cultivated, the houses they built, the works of their hands, are always before our eyes. We travel the same roads, walk the same paths, sit by the same fireside, sleep in the same rooms, ride in the same carriage, and dine at the same table, and yet seldom remember that those that once occupied these places, are now gone forever. Strange that the living should so forget the dead when the world is full of the mementos of their lives. Strange that the fleeting cares of life should so soon rush in and fill the breast to the exclusion of those once so near. To-day man stands and weeps over the grave of his departed friend. To-morrow he passes that grave with cold indifference. To-day his heart is wrung with all the bitterness of anguish for the loss of one he so much loved. To-morrow the image of that friend is effaced from his heart.

THE GENTLE WORD.

A gentle word hath a magical power,
The weary breast to beguile;
It gladdens the eye, it lightens the brow,
And changes the tear to a smile.
In the genial sunshine it sheds around,
The shadows of care depart,
And we feel, in its soothing and friendly tone,
There's balm for the wounded heart.

Oh! watch thou, then, that thy lips ne'er breathe
A bitter, ungentle word,
For that which is lightly and idly said,
Is often too deeply heard.
And though for the moment it leave no trace,
For pride will its woes conceal,
Remember, the spirit that's calm and still
Is always the first to feel.

It may not be in thy power, perchance,
To secure a lofty place,
And blazen thy name upon History's page,
As a friend to the human race;
But oft in the daily tasks of life,
Though the world behold thee not,
Thy gentle and kindly words may soothe
A desponding brother's lot.

'Tis well to walk with a cheerful heart,
Wherever our fortune call,
With a friendly glance, and an open hand,
And a gentle word for all;
Since life is a thorny and difficult path
Where toil is the portion of man,
We all should endeavor while passing along,
To make it as smooth as we can.

BILLY DAWSON.

A correspondent of the New York Christian Advocate and Journal is giving some sketches of celebrated English preachers among the Wesleyans. In his second number we find a very interesting account of William Dawson, a local preacher, and a "Yorkshire farmer," familiarly called Billy Dawson. We select the following as illustrative of his power as a preacher.

Mr. Dawson was delivering a discourse which was peculiarly suited to his genius, and which will be long remembered in many towns and villages in England, because of the effect it almost always produced. The sermon was generally known to be one of his favorite discourses—and such he preached many times over—and was called by his admirers, "Death on the Pale Horse." As the reader will readily suppose, it was founded upon Revelation 6: 7, 8. I have heard the sermon more than once, and know not that I ever heard one that was throughout of so startling a character. In bold and striking imagery; in powerful, thrilling, irresistible appeal, it scarcely could have a parallel. When Mr. Dawson had been happy in its delivery, I have seen the congregation listen with such absorbing interest that it seemed as though their very breathing was suspended, and in the pauses of the preacher a long and deep inspiration was resorted to as a relief.

This discourse Mr. Dawson was delivering at the village in question, and was indulging in that peculiarly vivid imagery which was the basis of his popularity—"'Come and see!' the sinner is in the broad road to ruin—every step takes him nearer to hell and farther from heaven. Onward, onward he is going—death and hell are after him—quickly, untiringly they pursue him—with swift but noiseless hoof the pale horse and his paler rider are tracking the godless wretch. See! see! they are getting nearer to him—they are overtaking him!" At this moment so perfect was the stillness of the congregation, that the ticking of the clock could be distinctly heard in every part of the chapel, and upon this with a facility peculiarly his own, he promptly seized, and without any seeming interruption, leaning over the pulpit in the attitude of attention, he fixed his eyes upon those who sat immediately beneath, and in an almost supernatural whisper continued, "Hark! Hark! here they come!—that's their untiring footstep—hark—hark!" and then, imitating for a moment the beating of the pendulum, he exclaimed in the highest pitch of his voice,—"Save the sinner—save him. See, the bony arm is raised—the dart is poised! O my God, save him—save him; for if death strikes him he falls into hell, as he falls he shrieks, 'Lost! lost! lost! Time lost! Sabbaths lost! means lost! heaven lost! all lost! LOST! LOST!'" The effect was so overpowering that two of the congregation fainted, and it required all the preacher's tact and self-command to ride through the storm which his own brilliant fancy and vivid imagination had roused.

Perhaps somewhat apocryphal, yet generally accounted as true, is an anecdote of his preaching at Pudsey, a village inhabited by woolen-cloth weavers, some five or six miles from Leeds. As the story prevails, Mr. Dawson was preaching from the history of David slaying Goliath, and was indulging freely in the pictorial representation of which he was so perfect a master. Personating David, he had struck down the boasting Philistine, and stepping back in the pulpit he cast his eyes downward and commenced a train of irony, which had the twofold effect of piercing every one that exalted himself against the Lord, and of adding force to the graphic picture he had already given of that strange conflict. So powerfully did the speaker depict the conqueror's emotion, and so rapidly did he heap taunt upon taunt on his prostrate foe, that the congregation seemed to forget the actual state of things in the ideal, and waited in breathless suspense for the catastrophe. Some in the gallery, in the intensity of the excitement, literally leaned forward, as though they expected to see upon the floor of the pulpit the giant's form with the stripling's foot upon his breast; and one person, carried away by his feelings, and forgetting in his excitement the sanctity of the place, exclaimed in the broad dialect of the country, "Off with his head, Billy!"

Be not afraid of diminishing your own happiness by seeking that of others. He who labors wholly for the benefit of others, and, as it were, forgets himself, is far happier than the man who makes himself the sole object of all his affections and exertions.

AN ENEMY SOFTENED.

"A man of my acquaintance," says Dr. Dwight, "who was of a vehement rigid temper, had, many years since, a dispute with a friend of his, a professor of religion, and had been injured by him. With strong feelings of resentment, he made him a visit, for the avowed purpose of quarreling with him. He accordingly stated the nature and extent of the injury; and was preparing, as he afterwards confessed, to load him with a train of severe reproaches, when his friend cut him short by acknowledging, with the utmost readiness and frankness, the injustice of which he had been guilty; expressing his own regret for the wrong he had done, requesting his forgiveness, and proffering him ample compensation. He was compelled himself to say that he was satisfied, and withdrew full of mortification that he had been precluded from venting his indignation and wounding his friend with keen and violent reproaches for his conduct. "As he was walking homeward, he said to himself to this effect: 'There must be something more in religion than I have hitherto suspected. Were any man to address me in the tone of haughtiness and provocation with which I accosted my friend this morning, it would be impossible for me to preserve the equanimity of which I have been a witness; and especially with so much frankness, humility, and meekness, to acknowledge the wrong which I had done; so readily ask forgiveness of the man whom I had injured; and so cheerfully promise a satisfactory recompense. I should have met his anger with at least equal resentment, paid him reproach, and inflicted wound for wound. There is something in this man's disposition which is not in mine. There is something in the religion which he professes, and which I am forced to believe he feels; something which makes him so superior, so much better, so much more amiable, than I can pretend to be. The subject strikes me in a manner to which I have hitherto been a stranger. It is high time to examine it more thoroughly, with more candor, and with greater solicitude, also, than I have done hitherto.'

"From this incident a train of thoughts and emotions commenced in the mind of this man, which terminated in his profession of the Christian religion, his relinquishment of the business he was engaged in, and his consecration of himself to the ministry of the gospel."

LUTHER'S IDEAS OF PROPRIETY.

"Luther was very sensitive to all the decencies and proprieties of public worship, and nothing grated more harshly on his nerves, than inattention and whispering during the devotional services, especially during the singing. In the earlier period of his ministry at Wittemberg, some of the leading men of the congregation indulged an evil habit, which is not yet entirely obsolete, even among the clergymen of the present day, viz: "that of taking the time of singing to do up their whispering and moving about."

"This vexed him to the soul, and he often reproved them for it. One Sunday the nuisance was so intolerable during singing that he could bear it no longer, and said to them—"Christians! with God-fearing hearts, come to church to thank God and pray to him, and not to whisper and mutter. If any wish to whisper and mutter, and fluster, and grunt, it is better that they go out into the fields with the cattle and swine, where they will find fitting answer, and leave the church of God undisturbed."

"Notwithstanding this reproof, such is the force of evil habit, the next Sunday the offence was repeated; whereupon Luther walked out of the church with great indignation in his face.—Dr. Pommer then gave the people a strong exhortation on the impropriety of their conduct, which had a good effect." THE DUTY OF CHRISTIANS TO VOTE.

The supineness of men in regard to this duty is very surprising. A Christian who will not vote is, so far forth, a traitor to his country. If men will not carry Christianity into their politics, how can they expect political affairs to go right? Scarce a question of great importance to the interests of our country can come up, but what would be settled aright, if all the Christians and Christian ministers in our country would invariably vote. We fear the consciences of many need enlightening and quickening on this subject. But if a man's conscience will suffer him to neglect voting without chastisement, it will be a loose conscience in other things besides that. There is no safety for our country but in the prevalence of religion. There is no safety for us but in the prevalence of religious principle in politics. Without this, our affairs will be guided by party zeal and passion, by ambition, selfishness and wickedness, instead of patriotism and wisdom. Unless God causes the power of religon to prevail, our government will become corrupt, an instrument in the corruption of the people. Unless the power of religion prevail, we shall have wars, both civil and external. It is becoming more and more evident that a republic like ours cannot stand but by the power of God's providence and grace. It is becoming more and more evident that we are dependent for our life upon God's mercy in revivals of religion. Nothing can save us but the influence of his Spirit, and the blessedness of a wide-spread religious education. We are thrown upon his mercy.

Men of God must pray more for their country. But if it be a duty to pray, it is also a duty to vote. What consistency is there between asking of God the gift of good men for our rulers, and then leaving to bad men the whole work of electing them? Or what consistency between praying that we may have good rulers, and then voting for a bad man, merely because one's own party have put him up? Or what consistency between praying for good men and voting for none? We fear that Christian ministers do not set, as they ought, the example of Christian faithfulness in this duty of voting. Thousands vote in our country who ought not, and thousands do not vote who ought. Between them both our dearest interests may be sacrificed. [Evan.

THE YOUTHFUL MARTYR.

William Hunter, aged 19, finding a chapel open, entered, and began to read in the English Bible which lay upon the desk. He was imprisoned; but Bishop Bonner offered to make him a freeman of the city, and to set him up in business, if he would recant. He answered, "I thank you for your offer; but my lord, I cannot find it in my heart to turn from God for the love of the world; for I count all worldly things but loss, in the respect to the love of Christ." His parents came to him, and desired heartily of God that he might continue to the end in that good way which he had begun. As he went to martyrdom, he met his father, who said, "God be with thee, son William!" He replied, "God be with you, good father; and be of good comfort—for I hope we shall meet again!"

At the stake he kneeled down and read the 51st Psalm, till he came to these words, "The sacrifice of God is a broken spirit. A broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise." He refused to recant, when offered the queen's pardon. The sun shone suddenly out of a dark cloud,—the martyr said, "Son of God! shine upon me." He cast his Psalter into his brother's hands, who said, "William, think upon the holy passion of Christ, and be not afraid of death." "Behold," he replied, "I am not afraid." He then raised his hands to heaven and said, "Lord, receive my spirit."

What a striking instance is this of the power of religion, not only in the prospect of suffering but in the very scene itself. Reader, is your religion of this kind? Have you renounced the world for Jesus?

THE LOVE OF FLOWERS.

There is not in the human heart a more beautiful passion than the love of flowers. It is not only beautiful, but it shows that there is something of purity and holiness within the temple where it dwells. The man, woman, or child, who loves flowers—delights to gaze upon their beauties or inhale their sweet perfume—is not all bad. This feeling ought to be cherished and made to expand by ministering to its desires. The denizens of crowded cities, shut up from the green fields and native flowers, find in a few half-dying plants, transferred from the hot-house to their windows, a poor substitute. It is, however, better than none. And the poorest tenement, as well as the mansion of the wealthy, can possess this substitute. A daisy, a primrose, or a delicate geranium, will cherish and keep alive this love in the heart. Most children are fond of flowers. We have seen few that were not, and those were precocious in vice and depravity.

In passing through the market, a few days since, we saw a little girl poorly but neatly clad, before a flower-stand, with her face turned towards the various flowers upon it. We stopped to watch her. After permitting her eyes to wander for a few moments over the whole collection, she fixed them upon a pretty violet. She gazed upon it intently for a little while, then gently stooped down and touched her lips to the modest flower. As she raised up her head and turned to go away an expression of happiness and gratified love lit up her countenance. We loved that flower too for the pleasure it gave a young and innocent child.

A FUTURE STATE.

It is a beautiful conception of the Indians, and one that illustrates the prevading belief in the human mind of an existence hereafter, of happiness or misery, that leads them to fill the graves of their warriors with all their effects, in the firm belief that they are to rove the 'spirit land' beneath the smile or anger of the great Maniton. In many of the tribes it is customary, after the burial, to bring forth the steed of the deceased, and kill it, standing over the grave, that it may be ready for him to mount at the last day. An incident of this kind toek place in Alexandria, Louisiana, a few days since, where, says the Democrat of that place, "all the worldly effects of the departed savage, including his rifle, shot-pouch and skins—even a mare and colt belonging to him—were deposited with his remains in the tomb, to be carried with him, according to the romantic faith of his ancestors, to the sunny hunting-grounds and floral valleys prepared beyond the grave by the 'Great Spirit' for the reception of the good and virtuous, or the bleak and barren deserts and icy hills, prepared for the punishment of the depraved and vicious."

BOOKS.

It is recorded of Plato, that notwithstanding he had a very small paternal inheritance, he bought three books at a price equal to $1,200 of our money. Before the invention of printing, manuscripts in general bore such excessive prices, that few besides the opulent could acquire a library. St Jerome almost ruined himself in order to purchase the works of Origen. Benedict Bishop, founder of an English monastery, made no fewer than five journeys to Rome to purchase books; for one of these, a volume of cosmography, King Alfred gave him an estate of as much land as eight ploughs labor. Muratoria relates that an abbot earnestly besought the Pope, in a letter of 825, to lend him a copy of Cicero on Oratory, and Quintillian's Institutes; 'for,' says he, 'a complete copy is not to be found in France.' The Countess of Anjou paid for a copy of Homilies two hundred sheep, five quarters of wheat, and the same quantity of rye and millet. Even so late as 1471, when Louis XI. of France borrowed the works of Rhasis, an Arabian physician, from the faculty of medicine at Paris, he not only deposited a considerable quantity of plate as a pledge, but was obliged to procure a nobleman to join with him as surety in a deed, binding himself under a great forfeiture to restore it.

CHRISTIAN UNION.

In the course of the present summer, the world's metropolis (London) is to be the scene of deliberations dimly squinting towards a union of all "evangelical Christians." Tickled, as it would seem, with the mere sound of words, and doomed, as we verily believe, to find the whole affair a utopian project, great numbers are already on their passage from this country to join the great convocation. To us the matter has always appeared so vague and ill-defined, that we have not been able to see what good is to result. Our powers are not sufficiently creative to work up shadows into substantial and tangible forms. One half of the world, however—at least one half, and that not the most illiterate—are ready to start at full gallop after any airy phantom that floats in the dreaming atmosphere in which they always move.

A certain Mr. Merle D'Aubigne, who succeeded in getting up a History of the Reformation in a style somewhat entertaining, especially to young people, acquired thereby such a marvelous celebrity, that he is looked upon by the world as knowing better what scheme is necessary to complete the overthrow of Popery than "seven men that can render a reason." He proposes—(we believe he is the originator of the scheme,)—a great Convention of all Evangelical Christians, to be held in London, the object of which shall be to hold up a scarecrow to the Church of Rome, by giving proof that there is among Protestants more real union than Papists are willing to allow. Mr. James, of Birmingham, and some others, fall in with the project at once, the preliminaries are arranged, and now to the great focal point are streaming the "evangelical."

We dislike the use of the term humbug, or any other that looks uncourteous or undignified; but what term can we employ so expressive of our real views of the scheme? We declare our firm conviction, that future historians will record it—if worthy of being recorded at all—as one of the religious humbugs of the nineteenth century.

The scheme does not, if we understand it, propose any discussion of points concerning which the evangelical now differ. These differences are to remain undisturbed—untouched. If the whole of those assembled unite in the belief and practice of an error, that error is to remain not only undisturbed, but is to go forth to the world again under new auspices, having received the sanction of that very august body termed the Evangelical Alliance. Its withering influence upon the church and the world is still to be perpetuated, because "evangelical Christians" have not chosen to expose it to that severe discussion which might impair its credit. What then is gained? Will not the world, after the session of the Alliance, be just where it was before? Will not Christians be just where they were? Will any thing have been done towards rendering them more united?

And who are "evangelical Christians?" Will any dare to style themselves such, except those who can receive the creed already prepared for them by the little company who have had it in hand to concoct all preliminary measures? To all intents and purposes, that Provisional Committee have framed a creed, which is to be the basis of the proposed union. The Procrustean bedstead is already set up, and every one is to be chopped or stretched until he answers the measure; or rather, every one is to be rejected who does not already answer the measure. To discuss the question, who are evangelical Christians, does not enter into the design of the meeting at all, if we understand it. Yet this is the very question which of all others needs to be discussed. If the door were thrown open for full and free discussion, we might hope for some good. But if the very thing which is the cause of disunion is to be kept out of sight, and exposed to no danger of attack, how farcical to hope for any better state of things.

Besides, it seems that those who go there, appear not as the representatives of churches, or ecclesiastical bodies; they appear simply as individuals. Of course they represent nobody. What then do they go for? What will their proceedings tell, after they are all finished? Will they tell that the Christian world has really made any advance towards union? Will they, however harmoniously conducted, be an index of the harmony of the churches left at home? If not, what will they be worth in respect to the great object pretended to be aimed at? Just nothing at all.

After turning the matter over and over, and viewing it in every light in which we are able, we are positively able to make nothing of it. We cannot discover that it has any well-defined tangible object. The object is not to effect a union upon the basis of truth, by a discussion of those points which now separate Christians into different communions; it is not to ascertain what progress has been made towards union by the churches of Christendom, for ecclesiastical bodies are not to be represented; and if neither of these, how the result is to be so very alarming and destructive to Babylon we cannot divine. *

Books for the Army.—We learn that a praiseworthy effort has just been made at New Orleans to supply the volunteers for the Rio Grande with excellent religious reading. Nearly $800 were raised for the purpose by Rev. Mr. Vail, General Agent of the American Tract Society, and the colporteurs of that Society in Louisiana have been busily engaged in supplying company after company with the practical writings of Baxter—once an army chaplain—and other old divines. Some of the chaplains have consented to act as colporteurs for the army, and are supplied with books. The Governor of Louisiana, the Mayor of New Orleans, and pious officers of the army, have interested themselves in this movement, and contributed to promote it. It would be well to imitate it in other parts of the country.

CENTRAL SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST ASSOCIATION.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

The Central Seventh-day Baptist Association convened at Scott, N. Y., on the fourth day of the week, June 10th. There was present a full delegation from the different churches. The Introductory Discourse was preached by Charles M. Lewis, from the text, "The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up;" after which the Association was organized by the appointment of Varnum Hull, Moderator, and J. B. Wells and James Bailey, Secretaries.

Letters were received from all the churches of the Association, 2d Verona excepted, and from three that did not belong to the Association, praying to be admitted, which prayer was granted. These churches were 1st Brookfield, Lincklaen, and Dianna. A letter was also received from several brethren and sisters who have recently embraced the Sabbath at Philadelphia, Lewis Co., N. Y., asking for missionary labor. It appears from the various letters, that a comfortable state of religious feeling pervades the churches generally, and several churches report considerable accessions to their numbers.

The missionary spirit appears to be increasing as new missionary fields are opening. Philadelphia and vicinity, Dianna and vicinity, and Pitcairn and vicinity, are fields designated for missionary labor; and Elds. E. S. Bailey and S. B. Crandall have been appointed to occupy them more or less.

Bro. N. V. Hull was present, and took his seat as a delegate from the Western Association. Eld. Lewis Leonard, agent of the American and Foreign Bible Society, was also present, and an opportunity was given for him to present the objects of his mission, to wit., to solicit the co-operation of Seventh-day Baptists with that society. A select committee, consisting of E. S. Bailey, S. B. Crandall, and N. V. Hull, was appointed to wait on Bro. Leonard, and report to the Association. Two reports were presented—a minority report by N. V. Hull, which may not be uninteresting to your readers, and I therefore give the substance of it:—

1st. Resolved, That we do most heartily concur in and earnestly pray for the objects of that Society, viz., to give the whole Word of God to all who are destitute of that precious gift.

2d. Resolved, That this Association would co-operate with the American and Foreign Bible Society were it not that in our opinion its operations are based upon such principles as tacitly acknowledge the righteousness of the institution of American Slavery, and ministers at least indirectly to its support. This Association believes that American Slavery is only evil; and furthermore, it has on other occasions expressed its uncompromising hostility to that system of inhuman and unjust oppression. Therefore, the Association cannot, in its official capacity, co-operate with that Society.

Resolved, however, That this Association recommend to the several churches comprising it, that they cordially receive Bro. Leonard, hear what he has to say, and after taking the matter into consideration, act as in their opinion duty may require.

This report was adopted, and a copy voted to Bro. Leonard.

Eld. E. S. Bailey was appointed as a delegate to the Western Association.

A lengthy report was made by Bro. James Bailey, agent of the Association to the Legislature last winter for the purpose of securing legal protection for Seventh-day Baptists, an abstract of which it was voted to forward to the Recorder for publication. Bro. Bailey was re-appointed agent as before, provided the Constitution is not so amended as to give us equal privileges; and $100 was voted to be raised to defray his expenses.

E. S. Bailey was re-appointed Corresponding Secretary.

A letter was received from T. B. Brown, T. B. Stillman, and S. Carpenter, relative to the Hymn Book, in answer to which the following resolution was passed:—

Resolved, That inasmuch as this subject has been referred to the churches, the Association does not feel competent to take any specific action thereon; yet so far as we know, the proposition is favorably entertained, both by the churches generally and by this body; and although we cannot assume any responsibility in this matter, yet we are willing to say that we have confidence in the ability and integrity of those engaged in the work as originators, and also in the committee of inspection already chosen. We also appoint Jason B. Wells to correspond in behalf of this body.

The following are some of the resolutions which were passed with more or less discussion:—

Whereas, The Seventh-day Baptist General Conference did, a number of years ago, pass a resolution that the denomination should be known and distinguished by the name of Seventh-day Baptists, as more appropriate and definite than the term Sabbatarians; and whereas, some churches and individuals have recently used the term Sabbath Baptists, therefore—

Resolved, That it be recommended to the churches and individuals belonging to this Association to use the term Seventh-day Baptist in all their communications, as being the generally received name of the denomination.

Resolved, That we appoint a committee to secure, by correspondence with members of the Convention now in session at Albany, such an amendment of the State Constitution as will fully protect us in the enjoyment of the Sabbath.

James Bailey and James R. Irish were appointed as the above committee.

Resolved, That we again circulate, among all classes, a petition to be presented to the next Legislature, asking for full protection in the enjoyment of the Sabbath, provided the Constitution is not so amended as to protect us; or if they should thus amend the Constitution, to petition for the alteration of the existing laws to agree with the amended Constitution.

Resolved, That the Corresponding Secretary draft a form of the petition, and have it printed, and also that our brethren use their utmost diligence to secure a large number of petitioners.

Resolved, That we instruct our delegate to the Western Association to use his influence with that body to obtain its co-operation in securing the objects contemplated in the above resolutions.

The above resolutions were spoken to by Eli S. Bailey, James Bailey, Nathan V. Hull, Varnum Hull, Green, and others.

It was voted to hold a semi-annual meeting on the third and fourth days of the week before the first Sabbath in January next, at DeRuyter, to attend to our missionary operations and legal protection.

It was also voted, that the Moderator, the Recording Secretary, and Treasurer, together with three others appointed at each annual session, shall constitute an Executive Board through which the benevolent operations of the churches and individuals may be properly attended to, according to the wishes of those who may make contributions. Henry Crandall, James Bailey, and Clark Rogers, were appointed as the three to make up the Board together with the standing officers.

The afternoon of the third day was devoted to the discussion and adoption of resolutions presented by the Business Committee.

1st. Moved by S. B. Crandall, and seconded by J. B. Wells:—

Resolved, That this Association hail with joy the triumph of the principles of temperance in the recent decision of the license question throughout the State of New York, and we earnestly recommend, as "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," that the friends of this great reform sleep not on their watch-towers, but faithfully sustain and perpetuate the blessing secured.

2d. Moved by N. V. Hull, and seconded by V. Hull:—

Whereas it has pleased God to put it into the hearts of our people to send the blessed Gospel to those who sit in the region and shadow of death, and for this object a Foreign Missions is in progress of establishment, funds being in part collected and Missionaries appointed, therefore—

Resolved, That this Association invoke the blessing of the God of missions upon this our labor of love. and are solemnly pledged to its support.

3d. Moved by C. M. Lewis, and seconded by Wm. Green:—

Resolved, That we appoint those delegates named in the Minutes of last year, to attend any Sabbath, Lord's day, or other Convention, where the Sabbath may be introduced, within our bounds, during the ensuing year.

4th. Moved by E. S. Bailey, and seconded by James Bailey:—

Resolved, That as Christians it is our duty to enter every department of Christian benevolence and labor as best we can to spread the benign influence of the Gospel to all men.

5th. Moved by G. M. Langworthy, and seconded by N. V. Hull:—

Resolved, That we acknowledge with humble gratitude the blessing of God upon our efforts to reinstate his holy Sabbath in the church, and that we unitedly pledge ourselves to continue this work through our Tract and Missionary operations.

The second, third and fifth of the above resolutions were attended with animated and soul-stirring speeches.

After a lengthy session, of uncommon interest and harmony, the Association adjourned to meet with the 3d Church in Brookfield, on the fourth day of the week before the second Sabbath in June, 1847. J. B. W.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

Your correspondent P. S., in the last number of the Recorder, has hit upon a capital idea, viz., to furnish for the press the various objections of living disputants to the claims of the Sabbath of Jehovah. I propose that your correspondents all be invited to follow it up, and send you well-authenticated cases, with their objections, that they may be put upon record, and hereafter seen in full array. I doubt not but such a course will greatly further the cause of truth.

It will be well for you to have names and dates in full, and put them on file in the office of the Recorder, that reference may be had to them whenever required. But as it is not desired to give any unkind publicity to the names of disputants, it may be well to publish no more than initials, and these only for the sake of identifying and authenticating them. If you approve the suggestion, you may begin with the enclosed. Yours in defence of truth,

S. D.

SABBATH DISPUTANTS—NO. 1.

1st of 6th Month, 1846.

On board steamboat Raritan, in company with G. R. W., had a friendly conversation with Eld. B., Pastor of the Baptist Church in C——, N. J. Bro. B. professed to be a Bible Christian, and acknowledged the importance of being able to prove all things by that divine standard. When asked for authority for observing the first day of the week, and calling it "the Sabbath," he said: "At the exodus of Israel from Egypt, when God made known to them his Sabbath, he put it one day earlier than the primitive institution, to prevent the worshipers of Jehovah from being confounded with the pagan worshipers of the Sun, whose idolatrous rites were performed on that day; but that at the resurrection of Christ, it was put one day later, so that now the Lord's day, the first day of the week, is the true original Sabbath." When asked for proof, he replied that he had read this in several works written by eminent New England Divines. I replied, that I had read it in President Malcom's Bible Dictionary; but that to quote them as authority for a religious obligation, appeared to me like teaching the doctrines of men for the commandments of God. He answered, that he was not prepared to go into the proof now, but thought it could be sustained by the Bible. I wished him to make a BROAD MARK there, and at his leisure furnish me with the Bible evidence. This is yet to come. S. D.

Express to the River Jordan.—Considerable was said, a few years ago, in relation to the circumstance that Queen Victoria's first child was "baptized" with water brought expressly for that purpose from the river Jordan. About that time it was proposed, whether in jest or in earnest we will not say, to establish an express between London and the Jordan for the purpose of supplying the waters of that sacred stream to those who might wish them for religious purposes. A circumstance has recently occurred, which shows that an express from New York to the Jordan, or an agency of the above-mentioned express, might not be unprofitable. It is stated that the first child which was "baptized" in the new Trinity Church, was the infant daughter of a celebrated savan, and that the water used for the celebration of the rite was brought from the river Jordan, a fact which, being generally known to those of the congregation who witnessed the ceremony, excited considerable interest. The water was brought from the river in a bottle in 1830, by Doctor James E. Dekay, who was on board the corvette United States, carried out to Constantinople by the late Henry Eckford, and sold there to the Sultan. Doctor Dekay, after the transfer of the vessel, passed some months in visiting the more remarkable places of the East, and among other rarities which he collected there, he brought some of this water, which having been preserved for so many years as a curiosity, by the gentleman to whom the Doctor presented it, was finally used for this ceremony for his child.

Confessions of a Presbyterian.—A New-York correspondent of the Evangelical Observer, published at Detroit, Mich., bewails the sad falling off from the Presbyterian Church, particularly the New School. At the East, he says, very many have deserted the hearth-stones of their fathers, and gone over to other denominations. Some, to find a comfortable resting place, have turned Dutch Reformed; others have been metamorphozed into Episcopalians; "while others still, veering their theological compass to the East, are conscientiously persuaded that there is more liberality among Congregationalists than Presbyterians, and so they step across the line. Were it proper here to give a list of these delinquents, and show the D. D.'s, Rev.'s, and Elders, whose sons they are, to say nothing of private members of the Church, it would make more of our venerable fathers besides Dr. Cleland, take off their spectacles and wipe their eyes. We are fast becoming a bye-word among other denominations because of these disgraceful desertions, and they assure us, that 'there must be something rotten in Denmark,' or these things would not be so." The principal reason of these numerous desertions, according to the writer from whom this extract is taken, is a want of something that is positive, to distinguish the New School Presbyterian denomination from all others. This strikes us as a very candid confession, and one which ought to be followed by visible changes. There are many persons who cannot see the proper stopping place between congregationalism and episcopacy; and if any denomination sees fit to set up a half-way house on the road, they should expect the departures to equal the arrivals.

Education in Mississippi.—A speech of Mr. Allen, member of the Mississippi Legislature, develops mournful facts in regard to the condition of education in that State. It seems that there are now in Mississippi eight colleges, educating only four hundred and fifty-four students. In the whole State there are but three hundred and ninety-six common schools, educating only 8,263 scholars out of a population of near 200,000 whites. There are seven counties in the State, with a population of 11,070 persons, in which there are no schools of any kind; and there are in the whole State 50,000 children who have no possible means of education. There are 8,358 free white persons over 21 years of age in the State who can neither read nor write.

Cost of Religion in Boston.—It is stated that there are ninety-nine places of religious worship in the city of Boston, the cost of which was $3,246,500. The annual expense of maintaining these churches is set down at $170,826; and the number of persons whom they can accommodate is estimated at 84,174. There are also eighty Sunday Schools, connected with which are 1,964 teachers, and 17,000 scholars.

Casuistry Extraordinary.—It is a noble science that of deciding cases of conscience, and determining the lawfulness or unlawfulness of what a man may do. But when this science is perverted by existing customs or opinions, it becomes proportionally contemptible. Read the following as an illustration:—

"Dr. Brisbane, (formerly a slaveholding clergyman in Charleston, S. C.,) says that when he was in South Carolina, one of his Baptist brethren underwent a church-trial for a very serious offence. This Baptist brother had been the means of separating a slave husband and wife, for ever. He had been importuned not to do it—to sell them both to one master, and not wring their hearts with the agony of separation; but he said, 'he would see them both in hell first!' He was brought up before the church, and tried—for what, think ye? For the inhumanity of sundering man and wife? No; but for using profane language! His spiritual advisers and co-workers took no thought of the crime of parting what God had joined together, but they were horrified at the profane expression used by their brother!"

The New Volume.—With the present number commences the third volume of the Sabbath Recorder. We enter upon it in an entire new dress, with a form somewhat enlarged, and under auspices highly encouraging. When it was first proposed to issue our denominational paper from the city of New York, there were many persons who regarded the experiment as exceedingly hazardous. A few were found, however, who deemed it sufficiently important and feasible to justify them in assuming the responsibility. The experience of two years has deepened their conviction of the importance of the undertaking, and increased their confidence in its final success. Their aim has been to furnish our widely-scattered churches with a medium of communication with each other, and to maintain in the metropolis of our country a paper which should speak out boldly in favor of the true Sabbath. In the pursuit of this object, they have seen gratifying evidence that their labors are approved of their brethren and blessed of God. Hence they are determined to go forward in the work, and hope to enjoy a still greater measure of confidence and favor.

Historical Articles.—It is known to most of our readers, that Eld. David Benedict is preparing for the press a complete history of the Baptist Denomination throughout the world. Some months ago we promised, at his solicitation, to furnish a concise history of the Seventh-day Baptists to accompany that work. But a combination of unforseen circumstances has thus far rendered it impossible for us to find time for the necessary researches and labor of preparation. Recently, however, Mr. Benedict has suggested, that his purpose will be equally well answered by the appearance of the history first in a series of articles for the Recorder. Accepting this suggestion, we hope to commence the articles before many weeks, and continue them at regular intervals until completed.

Good Paymasters.—Some persons object to paying for a newspaper in advance, and ask, "Is not he a good paymaster whose money is ready when the work is done?" This question is sufficiently answered by saying, that a publisher's work is done when each number of his paper is completed, and accordingly he pays his bills at the end of each week. Of course if he waits until the end of the year for his pay, he will be under the necessity of advancing money from his own pocket to the amount of some two or three thousand dollars. Now which is the easiest, for each subscriber to advance two dollars, or for a publisher to advance two thousand?

Encouraging.—It will doubtless be gratifying to the friends of missions, to be informed that I have just received a letter from Bro. Abel D. Bond, of Milton, Rock County, Wiskonsan, stating that a society has recently been formed there, called the "Rock County Seventh-day Baptist Foreign Missionary Society, the object of which shall be to aid the Missionary Association in establishing and sustaining Foreign Missions." The sum of fifty dollars has been subscribed for the object, one-half of which may be expected in the treasury soon.

Irish Estimate of an English Archbishop.—The following paragraph, which appeared in several of the Irish papers, will show in what estimation some of the good people of Dublin hold the Archbishop of the English Church who is stationed there:—

"On Sunday last the cathedral of St. Patrick was the scene of by no means an edifying exhibition. Archbishop Whateley had been advertised to preach for the benefit of some charitable institution, and a large congregation was present, chiefly composed, we are informed, of the partisans of Mr. Tresham Gregg, who is now engaged in a contention with Dr. Whateley. On his grace entering the pulpit, a large number of those persons, we are informed, rose, and putting on their hats, shouted, 'No Puseyism, no English Bishop,' and continued their cries until the Archbishop had to retire. A number of them left the church; but, owing to the interruption, the charitable object of the intended sermon was defeated, and no collection was made. May we ask, where were the police?"

☞ We wonder what interpretation will be placed upon the casualty described below, by those persons who claim to see so much significance in all the "Sabbath Accidents" which occur on Sunday. We copy it from the Fredonia Censor, and commend it to the attention of Sabbath-accident wiseacres.

Accident at Villenova.—We learn from a correspondent that during a baptismal ceremony at that place on Sunday, 7th inst., a large number had collected on the bridge near by to witness it, which caused the bridge to give way, precipitating them some twelve feet into the water—thus causing rather a promiscuous immersion, unaccompanied by ceremony. There were twelve persons precipitated into the water, most of whom were more or less injured. Among the sufferers were Mrs. Nathaniel Smith, Mr. Doane, an old lady who received a deep cut on the head, Mrs. Doolittle, Mrs. Waters, Mrs. Wilson, Mrs. Wright, Miss Tanner, and a daughter of J. M. Tiffany. They are all expected to recover.

Eld. A. A. F. Randrlph requests his correspondents to address him for the future at Cussewago, Crawford Co. Pa.

The Secretary of the Treasury asks for power to issue about twelve millions of Treasury Notes, or to contract a loan for that amount.

General Intelligence.

FOREIGN.

Five Days Later from Europe.

The steamship Caledonia reached Boston on Thursday afternoon last, in 14 days from Liverpool. Her news is not specially important. The following summary comprises all that is really of interest to the general reader.

A letter dated St. Petersburg, Russia, May 22, says, I regret to say that the Cholera appears to be advancing with rapid strides towards this city, from whence, no doubt, it will in time make its way to Western Europe.

There has been another attempt at a revolution in Portugal, and the insurgents were quite strong in point of numbers.

The French papers insist that the English experimental squadron which recently left the Downs, has sealed orders to proceed to Mexico. The English papers say it may be so.

The Cholera has committed great ravages in Persia, and has made its appearance in the south-eastern provinces of Russia.

The news from India represents the Sikhs as dissatisfied, and as ready to enter into new conflicts with the British.

The European Times states that a rumor prevailed in London that the United States have asked the intervention of Great Britain in her troubles with Mexico. The Times scouts the idea, as perfectly absurd.

Austria, Prussia and Russia are apprehensive of another outbreak in Cracow, to be set on foot by the Polish emigrants in France, England and Belgium. The three powers have taken measures of precaution. At Warsaw several arrests have been made. Austria has made use of the assistance of the peasantry, by liberally remunerating them for their recent exertions.

The Dublin correspondent of the Morning Chronicle of Thursday last says:—"The use of Indian meal has now become quite general throughout the country, and the people prefer it to the potato, the enormous price of which for some months past, had placed it beyond the reach of the laboring classes. One good effect of this change in the food of the humbler classes is a reduction in the price of potatos, both for seed and for immediate consumption."

ESCAPE OF PRINCE LOUIS BONAPARTE.—A letter from Paris, dated May, 29, says: "The principal, and, indeed, the exclusive topic of conversation at this moment is the escape of Prince Louis Napoleon from the Chateau of Ham, where he had been confined five years nine months and twenty days, under a sentence of imprisonment for life for his absurd attempt at a revolution. On Monday morning last a number of workmen were employed in making some reparations near his apartment. The Prince contrived to get possession of the dress of one of the men. He immediately put it on, stuck false mustaches on his lips, a cap on his head, and sauntered deliberately out of the fortress, without being recognized by any of the keepers or soldiers. The General commanding the prison called early in the morning, pursuant to custom, to see the Prince. His medical attendant, a prisoner like himself, said that he was very ill and could not be seen. At a later hour the General again called, and received the same answer, but as he saw a figure lying in the Prince's bed, with a pocket-handkerchief round his head for a nightcap (the French fashion,) he conceivno suspicion. At six o'clock, however, he paid a third visit, and this time insisted on speaking to the Prince. 'Enter!' said the Doctor, throwing open the door. 'Enter—the Prince has gone off, and is by this time far away!' The mortification of the poor General may be easily imagined. A strict search was set on foot, but without success. The Prince succeeded in gaining the coast, and set sail for England, where he arrived on Tuesday morning. He would reach London the same evening, where, no doubt, he will remain, for a long time to come, in peace and quietness."

THE CHOLERA.—We have already stated that the cholera had made it appearance in some of the provinces of Persia, carrying death into the principal towns. It has spread from Bokhara to Herat and Meshio, and has now taken the direction from the Caspian Sea to Teheran and Ispahan. Letters from Odessa state that it had crossed the Russian territory and appeared suddenly at Tiflis, taking a northerly direction between the Caspian and the Black Seas. On the other side the cholera broke out unexpectedly at Orenbourg, in the mines of the Ural mountains; it crossed the Volga, and set its foot in Europe, at Casan, only 2,000 kilometers from St. Petersburgh. If the accounts we have received are exact, it has taken a most irregular direction. It has advanced from West to North, and does not seem to have followed the banks of the river, as in 1828 and 1832. The cholera which devastated France in 1831 and 1832, had been raging in Persia for seven years, 1823 to 1830. It first appeared in 1823 at Orenbourg, and shed death around that town for five years. It re-appeared at Orenbourg in 1829, and one tenth of the population fell victims. It broke out at St. Petersburgh in July, 1831, and in France in October of the same year.

A GAMESTER'S CLOSE OF LIFE.—The Church of England Quarterly Review points a moral deduced from the life of a notorious gambler known in England as "Riley of Bath," to all persons who are or may be induced to engage in this unlawful and dishonorable profession. Riley was both accomplished and gifted, and he for a time lived a life of the most gorgeous luxury and extravagance. He was the companion of sovereigns; he squandered money with a profusion amounting to incessantry, and won it by a good fortune that seemed connected with the supernatural. He ran a brief course of dazzling splendor; he lived in palaces, continued to play, became unlucky, and found fortune, wealth and friends desert him. At length the once possessor of millions was seen wandering through the streets of London, naked, famished, and penniless; and finally, he who had feasted emperors and fared sumptuously every day, died of absolute starvation in one of the miserable alleys of the great metropolis.

DOMESTIC.

Doings in Congress last Week.

In the SENATE, Mr. Allen, Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, resigned that post, which was filled by the appointment of Mr. McDuffie. The Oregon Treaty was ratified by a vote of nearly three to one. As the treaty had been signed by Mr. Pakenham on behalf of Great Britain, its ratification by the Senate is final, and puts the matter to rest. A resolution fixing upon the 20th of July as the day for the adjournment of Congress, was discussed, and postponed until this week. A Message was received from the President, communicating an estimate by Secretary Walker, as to the prospects of the Treasury. He thinks there will be a deficiency of revenue for the next fiscal year of fifteen million dollars, to meet which he recommends a resort to loans, or the issue of treasury notes. The Secretary also recommends an increase of duty on tea, coffee, and some other articles, from 20 to 30 per cent.

The HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES passed the Navy and Post Office Appropriation Bills, and spent much time in discussing the Tariff Bill. The Tariff Bill seemed to be regarded as the most favorable for spending time upon, and consequently it was made the occasion of a number of long speeches about matters and things in general.

The War with Mexico.

The following paragraphs tell all the news of any importance, which has been received from the seat of war since our last:—

It is said that Paredes will march over to Matamoros, at the head of a strong army—the largest portion composed of the body of troops called the reserve. The time for his departure with this army is already fixed, but has not been made public. Gen. Brown will occupy the Presidential chair, ad interim.

The suspension of payment continues, and things generally remain in the worst condition.

The Mexican Government had called a meeting for the purpose of procuring resources, which was believed could hardly be obtained, as the Clergy are not able to pay the amount of $90,000 monthly, already demanded by the Government; and, on the other hand, the actual condition of the several states is not such as to expect from them any resources.

Gen. Taylor's son has left New Orleans for Matamoros with his father's Brevet commission of Major General.

The lady of Capt. Page, who was so severely wounded at the battle of Palo Alto, arrived at New Orleans on the 9th, on her way to Point Isabel, to meet her husband.

A letter published in the N.O. Delta from Pensacola, says, that it is reported that the condition of our squadron, in relation to that of the English fleet, which has been increased, is very precarious.

It is stated that the Mexican General had sent General Taylor a message, telling him to withdraw his troops from Matamoros, or he would annihilate them. Gen. Taylor sent him his compliments, saying he should be delighted to see him.

The Galveston Weekly News of the 6th ult. states that the report in regard to the taking of the train of 100 wagons and effects belonging to German emigrants, who were on their way from New Braunsfels to Perdinales, by a party of Indians, is entirely unfounded, letters having been received from Houston stating that the whole party had arrived in safety at Perdinales.

MEDIATION OF ENGLAND TO SETTLE OUR MEXICAN DIFFICULTIES.—A London Herald, received by the last steamer, contained an article stating that the British Government had determined to offer its mediation for the settlement of our difficulties with Mexico, and had actually sent instructions to that effect to Mr. Pakenham. Of this article the Journal of Commerce says:

"Letters from the most respectable sources in England give credit to this article. We know that Mr. Pakenham has been in expectation of instructions to make a proffer of mediation, and that he has given this as a reason for not leaving Washington, even for a few days. We may add here, that all the rumors of English interference by force in our War with Mexico, are groundless. The British Minister has declared to our Government the determination of the British Ministry to this effect."

◆

THE OREGON SETTLEMENT.—The Alexandria Gazette learns from an authentic source that the terms of compromise offered us in the Treaty just ratified at Washington were carried in the British Privy Council by barely one majority—the Premier being in the minority. The Gazette further understands that Mr. McLane has written home that no such compromise would have been offered had the tidings of our War with Mexico previously reached England. The Baltimore Patriot confirms this, and adds that the Duke of Wellington concurred with Peel in opposing the offer of 49°. Lord John Russell, who will be Premier before the end of July, is also hostile to any such compromise; while Mr. Polk says, if the matter had been left to his discretion he would not have occepted the British offer! Truly, the escape of the two great nations from War appears to be owing most palpably to a good Providence—hardly at all to their Executive rulers. Yet we are confident nine-tenths of the People of both Nations rejoice that the difference has been so settled. [N. Y. Tribune.

◆

TROUBLE IN CALIFORNIA.—The New Orleans Delta, of the 9th inst., says that it seems quite possible, by a letter from its Pensacola correspondent, that we may be brought into collision with the English Government, upon another question than that of Oregon. The writer's conjectures upon the probable interference of the British fleet with ours, if we attempt the seizure of California, is more than probable. About one third of the amount of debt due by Mexico to Great Britain, was loaned by private individuals on a mortgage of the whole or part of California, and a full guaranty by their own Government that their rights shall be protected from whatever point they may be assailed. The available force of the British in the Pacific is somewhere about 400 guns.

FIRE IN QUEBEC AND DREADFUL LOSS OF LIFE.—The following account of another fire in this already chastened city is taken from the Montreal Herald of the 15th inst:—

Last night, at ten o'clock, a fire broke out in the Theatre Royal, St. Lewis-street, (formerly the Riding School,) at the close of Mr. Harrison's exhibition of his Chemical Dioramas. From the information we have been able to glean, a Camphene Lamp was overset, from some cause or other, and the stage at once became enveloped in flames. The house had been densely crowded, but some had fortunately left before the accident. A rush was at once made to the staircase leading from the boxes, by those who, in the excitement of the moment, forgot the other passages of egress. The stair-case communicating with the boxes was a steep one, and we are of opinion it had fallen from the weight of those who crowded upon it.

The flames at the time were above and around us—but human aid was of no avail. In five minutes from the time of which we make mention, the mass of human beings who had but a short interval previous been in the enjoyment of a full and active life, were exposed to our view a mass of calcined bones!

Up to this hour forty-six bodies have been recovered from the ruins! Most of them have been recognized:—a greater loss of life than in the two dread conflagrations of last Summer.

Sad wailing pervades the city. Scarcely a street can be traversed in which the closed shutter or the hanging crape do not betoken a sudden bereavement. Fathers, sisters, children, of both sexes, indulge in the deepest lamentation. Woe has fallen upon many, for those who were thus suddenly and awfully summoned into the presence of their Creator.

A letter from Quebec, dated Monday, June 15, says:

"Yesterday was a day of mourning. It reminded me of the cholera times. The plumed hearse was traveling perpetually through the streets. The burial yards were thronged. Sadness dwelt upon the faces of the people; the voice of mirth had fled. It was no ordinary Sunday. In the afternoon the houses of God were mostly forsaken; the clergymen were busied performing the last religious rites.

SUMMARY.

The subject of regulating the hours of labor in manufacturing establishments is before the Legislature of New Hampshire, and has been referred to a select committee of ten.

A fire occurred recently at Roxbury, Mass., in which several houses and barns, and nine horses were burnt.

The Yearly Meeting of the Friends in New England was held at Newport, R. I., last week. The Wilborites held a separate meeting at the same place.

The Banks at Lockport, N. Y., are in trouble. The Canal Bank is broken, and the Exchange Bank and the Bank and Trust Company, it is thought, will go the same way. They dipped too deep into the speculations in breadstuffs.

There are over 3,000 gold and silver mines in Mexico, producing annually over $35,000,000. The amount coined at the Mexican Mint since the conquest, is $443,000,000. The great mine is that of Real del Monte, where the shaft runs 1000 yards deep. Not one fiftieth part of the mines are worked.

William Appleton, Esq. of Boston, has offered to give $25,000 toward founding an Episcopal Theological Seminary in the Diocese, if an equal sum can be raised, for the same purpose, from other sources.

Almost daily are our hearts gladdened by the cheering intelligence that the crops—Wheat, Cotton and Corn—afford unusual promise of an early and extensive harvest.

The Hon. Solomon Reed, late Senator of Massachusetts, died at his residence in Rowe, on the 15th ult, aged 62 years. It is a singular fact that of the six Senators which represented the County of Franklin, in the years 1843, '44, and '45, three have died, viz.: Mr. Griswold, of Buckland, of the Senate of 1843; Mr. Whitaker, of New Salem, of the Senate of 1844, and Mr. Reed, of the Senate of 1845.

Advices from Monte Video to the 7th of April. They state that the black troops had revolted and taken possession of the town. The Government was broken up, the Ministers having resigned. There had been a demand for troops, and quiet was restored in a few days. A temporary Government had been established.

A gentleman in Donaldsville, La. (some Yankee who has strayed from home, we doubt not,) has invented a mechanical contrivance by which accidents from horses running away with carriages may be prevented. It is quite simple, and by pulling a string inside the carriage, it causes the traces and harness to unloose from the carriage or any other vehicle to which it may be applied, and leaves the horse perfectly free to go ahead alone.

The Boston Times learns that Mr. A. H. Everett is engaged in making preparation for his voyage to China. His health is so much improved that he is able to address his friends on convivial occasions.

The N. Y. State Colonization Society have issued a Circular suggesting that the approaching Anniversary of American Independence be celebrated among the friends of Colonization by a public meeting and collection in behalf of that object.

Rumors are mentioned in the Montreal papers that the dreaded cholera has again made its appearance at Quebec—striking this point of the Western continent first, as it did before.

The Montreal Times, of june 16, says that one of the most extraordinary appearances of the Aurora Borealis was visible in the Heavens on Sunday evening, about half-past 10 o'clock. It was a narrow fiery streak, extending East and West, a little South of Ursa Major. It was visible about an hour, and gradually faded away.

The Hibernia sailed from Boston on the 16th, with 84 passengers for Liverpool, and 9 for Halifax. Among the passengers were Rev. Dr. Skinner of New York, and Elihu Burritt, the learned blacksmith.

JAMES GORDON BENNETT's name is in the list of passengers by the Hibernia, accompanied by the statement that he is "bearer of dispatches" to the American Minister at London.

A young man from Morris Co. N. J., named Stilwell, while passing from New York to Brooklyn in one of the Catherine ferry boats, threw himself overboard and was drowned.

The Albany Knickerbocker understands that a motion will soon be made in the Convention to engraft an original section in the Constitution, viz: that no law shall go into effect until the court of last resort shall have pronounced upon its constitutionality.

A boy named Edwin Bray, about 12 years old, in the employ of Dr. Marden at Skowhegan, Me. has been playing the impostor after a strange fashion. He pretended, under the manipulations of the Doctor, to fall into a mesmeric sleep, in which state he made many wonderful revelations. Among other things he accused an innocent boy of stealing, and arranged his plans with so much skill as apparently to make out a strong case. Subsequent investigation, however, proved that the juvenile clairvoyant was himself the thief, and he has since confessed the crime.

The bill to charter the New York and Boston Railroad Company, after having been vetoed by Gov. Toucey, who alledged constitutional objections to the bridge across Connecticut river at Middletown, again passed the Legislature and is now a law. The vote stood in the House 113 to 81.

The distinguished Temperance Lecturer Mr. Hawkins, while lecturing in Montreal on the 31st ult. Was mobbed by the Rummies, who broke up his meeting and came near killing him. Mr. Hawkins was injuring the respectable business of the Rum-dealers in that city.

"THE SARATOGA" is the name of a most beautiful steamboat which has been built for and is now placed on the route between Buffalo and Chicago. Her accommodations are on the most extended scale, and there is a large splendidly furnished state-room set apart exclusively for Editors. We may take a look into it some day.

The Norwich Chenango Telegraph contains an account of the death of a son of Mr. Samuel L. Loomis, of Pharsalia, a boy four or five years of age, caused by whisky, which his father or others had induced him to drink at a sheep-washing. He lived only a few hours.

Capt. Upon, of the brig Deposit, from Para, brought home a Boa Constrictor about 14 feet long, and a couple of Monkeys of a singular species, from Rio Negro, a stream up the Amazon. The Monkeys are entirely white except the head, which is black and covered with a soft fur. They stand about three feet high, and are said to be the first of this species ever imported here.

The Columbus (O.) Journal gives a good report of the crops in that region. The wheat was nearly ready for the sickle, the corn was backward, but a few days would bring it up; and rye and oats looked well.

The Hagerstown (Md.) Pledge says the "rust" is doing much damage among the wheat in that section. The Mediterranean wheat was in advance of the other kinds, and it was believed would not suffer much. The corn wanted sun, and no doubt has got it before this.

A young lady named Martha Whitman, while out on a pic-nic party, on the banks of the Wissahickon, accidentally slipped off a shelving of rocks, and before assistance could be rendered was drowned. The body was recovered.

Dr. Ezra Green, of Dover, N. H., is the oldest graduate of Harvard University now living. He was born in Malden, Mass. June 17, 1746, and was graduated in 1765. He was consequently one hundred years old on the 16th inst.

The Magnetic Telegraph sometimes utters itself in queer terms. For instance, here is a dispatch received from New York by the Washington Union: "Theatre, Quebec, burnt. Fifty lives lost; thirty dead."

The people of Massachusetts annually produce 50 per cent. more property or wealth than any equal population in the United States, according to the most accurate returns. Though not one sixth of New York in extent of territory, Massachusetts has seven hundred miles of railroad in operation.

We have often heard that New Orleans was a terrible city for gambling. So strong indeed seems to be the spirit of the game that it has even affected the poet's muse. The N. O. Delta begins a poetic effusion eulogistic of the valorous Capt. Walker of the Texan Rangers, thus:

"Thou ACE OF TRUMPS in glory's PACK."

It is a curious fact that in the list of thirty-five officers appointed to the new Regiment of Dragoons, not one is taken from the New England States.

Brantz Mayer, in his "Mexico as it is," says that "darkness hangs upon both extremes of Mexican history. The ancient story of that beautiful country is lost in the gloom of tradition; the detail of her colonial history is buried in Spanish archives; her revolutionary history is blotted with blood; her present is uncertain, and her future is impenetrable even to the eye of hope."

The Adjutant General of New York announces that only enough Volunteers to constitute between five and six regiments of the troops called for by "General Orders," dated May 28, 1846, have reported themselves in readiness for enrollment, and calls on those who are desirous of becoming part of the force from this State to prosecute the War with Mexico, to report their names at his office before the end of the present month.

DIED,

In Preston, Chenango Co., N. Y., on the 7th of June, of consumption, JOSEPH TRUMAN, in the 70th year of his age. Mr. Truman was born on Long Island, N. Y., where, at an early age, he experienced religion, and connected himself with a church then under the care of Elder Gillett, composed of Seventh-day Baptist and First-day Baptist members. From thence he removed to Chenango County, N. Y., and was and of the first settlers of the town of Preston, where he resided at his death. He was a Seventh-day Baptist in principle and practice, of sound mind, and good abilities, both natural and acquired. He died in the hopes of a glorious immortality and eternal life.

O tell my companion and children so dear,
To weep not, though Joseph is gone;
The same hand that led me through scenes dark and drear,
Hath kindly conducted me home.

TO SUBSCRIBERS IN RHODE ISLAND.—We are glad to announce that we have secured the services of Sanford P. Stillman for a few days, to collect arrearages and solicit new subscribers for the Recorder in Rhode Island. He will probably call on our friends soon; and we would recommend our agents and patrons to pay their subscriptions to him instead of forwarding them directly to us, as this course would save much unnecessary trouble to all concerned. Mr. Stillman will be provided with blank receipts, which, when filled out by him, will be as good as if issued from this office.

"SAYING THE CATECHISM."

The town of W——, in the old county of Hampshire, and good commonwealth of Massachusetts, exhibited, some forty years ago, several traits of the puritanical character, one of which, more particularly, we would fain, by this article, fix and stereotype upon the memory of the present generation. The scene of our story lies partly upon the beautiful valley of the Connecticut, and partly upon the hills which form the eastern slope of the Green Mountain range, which extends from Canada to Long Island Sound. Few towns in the Bay State are equal to it in scenic effect. The calm, serpentine Connecticut, searching its way to the ocean, Mount Tom, Mount Holyoke, Amherst College, Williston Seminary, Mount Holyoke Female Seminary, and several churches and smiling villages, are distinctly visible from its loftier points of observation. It is far retired from all the cities of our country, and the simple, primitive manners of the people were equally removed from the artificial habits of what is termed more polished life. The inhabitants were united, to a most unusual degree both in politics and religion. At several gubernatorial elections, Caleb Strong had all the votes of the town with but two or three exceptions. In ecclestical polity, the people were almost to a man, Congregationalists; and in theology, they were as unitedly Calvinists. Excepting one family, all observed Saturday evening as a part of holy time, and with great conscientiousness and strictness. The pastor of the church, and the only man in the town who claimed to exercise the functions of the clerical office, was the Rev. Mr. H——. He was the first minister of the place. In his earlier days, his orthodoxy was not regarded as of the highest tone, but repeated revivals of religion, and a deeper personal, experimental acquaintance with divine things, rendered his preaching, during the last half of his protracted ministry, more discriminating and evangelical. His habits were systematic and exact, to a proverb. Every family in the neighborhood could regulate its long kitchen clock by the precise punctuality with which he would arrive to preach an appointed lecture. On the Sabbath, every man who was earlier or later than he at a public worship, doubted the correctness of his own chronometer. It must be wrong, for Mr. H—— was in the pulpit sooner or later than they were in the pews. He was, for many years, the clerical officer of the General Association of ministers in the State. On one occasion, the meeting of that body was held seventy-five miles distant from his place of residence. Five minutes only were to elapse, before the hour for opening the meeting would come. Speculation was rife as to the probability of his being there in season to attend to the duties of his office. One clergyman who knew him better than the rest, remarked, that either the town-clock was wrong, or Mr. H—— would yet be there punctually at the appointed hour. Curiosity became intense; the interest was prodigious; but before the last minute expired, Father H—— drove up, and was in his place in the church.

Our readers have already been advertised of the great strictness with which his people observed the Sabbath. When Mr. H—— was settled among them, he was ordained in a barn. The first meeting-house was built shortly after, and though it exhibited many symptoms of decay, and though old Boreas often treated himself to the music of the clatter of its doors and windows and shingles, it was still standing within our own recollection. It was innocent of paint and bell and steeple, as well as of a sparse occupancy on the Sabbath. Rain or shine, snow or hail, lightning or thunder, the people were all there. The exercises were conducted with the greatest order and decorum. Father H—— carried his habits of system so far, that he used to read, and to request his clerical brethren who occasioally preached for him, to read Watts' Psalms and Hymns right straight through in course, whatever might be their relevancy to the subject of the sermon. He always preached with his accurate watch lying on the pulpit before him, and as he used to pray with his eyes wide open, he was careful to cut his sermons and prayers to the prescribed length, and if the moment for closing either arrived when he was in the middle of a sentence, the remaining part was sure to be despatched in short metre.

Bass viol, violin, clarionet and bugle, those modern refinements in the music of some country congregations, had not yet found their way to W——. The only instrumental accompaniment was the shrill pitchpipe, with which the leader gave the key note of the tune, and in a tone somewhat like the modern steamwhistle, sufficiently loud to be audible over the whole house. Then the rude orchestra poured out its music to such fugue tunes as Majesty, Bridgewater, and Coronation, and in "strains" too, which, if they were not quite so "sweet" as those which "angels use," were, we doubt not, often as acceptable to Gabriel and to God.

The pews of the old church were those large, high, squire pens, which, as the parents sat below and the children in the galleries, would seem to have been constructed for the especial convenience of the boys, who might be disposed to play at meeting. A remedy for this evil, however, was at hand; for if any of the thoughtless urchins made too free a use of their hiding-places, the loud [illegible] and the pointing finger of the stern tythingman instantly reduced them to order, and fixed upon them a mark of disgrace never to be forgotten.

But we have detained our readers too long from "Saying the Catechism." Not that we expect that they can "say" it as well, if at all, as the youth in W—— in those olden times, but we wish to inform them how the heroes of our narrative "said" it, as the phrase then was. The Catechism was divided into three parts. The first part comprehended all between, "What is the chief end of man?" and "the first commandment," The second embraced all "the commandments." together with "what is required" and "what is forbidden" in them all, and "the reaso[illegible]d for observing them." The third [illegible]ll from the question, "Is any man abl[illegible]ctly to keep the commandments of God?" to the end. The Catechism was required, by the public sentiment of the town, to be perfectly committed to memory, and publicly recited in the meeting-house, by all the children and youth between the ages of eight and fifteen. These public recitations were held on three different Sabbaths, every year, with perhaps a fortnight interveneing between them, to allow sufficient time for the children to commit to memory the division assigned.

When the time arrived for commencing the exercise, the excitement was tremendous. As the great battle of Trafalgar was about to commence between the immense fleets of England and France, Lord Nelson displayed at the masthead of his flag-ship, the Victory, the exciting proclamation, streaming in the wind, "England expects every man to do his duty." That proclamation awoke all the national enthusiasm of his officers and men, and strung every nerve for the awful conflict. Scarcely less imperative and exciting was the announcement from the pulpit by Father H——, "Sabbath after next, the first division of the Catechism will be recited here."

There was "no discharge in that war." Public sentiment demanded the most implicit obedience by all concerned. The old Catechisms were looked up, new ones bought, and parents set their children to the work at once and in earnest. Every question and every answer must be most thoroughly committed to memory, verbatim, et literatim, et punctuatim. The time for recitation was at the close of the afternoon service. All the children in the town, dressed in their "Sabbath-day clothes," were arranged, shoulder to shoulder, the boys on the one side and the girls on the other, of the broad aisle, beginning at the "deacons' seat," and extending down that isle and round through the side aisles, as far as was necesary. The parents—"children of a larger growth"—crowded the pews and galleries, tremblingly anxious that their little ones might acquit themselves well. Father H—— occupied the pulpit, and put out the questions to the children in order, and each one, when the question came to him, was expected to wheel out of the line, a la militaire, into the broad aisle, and face the minister, and make his best obediance, and answer the question put to him, without the slightest mistake. "To be told," that is, to be corrected by the minister, was not a thing to be permitted by any child, who expected thereafter to have any reputation in that town for good scholarship. Many were the "knees" which "smote one against another" during that fearful process. In this manner, the three divisions of the Catechism were successively recited, and many are the persons who recollect, and will long recollect, the palpitating heart, the tremulous voice, the quivering frame, with which, for several years, they went through that terrible ordeal.

But the moral influence of that exercise upon the youth of W——, was as salutary as its nervous effects were appalling. It indoctrinated them into the great truths of christianity. They did not, of course, descend into the profound depths of the metaphysics of theology, but they became possessed of the system which was embraced by their fathers. They were not indeed prepared to > "Reason high,

> Of providence, foreknowledge, will and fate;
> Fixed fate, free will, foreknowledge, absolute,"

but their minds were so filled with the outltne of revealed truth; they so well understood the character and government of God, and the method of salvation through a crucified Redeemer,

> "That to the height of this great argument,
> They could assert eternal Providence,
> And justify the ways of God to men."

In closing this article, the writer cannot but record his obligations to his parents, now, he trusts, in heaven, for their fidelity in requiring him, much against his will, to commit to memory the Assembly's Catechism, and to "say" it publicly for six or seven years in succession, in the old meeting-house in W——, amid tremblings aud agitations which he can never cease to remember.

Use of Chestnuts in Italy.—Each family possesses or purchases what they call a patch of forest. The price is estimated according to the average quantity of chestnuts annually produced. The fruit is gathered in October and November, immediately smoke-dried on mats made of cane, with a fire beneath, shelled by being beaten in sacks, ground in a mill to a fine flour, which wet with water, and stirred to a paste, is spread on round hot stones, between dried chestnut leaves, and a cake is produced resembling our crumpet or Scottish scone, and called necci, or netchy, according to our pronunciation. This substantial food costs a third less, and often only half the price of wheat flour, and goes farther in sustaning the hungry peasantry—but too much rain or too little, or the least frost, ruins their harvests. The poorer classes are permitted to glean after a certain day, and all chestnuts that fall on the high road are public property. I once asked an old man, past eighty, with seven in family, if he had gathered enough? "Yes," he said, "sufficient to sustain us till Christmas, after that God will provide;" and such is the general spirit of faith and resignation among these people, whom we find always grateful and contented. The chestnut harvest was so abundant last year, 1844, that the flour sold for one soldo the pound of twelve ounces, which quantity is sufficient to sustain a laboring man a whole day. A Luechese soldo is the fifteenth part of a paul, which latter is about five-pence half-penny of our currency.

A Very Good Story.—Some years ago, when all the world were mad upon lotteries, the cook of a middle-aged gentleman drew from his hands the savings of some years. Her master, curious to know the cause, learned that she had repeatedly dreamed that a certain number was a great prize, and she had bought it. He called her a fool for her pains, and never omitted an occasion to tease her upon the subject. One day, however, the master saw in the newspaper, or at his bookseller's in the country town, that the number was actually the £20,000 prize. Cook is called up, a palaver ensues—had known each other for years, loth to part, &c.; in short, he proposes and is accepted, but insists on marriage being celebrated next morning. Married they were; and, as the carriage took them from the church they enjoyed the following dialogue:

"Well, Molly—two happy events in one day. You have married, I trust, a good husband. You have something else—but first let me ask you where you have locked up your lottery ticket?"

She thought that her master was only bantering her upon the old point, and cried, 'Don't ye say no more about it. I thought how it would be, and that I never should hear the end on't, so I sold it to the baker of our village for a guinea profit; so you need never be angry with me again about that.' [Blackwood.

THE TRUE NOBILITY.

BY PROF. UPHAM.

What constitutes the true Nobility?
Not wealth, nor name, nor outward pomp, nor power;
Fools have them all—and vicious men may be
The idols and pageants of an hour.
But 'tis to have a good and honest heart,
Above all meanness and above all crime,
And act the right and honorable part
In every circumstance of place and time.
He who is thus, from God his patent takes—
His Maker formed him the true nobleman;
Whate'er is low and vicious, he forsakes,
And acts on rectitude's unchanging plan.
Things change around him, changes touch not him;
The star that guides his path fails not, nor waxes dim.

"CORN FIXINS."

Elihu Burritt has been collecting receipts for cooking corn meal, which he intends to carry to England for the instruction of the good housewives there. We presume there are some Yankee women who are not as well versed as they would like to be in the art of preparing 'Corn Fixins', and for their satisfaction we copy some of the receipts sent to friend Burritt:—

To make Batter Cakes.—Prepare a thick batter by wetting sifted meal with cold water, and then stirring it into that which is boiling; salt, and when it is lukewarm, add yeast; when risen, bake in thin cakes over the fire. Another—Take sour milk, correct its acidity with saleratus, add salt and meal to make a thick batter, and cook it as before. Another—Stir a quart of boiling water into the same quantity of meal, add a little salt and two eggs well beaten; cook as before.

Hasty Pudding.—Prepare a batter, as in No. 1, and finish by stirring in meal till it is thick enough for the table. Add if you choose sour apple chopped; cook twenty or thirty minutes. Eaten with milk, butter, molasses or sugar.

Fried Hasty Pudding.—Cut cold pudding into smooth slices and fry brown in a little butter or pork fat.

Hasty Pudding Bread.—Prepare hasty pudding as before; when lukewarm add yeast, and after rising, bake in a deep dish in a hot oven.

Another kind of Bread.—Into two quarts of meal stir one quart and one half pint of boiling water with salt; when lukewarm, add yeast, and if you choose, stewed pumpkin; bake in a deep dish in a hot oven two hours.

Journey Cakes.—Into one quart of meal, stir one pint of boiling water with salt; spread on a board an inch thick, and bake before the fire, or otherwise on an iron over the fire.

Ginger Cakes.—One quart of sour milk with saleratus; one quart of meal; one pint of flour; one gill of molasses; add salt and ginger to your taste.

Corn and Flour Bread.—Prepare as in No. 1, but thin; when lukewarm add yeast, and as much flour as there is corn meal, bake in deep dishes in an oven when risen.

Yankee Brown Bread.—To two quarts of corn meal, pour one quart of boiling water; stir yeast into two quarts of rye meal, and knead together with two quarts of lukewarm water. Add, if you choose, one gill of molasses.

Baked Pudding.—To two quarts of milk, add one quart of meal, a little salt, and a cup full of sugar. Prepare by heating the milk over the fire, stirring it occasionally to prevent its burning; when it scarcely boils, remove it, put in the salt and sugar, and scatter in the meal, stirring rapidly to prevent its collecting into lumps; put in the nutmeg and turn into a deep pan. Bake immediately or otherwise as may be convenient, in a hot oven, three hours. When it has baked an hour or more, pour over the pudding one gill or one-half pint of milk; this will soften the crust and form a delicious whey.

An inferior pudding may be made by substituting skimmed milk and molasses, with allspice or ginger for seasoning. This is the common Yankee baked pudding. Variations can be made by adding chopped suet, apples, peaches, berries or raisins.

Boiled Pudding.—Into two quarts of meal, stir three pints of boiling water, some salt and a gill of molasses, spice or not as you choose. Tie up in a strong cloth or pudding boiler, put into boiling water, and cook over a steady fire three hours.

Dumplings.—Into one quart of meal, stir one pint of boiling water with salt. Wet the hands in cold water, and make them into smooth balls, two or three inches in diameter. Immerse in boiling water and cook over a steady fire 20 or 30 minutes. If you choose, put a few berries, a peach or part of an apple, in the centre of each dumpling. Another—To one pint of sour milk with saleratus, add one quart of meal, and a large spoonful of flour, roll out with flour and put in apple and cook as before.

Corn Dodgers.—To one quart of meal, pour boiling water till thoroughly wet; add two table-spoons of flour, a tea-spoon of salt; mix it well; spread it smooth in a spider or pan; first heat and oil the pan well, then set it on the coals till you can run a knife under and turn it round, then set it up before the fire to roast.

Corn Bread.—To one quart of sifted meal, add one tea-cup of cream, 3 eggs, one tea-spoonful of saleratus dissolved in water, butter-milk to make it quite soft; stir it well; bake it in a bake-kettle or oven.

Hoe Cake.—3 table-spoons of sugar; three of cream; three eggs; one tea-cup of butter-milk; stir in the meal till it is a little thicker than batter; add salt and spice to your liking.

Wheat and Indian.—The Learned Blacksmith's paper is full of receipts for cooking Indian, but among the hints for making bread, there is a valuable one which we miss. Some people are fond of a mixed bread, in which the Indian is one ingredient. But Indian meal requires more cooking than wheat flour. Therefore if you would make good wheat and Indian bread, first cook your Indian meal as mush; when it is cold, knead in the flour and yeast, and with only the baking which is due to the wheat, you will have an excellent bread. We speak from long experience. [Chronotype.

Industry, Happiness, and Health.—We were forcibly struck, a few days since, with a remark made by an old and affluent citizen. Speaking of his habits, and of his constant attention to something which occupied his mind, he said that he always felt better, physically and mentally, when employed in some useful pursuit, because, in the first place, he knew he was discharging his duty as a member of society and a man; and, in the second, he was prevented from indulging in painful thoughts. This is sound philosophy. The idler, whether rich or poor—young or old, is far more apt to be annoyed by disagreeable reflections—to feel moody and discontented—to be hurried on into temptation and crime, than the individual who, no matter what his condition in a pecuniary point of view, seeks to keep both mind and body properly employed, and thus to shut out feverish desires and nervous phantasmagoria, which idleness is certain to call into existence. Every individual has a part to play in the drama of life; and that man is happiest, be he rich or poor, who, with a proper consciousness of right and wrong, virtue and vice, keeps his body in a wholesome state of exercise—always careful to be prompted in his movements by honor, honesty, and conscientiousness.

Pretty Hands.—Delicate, beautiful hands! Dear Miss, how do you contrive to make your hands so pretty? And set on such rings, too, as if to draw attention that way. Let us feel of them. O dear, how soft and tender? Do you bake, Miss? No. Do you make beds? No. Do you wash floors, and scrub the pots and kettles? No. So we thought. Look at your mother's hands. Ain't you ashamed to let that old lady kill herself outright, while you do nothing from daylight to dark, but keep the dust from your face, and the flies from your hands. What are you fit for? Will a man of common sense marry you for your delicate hands? A person who is a real man would prefer to see them blacked occasionally by coming in contact with pot-hooks and trammels, and calloused by a day or two's hard rub at the washing board. Pretty fingers indeed!—what are they good for, but to move over a piano, or to stick through gold rings? Like many of the vain things of earth, they are kept for show, and nothing more. For our part, we would rather see them worn out in actual service, and as tough as a coquette's conscience, than so tender that a fly's foot will make an impression upon them. [Port. Trib.

Influence of Vegetable Diet on Longevity.—It is said that in no other part of the world (in proportion to the population) are there more instances of extreme longevity than among the Norwegian peasantry, who scarcely ever taste animal food. In the severe climate of Russia also, where the inhabitants live on a coarse vegetable diet, there are a great many instances of advanced age. The late returns of the Greek church population of the Russian empire, give (in the table of the deaths of the male sex) more than one thousand above a hundred years of age; many between one hundred and a hundred and forty. It is stated that, to whatever age the Mexican Indians live, they never become greyhaired. They are represented as peaceful cultivators of the soil; subsisting constantly on vegetable food; often attaining 100 years of age, yet still hale and vigorous. Of the South American Indians, Ulloa says—"I have known several, who, at the age of a hundred, were still very robust and active, which unquestionably must in some measure be attributed to the perfect sameness and simplicity of their food." Both the Peruvian Indians and the Creoles are remarkably long-lived, and retain their faculties to a very advanced age. Slaves in the West Indies are recorded from a hundred and thirty to a hundred and fifty.

Chinese Feats.—Several of the feats of skill and daring of the Chinese, are to the uninitiated truly astonishsng. For instance—two men from Nankin, appear in the streets of Canton, the one places his back against a stone wall or wood-fence, the upper part of his person being divested of clothing. His associate, armed with a large knife, retires to a distance say from one hundred to two hundred feet. At a given signal, the knife is thrown with unerring aim, in the direction of the person opposite, to within a hair's breadth of his neck, immediately below his ear. With such certainty of success is the blow aimed, and so great is the confidence reposed by the one in the skill of the other, that not the slightest uneasiness is discernible in the features of him whose life is a forfeit to the least deviation on the part of the practitioner. This feat is again and again repeated, and with similar success, only varying the direction of the knife to the opposite side of the neck of the exposed person, or to any other point of proximity to the living targent, as the spectators may desire.

Frederick the Great and Dueling.—Frederick the great, if the story told of him is true, took a most effectual and summary mode to put down dueling in his kingdom. We see the followiug paragraph going the rounds:

An officer desired his permission to fight a duel with a fellow officer. He gave his consent with the understanding that he himself would be a spectator of the conflict. The hour of meeting arrived, and the parties repaired to the place of slaughter; but judge of their surprise to find a gibbet erected on the spot. The challenger inquired of Frederick, who was present according to agreement, what this meant? "I intend," said he, sternly, "to hang the survivor." This was enough. The duel was not fought; and by this simple and effectual means, it is said, dueling was broken up in the army of Frederick.

Early and Matured Authorship.—Origen, who, as Jerome said, "wrote more than any other man could read," did not appear as an author till he was thirty-seven years of age. Jerome, who wrote so extensively, was in his fiftieth year when he became an author, "an age," says Prof. Sears, "at which most men retire from such labors." If some of the unfledged authors of the present age had followed the example of Origen and Jerome, the public and themselves had been great gainers.

The things that make death terrible.—When Garrick, with great self-gratulation, showed Johnson his fine house, gardens and paintings, expecting some flattering compliment, the only reply was, "Ah, David, David, these are the things that make death terrible."

Never Mind it, Dear.—Mary Millman had so often heard her mother say, "Never mind it, dear!" that when any little accident happened to her playthings, even if she were alone, she used to say to herself, "Never mind it, dear!" This little saying had done Mary a great deal of good, for it had taught her to bear that meekly which used to put her out of patience.

One day, as I went by the door of the room where Mary was nursing her doll, the doll fell down and its nose was broken, when little Mary cried out directly as she picked it up, "Never mind it, dear—never mind it, dear."

"Oh," thought I, "I wish we could meet our troubles in the same spirit."

Ostriches.—According to native testimony, the male ostrich sits on the nest (which is merely a hollow space scooped out in the sand) during the night the better to defend the eggs from jackals and other nocturnal plunderers; towards morning he brommels or utters a grumbling sound, for the female to come and take his place; she sits on the eggs during the cool of the morning and evening. In the middle of the day, the pair leaving the eggs in charge of the sun, and forgetting that the foot may crush them, or the wild beasts break them, employ themselves in feeding off the tops of bushes in the plain near their nests. Looking aloft at this time of day, a white Egyptian vulture may be seen soaring in mid air, with a large stone between his talons. Having carefully surveyed the ground below him, he suddenly lets fall the stone, and then follows it in rapid descent. Let the hunter run to the spot, and he will find a nest of probably a score of eggs, (each equal in size to twenty-four hen's eggs,) some of them broken by the vulture. The jackal is said to roll the eggs together to break them, whilst the hyena pushes them off with his nose to bury them at a distance.

Frederick the Great.—History has preserved many characteristic traits illustrative of the mode in which Fredeick directed the whole machinery of state by a minute control of its most subordinate parts, which likewise fully evidence how entirely his heart was set upon the welfare of his people. A document was once laid before him for signature confirmatory of a Justice of the Peace in his office. On reading the name, the King paused, and desired the minister to be summoned. To him he expressed considerable annoyance at the selection of such an individual, whilst the minister endeavored to defend the appointment by recounting the high qualifications of the person selected. The King desired that a particular document should be brought him from one of the law offices, and after perusing it he addressed the minister: "Look ye, this man has carried on a law-suit with his own mother about a few acres of land, and she has been obliged on her very death-bed to take an oath respecting such a paltry matter. How could I expect that such a man, with such a heart, should care for the welfare of my people? Away with this thing! Let another be chosen."

Plane Story.—A planer of planes was once planing a plane, when the plane with which he was planing was plainly discovered not to be a plane, but so uneven and rough that he could never make plane what was made for a plane. The planer of planes then complained with plaintive complaints, that his plain neighbor, to whom he had sometime before loaned his plane, had misused his plane and made it unplane. This plainly appeared not to be plain dealing in his neighbor, who had he been a plain upright man would have plainly told him when he returned the plane to the planer of planes, that he had accidentally injured the plane while planing something that he wished to make plane. It now appearing plain to the planer of planes, that the plane with which he had been planing what he intended for a plane would never make it plane; he took another plane he had been using to plane out the new plane; and after planing that plain, he was able smoothingly to plane the new plane.

Let no one complain that it is plain that the word plane is so often used that the sense is plain; for on examination it will plainly appear that the meaning is plain, though it plainly requires some pains to see how plain that meaning is.

Resignation.—A certain old lady who had been famed for sour looks and not very sweet words touching the various accidents of life, was observed to have suddenly become very amiable.

"What happy change has come over you?" asked a neighbor.

"Why," said the transformed, "to tell you the truth, I have been all my life striving for a contented mind, and I've finally made up my mind to set down contented without it."

Borrowing Books.—A gentleman who had suffered much loss by lending books, finally procured a large number of volumes, and placed the following placard over the door of the case: "My friends are welcome to visit my library and peruse the volumes there at any time, but they must take none away. My books are always happy to see company, but never go a visiting."

Macauley says of Byron, that he could exhibit only one man and only one woman; a man proud, moody, cynical, with defiance on his brow, and misery in his heart, a scorner of his kind, implacable of deed and strong affection—a woman, all softness and gentleness, loving to caress and be caressed, but capable of being transformed by passion into a tigress.

DANIEL NOBLE,

Pastor of the Sabbath-keeping Church of Mill Yard, in Goodman's Fields, London, from the death of Robert Cornthwaite in 1755, until his own death in 1783.*

DANIEL NOBLE, son of Daniel and Sarah Noble, was born in Whitechapel, on the 14th June, 1729. At seven years of age he was initiated in writing and accounts, under a schoolmaster named Strangreage. He afterwards went to another master named Buzzy; and, at about ten years of age, he was placed under the care of the Rev. Mr. Cornthwaite, in Crown Alley, Moorfields, by whom he was instructed in grammar learning till he was sixteen years of age. During that period he made considerable progress in Latin, Greek, and French; and from his very entrance into that school, he discovered such an extraordinary degree of diligence, and thirst after learning, as excited the surprise, not only of his master, but also of his school-fellows, whose jealousy was not a little excited at his excelling and overtaking almost every boy in the school. He was so attentive in school to his lesson, and desirous of saying so much, that Mr. Cornthwaite has frequently dismissed him before he had said so long a lesson as he was desirous of, and was frequently heard to say to him, "Get you gone; have I no other boys to hear but you?" In the intervals of school hours, Daniel Noble would not associate with other boys at play; but would retire into some obscure place in Moorfields or elsewhere, that he might employ himself in reading; and it was for a considerable time his practice to do this in the public street, when going to school or returning to his father's house. He was baptized by Mr. Cornthwaite, on the 24th of Sept., 1743.

When he was about sixteen years of age, he quitted Mr. Cornthwaite's school; and, as it was judged by his friends that he was too young to be sent to an academy, or to one of the Scotch Universities, he was placed under the care of Dr. Patrick, of the Charter House; and this circumstance has been recorded by Mr. Noble himself. Under Dr. Patrick, who was editor of the second edition of Ainsworth's Thesaurus, Mr. Noble made great progress in the Greek language. At this early period, in the year 1745, he wrote "A Letter to the people of Great Britain, on the present crisis of affairs." It related to the rebellion, and he desired a friend to offer the manuscript to a bookseller, who accordingly published it anonymously; this was not known to any but the author and his friend.

In June, 1746, Mr. Noble was placed under the care of Dr. Rotheram, at Kendall, in Westmoreland. He was well received by that gentleman, and prosecuted his studies advantageously. In September, 1749, he went to the University of Glasgow, where he passed through the several classes, and he spoke highly of the professors. He there became acquainted with Dr. Macknight, author of Harmony of the Gospels, by whom he was repeatedly visited while in London.

In May, 1752, he returned to London, and was much solicited to preach, which, from extreme diffidence, he declined for considerable time; but he at length agreed to preach at Mill Yard, Goodman's Fields, and in June, 1753, he was appointed to officiate statedly at that meeting house in the morning service. He also occasionally preached to the congregation of Mr. Sanderock, and undertook, for some time, the care of Dr. Wilner's school at Peckham.

Mr. Noble was, from his youth, intended for the Christian ministry, and was regularly educated to it. His education was liberal; after having acquired a competent knowledge of the learned languages, he was put to an academy in the north of England under the tuition of the Rev. and learned Dr. Rotheram. After this, he was removed to the University of Glasgow; and, being possessed of good natural abilities, and a truly serious mind, he acquired, in the course of his education, such knowledge, both as a scholar and a minister, as rendered him a truly respectable and good character through life.

He might easily have applied his learning and abilities to more lucrative purposes than any he could attain as a dissenting minister; and certainly would have done it, had the acquisition of wealth been his first object. But such was his opinion of the duty and office of a Christian minister, of its utility and importance, that he preferred the satisfaction arising from the faithful and conscientious discharge of this duty, to every other consideration which could be proposed to him.

Mr. Noble was a Christian, a Protestant, and a Dissenter, upon principle; and such was his integrity, that he scrupled not to avow to the world whatever appeared to him to be true. His opinions might be popular, or they might not; this gave him no concern. His first solicitude was to know the truth—the truth especially as it is in Jesus, and to spread the knowledge of it in the world. He was very diligent in searching after truth; he searched after it as for hid treasure. The result was, he firmly believed the doctrine of general redemption, of adult baptism, and also the doctrine of the perpetuity of the seventh-day Sabbath. These were very unpopular opinions for any one to embrace who had any anxiety to succeed in the world; but, unpopular as they were, because they appeared to him to be true, he readily embraced them. Neither was he at any time ashamed or afraid to profess to the world that they were his. He thought it his duty earnestly to contend for the faith once delivered to the saints, and by the best arguments he could produce, to endeavor to support it; but as he ever contended for it purely from the love of truth, he ever contended for it in a spirit of meekness and candor. The great principles of religion and virtue seemed to be ever present with him. He had very enlarged ideas of the rights of others; and was, upon principle, a thorough friend to the civil and religious liberties of all mankind.

In conversation, Mr. Noble was open and liberal, and at the same time serious and instructive; and so far was he from being ever assuming or dictatorial, he was very diffident of himself, modest in his deportment, of great civility of manners, and at all times peculiarly anxious not to give offence.

Mr. Noble was not, indeed, much distinguished in the literary world; but from those publications of his which have appeared, it is evident that he had the cause of truth and freedom, of Christianity and virtue, very much at heart, and had cultivated within himself the warmest attachments to the best interests of mankind.

He discharged his ministerial duty with fidelity and diligence; preached the word of life and administered the ordinances of the Gospel with warmth and affection; was instant in season and out of season; reproved, rebuked, exhorted, with all long-suffering; and earnestly endeavored to awaken the impenitent, to instruct the ignorant, to rouse the slothful, to correct the erroneous, to comfort the afflicted, to animate the dejected, and to lead on the virtuous and well-disposed in the performance of their duty unto eternal life.

His manner of life was holy, just and unblamable—an ensample to the flock. It was obvious to all who knew him, that he was faithful and conscientious in the discharge of all the other relative and social duties. As a son, as a husband, as a parent, as a master, and as a friend, he was truly exemplary. Such, upon the whole, was the general tenor of his conduct, such the affability of his manners, and such the innate benevolence of his heart, that few, very few, were more respected, and still fewer more beloved than he.

In a word, it may truly be said of him, that he was a good man, a steady friend, a serious Christian, a humble, faithful minister of the Gospel. If he had his infirmities—and who is without them?—they were of such a kind as quickly receded from the view of those who knew him; and those who were acquainted with him, will entertain a deep sense of his real worth.

In the year 1761, Mr. Noble engaged with several of his brethren in the ministry, in a periodical work called "The Library; or Moral and Critical Magazine." In this work there are several very ingenious essays of his; and two in particular, on the word Mystery, which did him great credit. He was, besides, the sole author of the ethical or moral part of that work, and of the "moral sentiments and reflections" contained in it.

Mr. Noble published several single sermons, the merit as well as the occasion of which recommended them to attention. The learned Dr. Benson used to say of him, that "he was the best composer he knew;" referring, it is understood, to the accuracy and correctness of sentiment and method, as well as to the judgment which marked his discourses. The first he published was entitled, "The Christian's full assurance of Hope"—a sermon from Heb. 6: 11, 12, preached April 26, 1755, on the occasion of the death of Rev. Mr. Robert Cornthwaite. 2. A sermon on the death of King George the 2d, and the ascension of his successor, from Daniel 6: 21, October, 1760. 3. "The Hope of Immortality a most powerful motive to fervent charity," from 1 Peter 1: 22, 25—a sermon preached at Barbican, December 6, 1761, on occasion of the death of the reverend and learned Mr. James Borroughs. 4. "Religion perfect Freedom," from John 8: 37—a sermon preached at Barbican, March 1, 1767, on occasion of the death of Allan Evans, Esq., who departed this life Feb. the 17th, in the 82d year of his age. "This sermon," says Dr. Jeffries, "is an excellent one; it glows at the same time with the genuine spirit of freedom, and the most rational and animated piety." And lastly, "Christ's final Commission to his Holy Apostles, with some strictures on church edifices and ornaments," from Matt. 28: 19, 20—a sermon preached on Sunday, July 30, 1780, at the opening of the new meeting house in Worship street, near Bishopsgate street.

Mr. Noble's ministerial services were divided between two congregations; to one of which he preached on the seventh day, at Mill Yard, Goodman's Fields, where he was ordained October 9, 1755. The introductory discourse delivered on the occasion by Mr. Bulkley, forms a part of the useful tract published by that gentleman in 1758, entitled, "The Christian Minister." The other church to which Mr. Noble was pastor, met for many years in Paul's Alley, Barbican; and afterwards removed to Worship street, where he was succeeded by Rev. John Evans, A. M. Besides his pastoral duties and studies, he was for many years engaged with reputation in the education of youth.

Mr. Noble died December 24, 1783, and was interred in the burial ground at Mill Yard, Goodman's Fields, January 7, 1784, when Rev. Charles Bulkley pronounced the funeral oration. The pall-bearers were Dr. Stennett, Dr. Jeffries, Mr. Bulkley, Mr. Joseph Brown, Mr. John Palmer, and Mr. Peter Russel.

LUTHER AS A MUSICIAN.

To those who have been accustomed to contemplate the great Reformer merely as a stern theologian, it may appear strange that he should have been both a skilful musician and an able composer of music. But the evidence on this head is abundant, as will be seen by the following extracts from an article of Prof. Stowe, in the Bib. Repository:—

Says Alberus,—"Luther was a fine musician, and he loved the noble arts of the painter and the organist." His student Mathesius informs us that he was a beautiful singer, and even in his old age sang the alto to the delight of all who heard him. It was his beautiful singing in his boyhood which attracted the notice of the accomplished lady of Conrad Cotta, at Eisenach, who received the poor half-famished student to her house and her table. He was a skilful performer on the lute and the German flute; and while on his way to the diet at Worms, in 1581, his occasional performances on these instruments excited great admiration. He was enthusiastically fond of music. He said,—"I have always loved music. I would not for any price, lose the little musical power I possess. ... It drives away the spirit of melancholy, as we see in the case of King Saul. ... By its aid, a man forgets his anger, his lust, his pride, and other vices, and expels many temptations and evil thoughts. The devil cannot abide good music—he hates it. It is the best soother of a troubled mind, whereby the heart is again quickened, refreshed and made contented,—as it is said in Virgil,—Tu calamos inflare leves, ego dicere versus,—that is, 'Do you play the flute, and I will sing the words.' Music is a great disciplinarian; she makes people tractable, kindly disposed, modest, and reasonable. Singing is the best art and exercise. He who knoweth this art is well off, and fit for any good work. Singers are not melancholy, but cheerful; they drive away care and sorrow by singing. Music is a beauteous, lovely gift of God; it awakens and moves me so that I preach with pleasure." Once of a musical festival he said,—"Since our Lord God pours out upon us in this life such noble gifts, what will it be in that eternal life where every thing is to be most perfect and joyous."

To a friend who was in a depressed state of mind, he writes: "If you are melancholy and will conquer, then say to yourself, Up! I must strike up a song on the organ to my Lord Christ; for the Scripture teaches us that he loves to hear a joyous song with musical accompaniments. Then strike on to the keys and sing away as David and Elisha did. And if the devil comes again and puts gloomy thoughts and cares into your head, say,—Out devil! I must now sing and play to my Lord Christ; then run to your organ, or call in your good friends and sing a tune or two, till you learn to defy the devil!" In the castle of Coburg, when in great danger, he said to his desponding friends: "Come, let us defy the devil, and sing in four parts the 130th Psalm,—Aus tiefer Noth, schrei ich zu dir." When he had company at his house, or when he visited others, sacred music always made up the greater part of the evening's entertainment. Riding once through a wood, he alighted from the carriage and walked among the trees, and began to sing with great animation, and then said,—"Our singing distresses the devil, and hurts his feelings amazingly; but our impotence, and complaining, and groaning, pleases him mightily, and makes him laugh in his sleeve. A good joyous hymn is the remedy for gloomy and evil thoughts."

In a letter to a friend he uses the following language:

"Doubtless the seeds of many excellent virtues are to be found in the minds of those who are fond of music; but as for those who cannot be moved by it, I regard them as most like to stocks and stones. We know that music is odious and intolerable to the devil. I believe entirely, and am not ashamed to profess that, next to theology, there is no art or science to be compared with music; since this alone besides theology, does that which otherwise theology alone can do: namely, it gives a quiet and joyful mind; a clear proof that the devil, who every where stirs up gloomy cares and disquieting alarms, flees before musical sounds, as he does from the word of God. Therefore the prophets used no art so much as music; and they illustrated their theology, not by geography, or arithmetic, or astronomy, but by music; so that they held music and theology in most intimate connection, teaching the truth in psalms and songs. But how can I praise music on this little bit of paper, and thus attempt to paint, or rather daub, so great a matter? But my affection overflows and gushes out toward it, so often has it refreshed me, and relieved me from great sorrows."

DILIGENCE IN READING THE SCRIPTURES.

"Read and revere the sacred page; a page
Which not the whole creation could produce;
Which not the conflagration shall destroy."
YOUNG.

ERASMUS, speaking of Jerome, says, "Who ever learned by heart the whole Scripture, or imbibed, or meditated upon it as he did? Tertullian, after his conversion, was engaged night and day in reading the Scriptures, and got much of them by heart.

The Emperor Theodosius wrote out the whole New Testament with his own hand, and read some part of it every day. Theodosius the Second, dedicated a great part of the night to the study of the Scriptures. George, Prince of Transylvania, read over the Bible twenty-seven times. Alphonsus, king of Arragon, read the Scriptures over, together with a large commentary, fourteen times.

The venerable Bede is said to have been a great reader of the Bible, and that with such affection, that he often wept over it.

Bonaventure wrote out the Scriptures twice, and learned most of them by heart. Zuinglius wrote out St. Paul's epistles and committed them to memory.

Cromwell, Earl of Essex, in his journey to and from Rome, learned all the New Testament by heart. Bishop Ridley thus attests his own practice, and the happy fruits of it: "The wall and trees of my orchard, could they speak, would bear witness that there I learned by heart almost all the epistles; of which study, although in time a greater part was lost, yet the sweet savor thereof I trust I shall carry with me to heaven."

BEAUTIFUL EXTRACT.

I saw the temple reared by the hands of men, standing with its high pinacles in the distant plain. The streams beat upon it—the God of nature hurled his thunder bolts against it—and yet it stood as firm as adamant. Revelry was in its hall—the gay, the happy, the young and the beautiful were there. I returned—and the temple was no more!—its high walls lay scattered in ruins, moss and wild grass grew wildly there, and at the midnight hour the owl's cry added to the deep solitude—the young and gay who reveled there had passed away.

I saw a child rejoicing in youth—the idol of his mother and the pride of his father: I returned, and the child had become old. Trembling with the weight of years, he stood the last of his generation—a stranger amidst the desolation around him.

I saw an old oak stand in all its pride on the mountain—the birds were carroling on its boughs. I returned, the oak was leafless and sapless, the winds were playing at their pastime through its branches.

"Who is the destroyer?" said I to my guardian angel.

"It is Time"—said he—"when the morning stars sang together in joy, over the new made world, he commenced his course, and when he shall have destroyed all that is beautiful of the earth—plucked the sun from his sphere—veiled the moon in blood, yea, when he shall have rolled heaven and earth away as a scroll, then shall an angel from the throne of God come forth and with one foot on the sea and one on the land, lift up his hand towards heaven, and swear by Heaven's Eternal—'Time is, time was, but time shall be no longer.'" A NOBLE WOMAN.

The island of Rona is a small and very rocky spot of land, lying between the Isle of Skye and the mainland of Applecross, and is well known to the mariners for the rugged and dangerous nature of its coast. There is a famous place of refuge at its northwestern extremity, called the "Muckle Harbor," of very difficult access, however, which, strange to say, is easier entered at night than during the day. At the extremity of this hyperborean solitude, is the residence of a poor woman, named Widow Mackenzie, who is upwards of seventy years of age; her lonely cottage is called by sailors, "the light-house," from the fact that she uniformly keeps a lamp burning in her little window at night. By keeping this light, and the entrance of the harbor open, a strange vessel may enter with the greatest safety. During the silent watches of the night, the widow may be seen, like Norna of the Fitful Head, trimming her little lamp with oil, fearful that some frail bark may perish through her neglect; and for this she receives no manner of remuneration; it is pure and unmingled philanthropy. The poor woman's kindness does not rest even here; for she is unhappy until the benumbed and shivering mariner comes ashore to share her little board, and recruit himself at her glowing cheerful fire; and she can seldom be prevailed upon to accept of any reward. She has saved more lives than Davy's belt, and thousands of pounds to the underwriters. This poor creature, in her young days, saw her husband and three brothers drowned before her face; and she is known frequently to sit for hours on a rock, gazing on the spot where they sank. Her only dependence now is on the produce of a cow and two or three goats; and no one resides with her but her daughter. Now is not this a case of meritorious benevolence worthy of some mark of public approbation?

A GOOD MAN.

I would walk
A weary journey, to the fartherest verge
Of the big world, to kiss that good man's hand,
Who, in the blaze of wisdom and of art,
Preserves a lowly mind, and to his God,
Feeling the sense of his own littleness,
Is as a child in meek simplicity.
HENRY KIRK WHITE.

RESIDENCE OF VOLTAIRE.—It stands on a rising ground a little out of the village, and commands a tolerable view of the lake. Mount Blanc too is visible, though fifty miles distant. The house itself is not very large, and in all respects different from what we should expect in the dwelling of a man such as Voltaire, of great wealth and inordinate vanity. From the hall we passed into a saloon hung with old velvet, furnished just as at the time of his death, and then into his chamber, with the same chairs, stove, and curtains, as when he occupied it last. There, too, was his rough pine bedstead, without paint or varnish, and his mattresses and counterpane, all of the plainest. The room was hung with miserable paintings and engravings. An old gardener of M. Voltaire still lives on the premises—a pleasant, garrulous old man, who has many stories to tell of his celebrated master. He makes some money by selling impressions of Voltaire's seal upon printed copies of a singular adventure between him and Gibbon, and also of the "last verses of Voltaire, dictated the 29th of May, 1798, the day before his death." He has his master's wig, also, very large, and made of coarse grey hair. I ventured to put it on my head. [Durbin's Obs.

THE GREEK SERVICE.—The service was long and tedious. In the first place, the Bible, preceded by two lighted tapers, was carried round the church, and all the worshipers bowed as it passed. Then came a priest, bearing the Host in like manner. He carried the chalice in his right hand, and the bread in a gilded urn on his head, supported by his left hand. The urn was surmounted by a cross adorned with precious stones—the ruby, the emerald, and the sapphire. All knelt and crossed themselves. Our aged French companion bowed reverently to the Host, and, indeed, joined very devoutly in the whole worship, although he had received a very repulsive answer from the orthodox Greeks to a meek inquiry which he put before the service as to its catholicity. In a few minutes after the procession of the Host, the officiating priest appeared at the door of the sanctuary, bearing in his hands a large golden chalice, containing the sacred elements in both kinds. None partook of the sacrament. The service closed with a sort of primitive love-feast; a plate of bread was handed round by the priest, and all that were present partook. On retiring, most of the monks kissed a much-worn picture which lay on a small canopied stand.

GREAT READERS.—Most great men have been great readers. Wonders are recounted of their powers of perusal. How Dr. Johnson "would tear out the heart" of a book at a glance! How Burke devoured two volumes octavo in a stage coach; and package after package of those sweet medicines for the mind was thrown into Napoleon on the island, like food to a lion, and with hoc presto, despatched! After all the pity and puling has been exhausted by commentators on the lamentable ignorance of Shakspeare, we ascertain to a surety that he was one of the most profound and extensive readers of his time. The man who in the present age has written most has read most. Reading and writing go together as naturally in literature as they do in the prospectus of a school mistress, who professes to inculcate these branches of learning on the juveniles. The dullest, when aided by a telescope, can see farther than the brightest without such assistanec. Burns, with the help of a dozen or more volumes, makes himself the first poet of his native land; with the stupendous aidance of a Bodleian (or even the feebler one of a circulating) library, might he not have ranked himself with Byron or Shakspeare?

CIRCUITOUS PREACHING.—Dr. Elliott, of the Western Christian Advocate, relates that on one occasion, when preaching on a Sunday, his only hearer was a poor Mohawk woman, who had come on foot fourteen miles, with a child in her arms, to hear the sermon. He had two interpreters, one of whom understood English and Wynadott, but no Mohawk; and the other understood Mohawk and Wynadott, but no English. But by preaching in English, and one interpreter (Jonathan) converting it into Wynadott, and the other interpreter (Between-the-log) giving this in Mohawk, they all made out to preach to the poor Indian woman, as she sat at the foot of a large oak, with her child fastened on a board in her arms.

TRUE COURAGE.—A certain Scotchman being solicited to enter the army and fight for his country, said to the officer who was desirous of enlisting him, "I would ask you, sir, two questions, which, if you answer to my satisfaction, I shall have no hesitation to take up arms. The first is, can you tell me, if I kill a man, that he will go to heaven? or, can you say whether, if I am killed myself, I shall go there?" To these two questions, so important and solemn, the officer could not reply. "Well, then," said the Scotchman, "I dare not send a fellow creature unprepared into eternity, neither dare I rush there myself, UNBIDDEN."

QUAKER MEETING.—A young man from the country lately on a visit to a Quaker, was prevailed on to accompany him to meeting. It happened to be a silent one. When he left the meeting house with his young friend, he asked him, "How didst thou like the meeting?" to which he pettishly replied, "Like it! why I can see no sense in it to go and sit for whole hours together without speaking a word. It is enough to kill the devil!" "Yea, my friend," rejoined the Quaker, "that's just what we want."

* For the last two years of Robert Cornthwaite's life, he was in a great measure laid aside from the ministry by repeated strokes of apoplexy, with the third of which he died. During this time, Daniel Noble, a Sabbath-keeping brother who had been educated for the ministry, commenced officiating in the morning service at the Mill Yard Church. The account here given of him is taken partly from a communication written by a gentleman who was long his intimate friend, and partly from an article prepared by Joshua Toulmin and published in the Protestant Dissenter's Magazine for Dec. 1798.

CHRISTIAN BENEVOLENCE.

It is surprising what vague notions good men sometimes entertain upon the subject of Christian benevolence. The number of those who doubt that some sort of obligation rests upon them, is very small indeed. Yet there are but few who understand and feel the equality of the claims of benevolence upon all who profess to be Christians. There are many persons who can point out with great clearness the duties of missionaries,—can see that they ought to do all in their power for the salvation of the world—that they ought to engage in nothing which would diminish their ability to do good—that they ought to feel the necessity of strict economy, and limit themselves to such expenses as are indispensable to their comfort—that they ought not to be influenced by custom, fashion, or habits of personal gratification, in disposing of what is entrusted to them; and yet these same persons seem totally unable to apply to themselves the principles by which they judge of the duty of others. They seem not to understand that they sustain the same relation to the church of Christ, and to the world at large, as do their missionary brethren. If it is the duty of one to make sacrifices, so is it of the other. If one ought to be wholly consecrated to the interests of the Redeemer's kingdom, so ought the other. It matters but little what may be our particular field of labor; the same principle ought to govern every Christian, in whatever field he may be placed. A thorough understanding and heartfelt reception of this truth, is indispensable to the success of Christian efforts for the spread of the Gospel.

Look again at the different estimation in which Christian benevolence is held by different individuals. To many persons it seems only a duty—never a privilege. Under the influence of some high excitement, or from the promptings of an uneasy conscience, they may be induced to contribute some portion of their substance to benevolent objects. But this is often done with great reluctance, and with a determination to put far off the day for a repetition of the act. To think of doing such acts at regular and frequent intervals, would be unendurable. How different this from the estimation in which benevolent acts are held by another class of Christians, who cherish the same hopes, and make no louder professions of piety. There are those who regard it as a privilege to be permitted to engage in works of faith and labors of love. They believe that God loves a cheerful giver, and they find satisfaction in those deeds which he approves. They look upon themselves as co-workers with God, and they desire no higher dignity. They contemplate the self-denials and sufferings of Christ, and thirst for fellowship with him in those very things. To them the command to "lay by them in store" is welcome, and they take pleasure in complying with it "according as God has prospered them." In short, it is their meat and their drink to engage in works of Christian benevolence. To deprive them of opportunities for doing so, would be to rob them of a privilege they highly prize. It would take from the duties of every day life half their zest, by separating them entirely from the enjoyments of a higher life.

There is plenty of room yet for instruction upon the subject of Christian benevolence. The privilege as well as the duty of it needs to be more clearly stated and illustrated. Let these be fully brought out and comprehended by Christians generally, and there would be less occasion than there now is for the old complaint of "inequality."

ORAL RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION OF SLAVES.

We find in the Christian Index an Essay on the Religious Oral Instruction of the Colored Race, prepared and published, at the request of the Georgia Baptist Convention, by Rev. Josiah S. Law, for several years a successful missionary among the blacks. The essay represents the condition of the colored race as degraded beyond what we were prepared to learn. The writer says that "lying, stealing, and drunkenness, gross immorality and profanation of the Sabbath, are common sins among them, and what is truly lamentable in their case, the practice of any or all of these sins does not effect reputation among themselves as it should, and consequently a very strong incentive to forsake them is lost." Partly in view of this awful moral condition of the slaves, and partly in view of several specific considerations, Mr. Law urges the masters to furnish their servants with the means of salvation. The first consideration which he presents is, that they are our fellow beings; the second, that they are our servants, and under our control; the third, that they have no access to the written word of God. Each of these considerations he elucidates at considerable length, showing his positions to be well sustained by facts. Then comes his opinion as to the best plan of furnishing servants with the means of salvation. He recommends, in the first place, that missionaries be sent among them—(who "should be, and must be, Southern men, men of prudence, intelligence, and piety")—to preach to the negroes in a style of simplicity adapted to their limited capacities, take the lead of their prayer meetings, and give instruction to inquirers. The only objection to this course which he suggests is, that it will bring together so many colored people without any whites that there will be danger of disturbances among themselves; but this objection, he thinks, would be removed, in most cases, by the attendance of some white people who might easily be present. Mr. Law's second recommendation is, that Sabbath Schools should be established among them—not schools in which the Bible shall be studied, but in which teachers shall read the Bible to the scholars, and tell them what it means—teach them to repeat the Lord's prayer, and hymns, the catechism, &c., &c.

—Such is a pretty faithful outline of the much-talked-of plan to give oral religious instruction to the slaves. We were anxious to read this essay, because many persons have spoken in high terms of the enterprise upon which it treats. But after having read it carefully, we must confess ourselves but little elated with the prospect of religious improvement among the slaves. It seems to be conceded, that it is not safe to teach them to read the word of God for themselves, or to allow them to receive oral instruction, except from men who have been bred up under the influence of a slave-holding Christianity. How it is possible for men entertaining such views to do any thing for the real and permanent improvement of the victims of their suspicion and rapacity, we know not. Indeed, we feel quite well assured, that instead of improving their condition, this movement will make it worse. Like all attempts to heal up a sore without probing it to the quick, it will put the day of soundness and health farther off. Such efforts, therefore, do not abate our hatred of slavery one jot, but only deepen our conviction that it must be abolished before the slaves can enjoy any thing deserving the name of religious instruction.

THE CENTRAL ASSOCIATION AND THE AMERICAN AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY.

Mr. Editor,—According to your correspondent's report of the proceedings of the Central Association, published in last week's Recorder, it appears that that body was visited by an agent of the American and Foreign Bible Society, whose mission was received in a manner that could not have been very gratifying to his feelings. I regret that your correspondent was not more minute in his account of this item of the Association's business, as it touches a subject of great importance. Some sketch of the arguments, by which it was endeavored to be proveed that the American and Foreign Bible Society's operations "are based upon such principles as tacitly acknowledge the righteousness of the institution of American Slavery, and ministers at least indirectly to its support," would have been gratifying to many of your readers, and possibly might have served to open their eyes to the iniquity of lending any support to a Society which countenances such an abomination. For one, I feel that I am rather in the dark. After looking over the Constitution of the Society with a good deal of care, I am quite unable to discover any thing which acknowledges the righteousness of American Slavery. Neither have I discovered any thing in the operations of the Society from year to year, which endorses that abomination. On the other hand, I acknowledge that I have discovered nothing which specifically condemns it. But I conclude that the Society regarded itself as a voluntary compact formed for a distinctly specified object, viz., "to aid in the wider circulation of the Holy Scriptures in all lands,"—and that in all its operations it could not constitutionally step aside from this object to expound or discuss the principles taught in those Scriptures. Its object is to circulate them, not to expound them.

I know not why it is, but it seems to be thought by many, that every organization composed of religious people, no matter for what purpose formed, ought to regard itself as bound to preach in regard to every sin that troubles the land. I beg leave to dissent from this view. If a Bible Society must step aside from its main object of simply circulating the Scriptures without note or comment, to discuss and comment upon the principles taught in those Scriptures, it requires no very long head to see that the main object will soon be lost sight of altogether. Let the Society as such confine itself strictly to the object for which it is formed, and if its members feel pressed in spirit to speak against the sins of the land, there are other ways in which they can do so.

But, sir, I regard the operations of the American and Foreign Bible Society as in reality discountenancing Slavery, and by every Bible it circulates doing so much towards exterminating it from the earth. Do not our brethren of the Central Association regard the Bible itself as preaching against Slavery? Do they not think that its principles tend to the overthrow of the system? Do they not believe that every one who is fully governed by the spirit of the Bible will wash his hands of the foul sin, and have no more to do with it? If they do, then why not help the Society to circulate the Bible? If they do not, what business have they to condemn the system of Slavery themselves?

But perhaps the Society is repudiated on the ground that its treasury receives the money of slaveholders. Those who stand aloof on this ground, would do well to forego the use of sugar, coffee, molasses, rice, tobacco, to wear no clothing of which American cotton forms an ingredient, and to receive no gold that has been coined form North Carolina and Georgia mines. But I will not prolong my remarks, but simply add, that I hope some brother of that Association will give a little more light on this subject. In the mean time permit me to say, that I am gratified to find, on looking over the report of the Treasurer of the American and Foreign Bible Society, an acknowledgment of donations from some of our Seventh-day Baptist churches; from which I hope it will be understood, that the act of the Central Association is not a denominational thing.

For obvious reasons, I choose to submit these remarks over my own proper name, rather than over any fictitious signature.

THOS. B. BROWN.

WHO IS TO BLAME?

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

You have altogether mistaken the intention of your correspondent, when you seem to charge him with seeking to apologize for himself and others, whereas he simply asks a question, and gives a statement of existing facts, by an examination of which we can arrive at a just and true answer. I am well aware, that the matters examined are considered so small, and of such common occurrence, that they are scarcely worth noticing, and that it is not very popular closely to scrutinize these things on common occasions. However, the old maxim, "take care of the pence and the pounds will take care of themselves," I think will admit of as wide an application in morals as in worldly gains. Hence if we take care how we commit lesser faults, we shall not be very likely to get into grievous errors. The individual who has light and a "call" sufficient for teaching, and takes upon himself the responsibility, must be more to blame when he neglects the high vocation he has assumed, or renders it void by his acts not corresponding with his precepts, than he who has not that light and calling; and this being the highest earthly calling, a neglect of it consequently must make him most to blame. But this does not in the least remove the burden of blame from those who do not teach. It is just as true of them, that their responsibility is increased after making a profession of religion, as it is of the teacher after assuming his office; and just in proportion to the light they respectively have, does the blame attach itself to them, or just in proportion as they suffer that "light to be darkness." Professed Christians are more to blame than others for "measuring thenselves by themselves," or, if you please, measuring themselves by their teacher instead of the Word; and the teacher is most to blame for suffering his flock so to do, without by word and deed sounding the trumpet of alarm loud and long upon the walls; for he is the watchman, and the watchman should never slumber or hold his peace when the enemy is near, though he may consider that enemy small.

It is now a general time of coldness; and if a revival springs up, it seems to be short-lived, and the converts soon relapse, and the wicked wax worse; our country is plunged in a war of aggression, with all the horrors incident thereto, and this is urged on simultaneously by the children of this world, by professors of religion, and even by ministers of the peaceful Gospel of Jesus Christ. All this seems to say that there is wrong some where, wrong that calls loudly to be righted. May not every professor of religion take some blame to himself? Would it not be well to look about us at this crisis, and seek to rectify our line of march "through this vale of tears," which, we are told upon good authority, and daily experience goes to prove, is not our home or abiding place?

Examine the past history of the Christian Church, and we shall find that just in proportion as its members separated themselves from the world were they blessed, their numbers increased, and their true brightness and power made manifest. But as they approximated to the world—as they became popular and fashionable—did their strength decrease, their power to do good diminish, and their prospects darken, until a moral night gathered around them, the thick darkness of which was made to undulate with the untold horrors of the inquisition.

Is there not blame? Is there not danger in this strife that thickens around us to make religion popular? This measuring ourselves by ourselves; this hewing off the corners and adjusting ourselves to the feelings and views of the world; fitting our places of worship to their taste; employing such teachers, and requiring them to hold such doctrines, and offer such truths, and such only, as we think will ensure the respect of the affluent and the great, that their attendance on our worship may be secured, and their praise elicited; this ornamenting the house of God with towering spires and costly trappings, and the bodies of his professed saints with gaudy equipage, whilst the heathen are dying in their ignorance and sins, and our boasted land of light and liberty is on the verge of ruin from the foul oppressions embosomed in the church—while vital piety languishes, and the difference is so small between saint and sinner that they can hardly be distinguished when out of the house of worship—I say, is it not well to institute the inquiry, Who is to blame—who is most to blame?

L.

Brookfield, 10th June, 1846.

A Father's Legacy to his Sons.—The following paragraph, which we copy from an exchange paper, presents an example worthy of imitation:—

At a late meeting of the Board of the American Bible Society, held in New York, a letter, received from Hon. Abbot Lawrence was read, in which he says: "I will thank you to draw on me for the sum of six hundred dollars, at sight, for the purpose of constituting my three sons ife directors, as well as myself."

Convention of Southern Baptists.—The Southern Baptists held their Convention the present year at Richmond, Va. As the question of withdrawing from all the northern benevolent societies was expected to come up, there were several clergymen from the North in attendance for the purpose of exerting their influence against such entire separation. In the Home and Foreign Mission Departments, there are now distinct Northern and Southern Boards. The South does not form a separate Bible Society, however, but disposes of its funds for that object through the Foreign Missionary Board; and of course the Bibles will be furnished by the American and Foreign Bible Society, located in New York. There will be no separate organization for publication purposes. The Convention agreed to sustain several missionaries in China and Africa; it also recommended the establishment of others in Mexico and Palestine. In the Home Department, attention is to be directed chiefly to the south-western valley and Texas. Persons are also to be appointed to give oral religious instruction to the colored people of the Southern States.

Sailing of Baptist Missionaries.—The ship Cohota, which sailed from New-York for Canton on second-day of last week, took out the Rev. Messrs. Clopton and Piercy, with their wives, missionaries to China from the Southern Baptist Board; Mr. Jencks and wife, sent out by the Baptists of Maine; Mr. Dean, who has spent twelve years in that country, and the native preacher Ko-a-bak, who came to this country in company with Mr. Dean. A large number of friends accompanied the Missionaries to the Narrows, and while on the way they engaged in interesting religious exercises. Hon. A. H. Everett, American Commissioner to China, is a passenger in the Cohota, and took part in the exercises, by making an address, in which he paid a high compliment to the spirit of devotion and self-sacrifice evinced by the young Missionaries—(six of them are young and recently married)—in leaving home and friends and native land to give to the heathen the blessings of the Christian Religion. He promised to be their friend in China.

Cassius M. Clay.—This gentleman has published in the True American a statement of his reasons for volunteering to fight the Mexicans. He says he has denounced unsparingly the annexation of Texas as a boldly flagitious scheme, and a war with Mexico as kindred with that disgraceful act—degrading alike to the government that consummated, and the people that submitted to it. He thinks, also, that the war with Mexico might easily have been avoided—that the commonest regard for justice, and a moderate share of prudence, on the part of the government, would have prevented it. Nevertheless, the fact cannot be denied, that a state of war exists; and the only alternative left is that the war, so unjustly and wickedly begun, should be pressed with vigor to a conclusion. He cannot urge others to go where he is not willing himself to lead. Hence he does not hesitate to peril all to sustain the government.

The Bishopric of Jerusalem.—It is announced in the English papers, that the Rev. Samuel Gobat, Vice Principal of St. Julian's College at Malta, has been nominated to the Anglican Bishopric of Jerusalem, and has accepted the nomination. Mr. G. is a Prussian subject, a deacon of the Church of England, and also connected by ordination with the Lutheran Church of Germany and Switzerland. He was, we believe, at one time the missionary of the English Church in Abyssinia, but left there on account of some difficulties growing out of his connection with the English Embassy to that country.

The Choctaws.—An intersting revival has been in progress for several months past among the Choctaw Indians. As a fruit of it, we are told that one hundred and fifty persons have been added to the church, making the whole number of that people connected with eight churches, 665. The Choctaws have contributed during the past year $1,332 for benevolent purposes, in addition to $26,000 appropriated by their government for educational purposes; making a sum equal to $1 25 for every man, woman and child, in the nation—a sum greater, in proportion to the people, than is given for the cause of education by any nation on the globe.

God's Presence with Missionaries.—A meeting in behalf of the American Board for Foreign Missions was held at Boston during the religious anniversaries. The Rev. Dr. Anderson was first to address the meeting, and spoke as follows:—

It was vital, he said, whether we had the presence of God in our operations, and this would be the point of contemplation this evening. He then gave a brief statement of the work of God in the conversion of souls at the different missionary stations under the care of the Board, embracing the revival among the Nestorians; the condition of the Armenian converts, and their firmness under persecution; the six revivals in Ceylon; the outpourings of the Spirit of God upon the Sandwich Island missions, to the churches of which there have been received, upon an average, two thousand a year; and also the revival among the Indians, nearly one hundred having been added to the Choctaw churches during the last year. In view of these facts, Dr. A. said it was the purpose of the Board to call on the young men of our seminaries to come to the work, and to send to the heathen every one who offered and was fitted to go.

Publications Received.

A Treatise on Baptism, is the title of a sixteen-page pamphlet, written by Rev. James Bailey, and published by order of the Seventh-day Baptist Central Association. It treats of the Subjects of Baptism—Household Baptism—Pedobaptist Arguments—Mode of Baptism—Greek Words. From a hasty examination, we judge that it is well adapted to general circulation.

The Ninth Annual Report of the American and Foreign Bible Society is received, containing, in addition to the Report, the addresses at the Annual Meeting, extracts from Correspondence, a list of Life Members, Life Directors, &c.

The Christian Parlor Magazine for July contains, besides its usual variety of reading matter, a plate of the Three-colored Violet, and a representation of the head quarters of General Washington at Tappan, showing the house in which Major Andre was tried.

The Youth's Cabinet for July is rich in instruction and amusement for the little folks. The original poetry and music on the last page is worth the price of the number. D. A. Woodworth, 135 Nassau-st., N. Y.

The Union Theological Seminary in the City of New-York, held its ninth anniversary on fourth-day of last week. There were twenty-three graduates. Several orations were delivered by members of the graduating class. An address to the class, pointing out the new responsibilities and duties which awaited them, was read by Rev. Mr. Fisher, one of the Alumni. At the close of the exercises, Dr. White took leave of the class in a few impressive words, and with such evidences of emotion as strongly excited the feelings of the audience.

Return of Missionaries.—The ship Tioga, which reached New-York last week from Calcutta, brought several missionaries from India, among whom were Rev. J. M. Jamieson and four children, Mrs. J. Craig and four children, Rev. C. P. Heyer, Miss J. Vandeveer, Miss A. Bond, and Miss Mary Briand. A child of Mr. Jamieson died on the passage in the Bay of Bengal.

"Oh!"—Under this expressive heading, the Cleveland American says that "Judge O'Neal, of South Carolina, the man who pronounced sentence of death on a white man for helping a white slave woman, with whom he was in love, to escape from slavery, lately presided at a Convention to promote the better observance of the Sabbath!"

The Protectress.—The following language is used in one of the papers sent forth by the Roman Catholic archbishops and bishops recently assembled at Baltimore. We have read somewhere, "Cursed be the man that trusteth in man." What shall be said of those who boast that their dependence is upon an arm of flesh? Here is the extract:—

"We take this occasion, brethren, to communicate to you the determination unanimously adopted by us, to place ourselves and all entrusted to our charge throughout these United States, under the special patronage and protection of the holy Mother of God, whose immaculate conception is venerated by the piety of the faithful throughout the Catholic church. By the aid of her prayers, we entertain the confident hope that we shall be strengthened to perform the arduous duties of our ministry, and that you shall be enabled to practice the sublime virtues of which her life presents a most perfect example. The Holy Ghost, by her own lips, has foretold that all generations shall call her blessed; and we cannot doubt that a blessing is attached to those who take care to fulfill this prediction. To her, then, we commend you, in the confidence that through the one mediator of God and men, the man Christ Jesus, who gave himself a redemption for all, she will obtain for us grace and salvation."

MISSIONARY INTELLIGENCE.

We glean the following interesting items from the Missionary Herald for July:

West Africa, Dec, 15.—The schools have all been opened, except one, and they are quite as well attended as they were before the troubles. A Missionary says: "We are now printing some very plain sermons in the native language, to be read by our young men in their religious meetings."

Syria, April 7.—The deliberate opinion of the brethren and all the native helpers is that the field never looked so encouraging and inviting before.

Bombay.—The Annual Report says the number of Free Schools under the care of this Mission is nine, and the whole number of pupils is 348. There aro two female boarding-schools, with about 40 pupils. The average cogregation at one place is 200.

Madras, March 12.—Some disturbance has taken place here, but the work goes on.

Madura.—The Annual Report shows that the number of Christian villages is 40—the Church Members number 120.

Ceylon, March 10.—The cholera has abated, but the small-pox creates some apprehension. The schools were nearly all suspended and the printing-office was hardly kept open. Few attend the meetings held on the Sabbath. Two members of the Batticotta Mission have died—Silas Hubbell and Charles Walker.

Siam.—The quarterly letter states that the Missionary has more encouragement in his labors.

Sandwich Islands, Dec. 12.—Forty persons were expected to join the Church on the following Sabbath. Much good seems accomplished at Honolulu.

General Intelligence.

Doings in Congress last Week.

There was but little of general interest done in Congress last week. The SENATE spent a great deal of time upon bills for the relief of private individuals, some of whom had suffered loss in the Florida war, and others in some similar way. They also had considerable to say about the time of adjournment, whether it should be the 20th of July, or the 27th, the 3d of August, or the 10th; but no action was taken. There was some talk about the great expense of the printing of the Patent Office Documents, in the course of which Mr. Calhoun declared, that according to his information the profits of printing a single document amounted to $90,000.

In the HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, there was nothing done on Monday and Tuesday in consequence of the death of one of the members, Hon. Richard P. Herrick, of Rensselaer County, N. Y. The remainder of the week was spent chiefly in considering the bill to reduce the present Tariff.

GREAT FIRE AT ST. JOHNS.—St. Johns, New Foundland, has been the scene of a very destructive fire, by which, at the least calculation, two-thirds of the city was consumed, and property destroyed to the amount of about five millions of dollars. Two streets, each a mile long, and a number of detached buildings, were burnt, and twelve thousand persons rendered houseless. According to the St. Johns News, of June 26, it seems that the fire commenced at half past eight on Tuesday morning, and raged until seven o'clock in the evening. Several churches were burnt, together with the Court House, Jail, Commercial Rooms, Marine Insurance Office, the Bank of British North America, and every printing office in the city. Three lives were lost—two artillery men, in blowing up a house to check the progress of the fire, and one old man, who had saved his bed and other articles from the flames, but who sunk under their weight as he was conveying them to a place of safety, and immediately expired.

TROUBLE AMONG THE MORMONS.—There is trouble yet among the Mormons. It seems that a large portion of them, especially the men of property, have sold their estates to new settlers and left Nauvoo; while the remainder are unable to leave until the Trustees can dispose of the rest of the property, and thus secure funds for the support of the poor on their journey. But the Anti-mormons of the neighborhood say the Mormons are not trying to dispose of their property, and that they will compel them to leave at once by sending among them a force sufficient to put them all on the Iowa side of the river—thus entailing upon other communities the burden of hundreds of paupers without a roof to shelter them or food to subsist upon. This course is opposed by the new settlers at Nauvoo, about 600 of whom have volunteered to defend the place under the direction of the Sheriff. At the last accounts, the Anti-Mormons had mustered an armed force 400 strong, and were threatening an attack.

The War with Mexico.

The following account of the condition of the army was given to the Mobile Tribune, by Mr. Carrington, one of the delegates from the Louisiana Legislature to convey the sword presented by that body to Gen. Taylor:—

The army was in fine health. Gen. Taylor was waiting the necessary transports in order to move on to Camargo. The river is rapid and shallow in places, so that vessels which draw over four feet of water would find difficulty in reaching the point of destination.

The main body of the regular army is on the right bank of the river. Capt. Desha's command and the Washington and Jackson Regiments of Louisiana volunteers occupy the left bank. Gov. Henderson, at the head of about 1,000 Texan troops, reached the banks of the Rio Grande on the 10th ult. Seventeen warriors of the Tonkaway tribe of Indians accompanied the Texans.

Another account is as follows:—

There was a little sickness among our volunteers, diarrhœa, arising from the change of food and condition of life; they will soon, however, get inured. Texas has sent 2,400 men to Mexico. A gentleman largely concerned in business at Matamoros and San Louis Potosi, direct from the latter named place, represents that the news of the defeat of the Mexicans has spread a wonderful alarm in the interior wherever it is announced. It is also said that the Mexicans resolutely refused to take arms against the Americans.

The Mobile Register of June 16, says:—

The steamboat Fashion returned from Brazos, having landed troops who were well received. She brings a report that the town of Reynoso surrendered without resistance. Also, that Camargo capitulated in advance. The army is in good health.

General Taylor's latest Dispatches say that his operations are impeded by a want of suitable means for transporting his forces. Arista has pickets covering the roads leading from Metamoros to Monterey, and the departmental authorities have issued a decree denouncing as traitors all who hold intercourse with the American forces. In spite of all these obstacles, Gen. Taylor avows his determination to proceed to take Monterey as soon as means of transportation are received, unless counter instructions are given by the Government.

The Committee appointed to wait on Gen. Taylor with the vote of thanks and sword from the Legislature of Louisiana, were invited by the officers of the army to a splendid banquet given on the 11th inst. at Matamoros, in the mansion occupied by Gen. Arista previous to his defeat.

SUB-MARINE TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION BETWEEN FRANCE AND ENGLAND.—Amidst the many wonderful inventions of modern days, wherein the faculties of man have overcome difficulties apparently insurmountable, and made the very elements themselves subservient to his power and use, there are none more wonderful than that now about to be carried out by the establishment of sub-marine telegraphs, by which an instantaneous communication will be effected between the coasts of England and France. The British Government, by the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, and the French Government, by the Ministers of the Interior, have granted permission to two gentlemen, the projectors of the sub-marine telegraph, to lay it down from coast to coast. The site selected is from Cape Grisnez, or from Cape Blancnez, on the French side, to the South Foreland, on the English coast. The soundings between these headlands are gradual, varying from seven fathoms near the shore on either side to a maximum of 37 fathoms in mid-channel. The Lords of the Admiralty have also granted permission to the same gentlemen to lay down a sub-marine telegraph between Dublin and Holyhead, which is to be carried on from the latter place to Liverpool and London. Upon the completion of the sub-marine telegraph across the English Channel, it is stated that a similar one on a most gigantic scale, will be attempted to be formed, under the immediate sanction and patronage of the French administration; this is no less than that of connecting the shores of Africa with those of Europe by the same instrumentality, thus opening a direct and lightning-like communication between Marseilles and Algeria.

QUEEN VICTORIA.—A correspondent of the Boston Courier, says: "I saw her Majesty very lately; she looked pale and ill, and wore an expression of satiety and discontent. Prince Albert was with her, and bowed gracefully as he passed. You, accustomed to a land of liberty and equality, would doubtless smile could you see our Sovereign travel.

The sound of horses' feet is the first notice of her approach, and the next moment a troop of soldiers fly past as swiftly as a March wind, and raising just as much dust: then comes an open carriage with four horses and military outriders, and seated therein is a lady with fine eyes, and usually wearing a shawl and drawn bonnet of pink, blue or straw color; the Monarch of an Empire on which the sun never sets. With her are Prince Albert and the Princess Royal; the second carriage contains the other children and their nurses, and the third is occupied by the Equerries in Waiting, &c. Our Queen is a pattern to her sex. She rises at seven o'clock; enters the nursery at eight, to indulge in a romp with her children, like any other mother; at nine the household assemble for prayers; and after ten o'clock she prohibits breakfast being served to any one in the Palace, however high their rank!

STRAWBERRIES.—Cincinnati seems the favorite, or rather the Queen City of this delicious fruit. The following description of the market, from the Cincinnati Gazette of the 27th ult., is almost sufficient to make the mouth of a hungry editor water for an indulgence, which it is his fate but very rarely to enjoy. The Gazette says: "Our market is well supplied with this delicious fruit. Probably one hundred bushels were on Fifth-street yesterday. One man had thirty bushels, and several others ten and twelve each. The price ranges from five to twenty cents per quart; Hovey's Seeding selling quick at the latter price, and one must rise betimes to get these at any price. It is a fact well illustrating the importance of raising good fruit only, while you are about it, that Hovey's Seeding Strawberry is in greater demand here at twenty cents, than common kinds at five. One gentleman from Chillicothe paid $6,20 yesterday for a bushel of the latter, and took them home, via the River, to show his friends what can be done in the Strawberry line. There was hardly an imperfect berry in the lot; the size varying from four to five inches in circumference."

THE WEST.—A correspondent of the Albany Argus, writing from Milwaukie, says:

"The Marshals of the different Counties are taking the census of the Territory, and from present appearances our population will vary but little from 150,000, being an increase of over one hundred thousand within five years. The population of this city will not vary 50 from 9,500—an increase of 5,000 in two years. The population of the County of Milwaukie, embracing the city and seven townships, will be about 17,000. The county of Wakesha, which was set off from this county last winter, will not vary much from 20,000, making 87,000 inhabitants in a district of country 33 miles in length, by 30 in width, which ten years ago was an unbroken wilderness. And yet the emigration to Wisconsin is larger the present than it ever has been any previous season.

THE MORSOGRAPH.—This is the title given to an improved instrument for the Magnetic Telegraph, invented by James D. Weld, the talented operator attached to the Philadelphia office. The instrument is intended for the western line, but was put in operation by way of experiment. Its operations were perfect; the writing being closer and more legible than can be obtained from the other instruments in the Philadelphia office. It has also the advantage, that the moment the operator commences a message from the other terminus, the clock work is put in motion, and the paper being drawn off, the message is recorded without the necessity of any person being present to attend to the instrument, which exists with those now in use. A distressing instance of death by lightning occurred on Middle River, Virginia, on the 17th instant. Mrs. Ann Karikoffe, wife of Mr. Jacob Karikoffe, just after the shower which fell on that evening, went to a wagon in front of the house to get some wood, and as she was standing upon the wheel the lightning stuck her. Her husband on hearing the report ran to the door and found her lying on the ground apparently lifeless. He picked her up immediately and carried her into the house, but after laying her upon the bed she made one gasp, thus showing that life was not wholly extinct. It is greatly to be regretted that the experiment of pouring water copiously upon her was not made, (as ought to be done in all such cases) for it might have been the means of sving her.

SUMMARY.

The trial of Wyatt at Auburn, charged with murder, has resulted in his conviction.

The receipts at the office of the Croton Aqueduct this year from the 1st of May to the 8th of June, were $108,758 53, against $88,363 74 for the same period in 1845.

Among the many incidents of patriotism exhibited in the 'war excitement,' the conduct of a large number of German emigrants in Texas deserves particular notice. Upon the arrival at Galveston of the news that Gen. Taylor wished for reinforcements, one hundred and fifty German emigrants, who had been in the country but three weeks, organized themselves into two companies, and started for Gen. Taylor's head quarters.

The bark Neptune, Capt. Haesloop, says the Galveston Civilian, arrived at that port on Thursday, June 4th, with one hundred and fifty emigrants from Bremen. These emigrants seem to be in very easy circumstances, highly respectable in appearance, and are entirely disconnected with colonization companies.

It is stated in the Worcester Spy, that Benjamin Flagg of that town was fatally injured, last Saturday evening, by coming in contact with the steamboat train up, while crossing the Pine Meadow. One leg was broken, and he received internal injury such as to cause his death during the night. The usual warnings by the bell and whistle were given, but they were unheard. A bottle of rum was found in his pocket. He was 45 years of age, and has left a wife and four children.

A company of true Washingtonian truckmen at the corner of Water-st. and Liberty-square, keep a pail of clear ice water, and another of iced ginger, molasses and water, with which to regale themselves, customers, and the thirsty traveler, and all this "free gratis." How much better this, than the old beverage of truckmen—rum, brandy and gin-sling!

The City of Boston has been held to damages in the sum of $10,000, at the suit of Isaiah Bacon, for injuries received by him in falling into a hole in the sidewalk, in Lancaster-st. on the 16th of January last. The writ directs the officers to seize upon the goods of the inhabitants of the City of Boston; the said inhabitants to appear at the Supreme Judicial Court, on the 2d of November next.

Stealing names from coffins is an offence which has actually been perpetrated. A gentleman of this city, owner of a vault in Trinity Churchyard, which has been closed for many years, had occasion to have it opened yesterday. To his surprise he discovered that the silver plates had been wrenched from eight of the coffins. The marks where the plates had been fastened were yet visible, and the plate nails still in some instances remained, showing that the silver plates had been hastily and roughly torn off.

HALIFAX, N. C. June 16.—We have now one of the highest freshets in the Roanoke that we have had for some years. Thousands of acres of land planted in corn have been inundated, and the season is too far advanced for many farmers to make any thing more than a support from their farms. Equal or greater injury has been sustained by the corn and whet grounds on the Tar, Neuse and Cape Fear rivers. I fear that the farmers on the upper Roanoke have had much of their wheat swept away by this freshet.

The "Cincinnati Commercial" states that there arrived in that city from New Orleans, forty-six Indians, chiefs and warriors, from seventeen different tribes, in care of Col. M. J. Lewis and others, on their way to Washington, D. C.

Donald McAdams, a Tennessee Volunteer, belonging to the Shelbyville Guards, suddenly died on Saturday night, at the camp below the city. His death was caused, it is supposed, by drinking cold water, when in a high state of perspiration.

The Post Office Department has strictly enforced upon Postmasters the duty of ferreting out cases of writing on newspapers. The postage on a newspaper, with writing on it, is about forty cents—the fine five dollars.

There are 45 thriving villages in Wisconsin, where there were none four years ago, and 69 the sites of which have been occupied within six years.

A boy named Coan, aged 14 years, met with his death in Batavia. He had been for some time amusing himself by swinging upon a rope, both ends of which were fastened to a beam in the barn, near the house. Soon after he was thus seen, he was found hanging by the neck, dead. The rope had probably slipped from his hands and caught him by the neck.

The Peace Address from Worcester, Mass. to Worcester, England, which was taken out by Mr. Burritt, was signed by 816 of the citizens.—The length of the roll containing the autographs was about 20 feet.

A promising little daughter of Mr. A. S. Buell of Greece, aged about two years, came to her death from eating loco-foco matches. Upon being taken into the stomach they produced violent vomitings and spasms—which finally caused her death.

According to the Milwaukie Sentinel, that city contains a fraction less than 10,000 inhabitants. In 1842 it was 2,800 all told.

COLTON'S patent pocket-book and watch safes are new articles which have just made their appearance, and are intended to curtail somewhat the profits of that quite numerous class yclept the light-fingered gentry. They consist of German silver locks, of different sizes, with catches attached to a pocket made of the common material, which is lined with wires to prevent cutting from the outside. The safe for the pocket-book is worn in the skirt or breast facings, and that for the watch in the usual places where the watch is carried.

Dr. Franklin writing to Mrs. Mewson from Europe in 1783, said: "At length we are in peace. God be praised! and long, very long may it continue. All wars are follies, very expensive, and very mischievous ones. When will mankind be convinced of this, and agree to settle their differences by arbitration. Were they to do it even by the cast of a die, it would be better than by fighting and destroying each other."

Mr. Edwin Thayer, of Chatham, Columbia County, has ivented a Self-Adjusting Break, by means of which it is believed that collisions upon Railroads may be almost entirely obviated. This invention places the whole train under the immediate control of the Engineer, who, by touching a lever, breaks the speed of each Car. Many accidents occur suddenly, before the Breakmen can get to their stations. Mr. Thayer's plan by arresting the whole train simultaneously, prevents the crushing of cars by running into each other.

The number of Emigrants who arrived at this port during the past week was 4316. A person in the habit of buying the foreign coin which the Emigrants bring with them informs us that he presumes they bring on an average $100 apiece. This would amount to upward of $430,000 received in specie for a single week.

It has been decided that Judge McLean of the Supreme Court at Springfield, Illinois, that the true construction of the 39th section of our law in relation to Wills, is that to bar dower there must be a devise of lands, or some estate therein and that to bar her portion of personality, there must be a bequest of personal property.

A correspondent of the Boston Post, writing from Valparaiso under the date of April 2d, says "the elections are over, and President Bulnes is again elected. We had some excitement here the last night of the election days—some sixty wounded and nine killed. This I have from one of the medicos. There were several stores robbed, and quite an attempt to raise a revolution.

The Pittsburgh Chronicle says: In a single warehouse in this city there are now lying, awaiting transportation East, 2 000 hhds. of tobacco, 1,900 of which was raised in Ohio. If Kentucky does not look to her laurels, Ohio will soon rival her in the production of this article of commerce.

About 3,000,000 eggs have been packed at and sent from Cincinnati this spring.

The New Orleans Delta says peaches are now selling here at from 10 to 50 cents each.

The run of the Steamer Thomas Powel to Newburgh in two hours and forty minutes is the quickest passage on record.

A new floating chapel, erected by the Church Missionary Society for seamen, for the port of New York, will be completed in a few weeks. It will be permanently moored on the North River, in connection with one of the slips on that side of the city.

It is stated, that on lake Ontario, the white fish at this season pass along close to the shore in shoals. On Tuesday night, a man took over 8000 at one haul, so says the Rochester Democrat.

The Harrisburg Union, states that on Friday last, during a thunder shower, a sudden wind squall blew down the whole of the fourth span of the new Railroad Bridge, in process of erection, and started the second and third spans. This is the third accident which has befallen this bridge during the present season.

The Debate on the Tariff Question in the House of Representatives, is to terminate on Thursday, (to-day.)

Two of our Foreign Ministers are about to return home—Mr. McLane, from London, in September, and Mr. King, from Paris, in August.

Wm. Huffington was killed on the 10th ult., near Indianapolis, by the accidental discharge of a gun in the hands of his brothers.

A son of Col. Benton was also killed a few days, since, at Brownston, Ia., by the discharge of a gun in the hands of a companion, with whom he was hunting.

DIED,

In DeRuyter, Madison Co., N. Y., on the 1st of June, Mrs. TEMPERANCE BURDICK, widow of Daniel Burdick, in the 91st year of her age. Sister Burdick had long been waiting for her change to come, exhibiting that resignation to the divine will which is characteristic of a heart thoroughly regenerated by and under the influence of the grace of God. Her friends have no doubt that for her to die was gain. She embraced Christ in early life, and became a member of the 1st Seventh-day Baptist Church in Hopkinton, R. I., She has since been successively a worthy member of the churches of Petersburgh, DeRuyter, and Lincklaen. Of the last, she was a member until death closed her pilgrimage. She is now, without doubt, a member of the church triumphant. J. C.

NOTICE.

The public are also respectfully invited to attend. Evening lectures by the pastor, Eld. Thos. B. Brown, will be appointed as soon as circumstances will permit.

SOUTH-WESTERN ASSOCIATION.

The next meeting of the Seventh-day Baptist South-Western Association will be held with the North Hampton Church, Clark Co., Ohio, commencing on the fifth-day before the second Sabbath in October, 1846. A full delegation from all the churches is desired. And we would say to the brethren of our sister Associations, that we greatly need and earnestly solicit their attendance, counsel, and prayers.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON,
IRA SAYLES, } Principals,

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant andeconomical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trustees.

ALFRED, June 23, 1846.

"OUR COUNTRY—RIGHT OR WRONG."

"Our Country—right or wrong!"—
That were a traitor's song;
Let no true patriot's pen such words indite!
Who loves his native land,

"Our Country—right or wrong!"—
O Christian men! how long
Shall he who died on Calvary plead in vain?
How long unheeded call,
Where War's gash'd victims fall,
While widows, orphans, sisters mourn the slain?

"Our Country—right or wrong!"—
O man of God, be strong!
Take God's whole armor for the holy fray;
Gird thee with Truth:—make Right
Thy breastplate:—in the might
Of God stand steadfast in the evil day!

"Our Country—right or wrong!"—
Each image of the throng
Of ghastly woes that rise upon thy sight,
O let it move thy heart,
Man! man! where'er thou art,
To say: "God guide our struggling country right!"

EXTRAORDINARY PRESERVATION OF HUMAN BODIES.

There is an arched vault, or burying ground, under the church of Kilsyth, in Scotland, which was the burying place of the family of Kilsyth, until the estate was forfeited, and the title became extinct, in the year 1715; since which it has never been used for that purpose, except once. The last earl fled with his family to Flanders, and, according to tradition, was smothered to death, about the year 1717, along with his lady and infant child, and a number of unfortunate Scottish exiles, by the falling in of the roof of the house in which they were assembled. What became of the body of the earl is not known; but the bodies of Lady Kilsyth and her infant were emboweled and embalmed, and soon afterwards sent over to Scotland. They were landed, and lay at Leith for some time in a cellar, whence they were afterwards carried to Kilsyth, and buried in great pomp in the vault above mentioned.

In the spring of 1796, some rude, regardless young men, having paid a visit to this ancient cemetery, tore open the coffin of Lady Kilsyth and her infant. With astonishment and consternation they saw the bodies as perfect as at the hour when they were entombed. For some weeks this circumstance was kept secret; but at last it began to be whispered in several companies, and soon excited great and general curiosity. For several weeks they underwent no visible change, and had they not been sullied with dust and drops of grease from the candles held over them, they might have remained as entire as ever. Many months after, the bodies were as firm as at first; and though pressed with the finger, they did not yield to the touch, but seemed to retain the elasticity of the human body. Even the shroud, though torn by the hands of the regardless multitude, is still strong and free from rot. Every feature and every limb was as full, nay, the very shroud was as clear and as fresh, and the colors of the ribbons as bright, as they were when lodged in the tomb. What rendered the scene more striking and truly interesting was, that the body of her son and only child, the natural heir of the title and estates of Kilsyth, lay at her knee; his features were as composed as if he had only been asleep. His color was as fresh, and his flesh as plump and full, as in the perfect glow of health; the smile of infancy and innocence sat on his lips; his shroud was not only entire, but perfectly clean, without a particle of dust upon it. He seems to have been only a few months old.

Both bodies seemed to have been preserved in some liquid, nearly of the color and appearance of brandy. The whole coffin seemed to have been full of it, and all its contents saturated with it. The body had assumed somewhat the same tinge, but this only served to give a fresher look. It had none of the ghastly, livid hue of death, but rather a copper complexion. It would have been difficult for a chemist to ascertain the nature of this liquid, though perfectly transparent; it had lost all its pungent qualities, its taste being quite vapid. The head was reclined on a pillow; and as the covering decayed, it was found to contain a collection of strong-scented herbs. Balm, sage and mint were easily distinguished, and it was the opinion of many that the body was filled with the same.

Many instances of the artificial preservation of bodies might be mentioned, still more remarkable, though perhaps less interesting, than the preceding. The tomb of Edward the First, who died on the 7th of July, 1307, was opened on the 2d of January, 1770, and after the lapse of 463 years the body was found not decayed; the flesh on the face was a little wasted, but not putrid. The body of Canute the Dane, who got possession of England in 1017, was found very fresh in the year 1766, by the workmen repairing Win chester Cathedral. In the year 1522, the body of William the Conqueror was found as when first buried, in the Abbey Church of Stephen, at Caen: and the body of Matilda, his wife, was found entire in 1502, in the Abbey Church of the Holy Trinity, in the same city.

No device of art, however, for the preservation of the remains of the dead, appears equal to the simple process of plunging them over head and ears in peat moss.

In a manuscript by one Abraham Grey, who lived about the middle of the sixteenth century, now in the possession of his representative, Mr. Goodbehere Grey, of Old Mills, near Aberdeen, it is stated that, in 1569, three Roman soldiers, in the dress of their country, fully equipped with warlike instruments, were dug out of a moss of great extent, called Kazey Moss. When found, after a lapse of probably fifteen hundred years, they "were quite fresh and plump!" [Boston Medical Journal.

The Greatest Wonder of The World.—It has for ages been a great mystery in the minds of men, that such vast quantities of water as are constantly flowing into the Dead Sea, from the river Jordon and many smaller streams, should not fill up this lake and cause it to overflow; and the only manner in which the phenomenon could consistently be accounted for, was by supposing that the Dead Sea had some subterranean outlet, through which its waters escaped to the ocean. But even this supposition has now become wholly invalidated by the result of recent observations taken by a committee of English gentlemen, by which this lake is proved to be 1400 feet below the level of the Mediterranean! The plains surrounding this lake are thus proved to be the lowest lands on the face of the earth. We have hopes that as civilization is progressing in that country, this subject will be further investigated, and that even the bottom of this lake will be in some measure explored, by means of the most perfect diving bells, and other submarine apparatus.

AN ARAB'S FIRST ATTEMPT AT MATRIMONY.

As I found nothing to interest me the first day from the foot of Mount Hor, I drew Said into a conversation about his own private affairs. Asking him if he had a wife, he replied, "No, but I came near having one." His story was as follows: "I said to my sister, I am going to get married to-night. So I put fifty dollars in my pocket, and went and made a great dinner—coffee and every thing—and gave twenty-seven dollars to the woman's friends for her. But, according to Arab custom, I had not seen the woman. Late at night all the men left, and I said to the old man, Where is my wife? He went out, and presently a woman entered, and I said, Who is that? She said, Your wife. I looked at her—a little, old, ugly thing: so I say, No, you not my wife; and in quarter of an hour I was on my way home. I was ashamed next day to see any body. My sister asked me if I was married. I said, No. She asked me where my money was. I told her I lent it. Long time after, one friend ask me if I did not want a wife. I said, What I want with wife? Maybe I not like her when I see her. So, when I want to get married again, I go buy me a slave—a pretty woman from Abyssinia—for $135; then, if I do not like her, she is not my wife, but my slave." He said he had one child, and his slave was about fifteen years old; that she often rode out on a donkey, attended by his mother; that he had beaten her but once, and that for looking through a latticed window into the street. I told him that a Christian can have but one wife, and may not change her. He said, "Suppose she is not good, and you do not love her?" I replied, "No matter, you must keep her." He seemed surprised, and his reply embodied the sentiment of the Jews, as expressed to our Saviour: "If the case of a man be so with his wife, it is not good to marry." [Dr. Durbin.

THE MORMON TEMPLE.

The Hancock Eagle gives the following description of the Temple erected by the Mormons at Nauvoo:

The Temple stands in a most prominent position, on the bluff, which overlooks the lower town and river, and such is the elevation of its spire, that it is distinctly visible from a distance of twenty or thirty miles in various directions. Viewed from the bank of the river, its whole appearance is grand and imposing. The material of which it is chiefly built, is white limestone, which has been worked and faced down to a perfect surface. Its dimensions, as far as we can recollect, are as follows:

Length 128 feet; width 88 feet; hight to comb of roof 77 feet; from the ground to the top of spire 170 feet. The upper windows of the steeple serve as an observatory, from which a magnificent view of the surrounding country may be had. The Mississippi is seen winding its serpentine form along the wooded valley to the North and South—the hills of Iowa rise in bold relief to the Westward, and lose themselves in the blue distance; while the prairies, fields, gardens, and private buildings, lie spread out like a map below. The walls of the temple are of massive stone, and at least two feet thick. On either side, and at the end, are rows of graceful pilasters, crowned with elaborately carved caps, upon the external surface of which are exhibited, in bas relief, the face of the 'man in the moon,' and two hands grasping trumpets. Each pilaster rests upon inverted crescents, and is at least fifty feet long. They are thirty in number, and the united cost of them is estimated at about $100,000. The structure is lighted by four rows of windows, two of which are quadrilateral, and two circular. These, with the other novel architectural embellishments, give the whole pile an original and not unpleasant aspect. All the entrances are from the West, and the immense doorways are gained by a flight of stone steps. The interior contains a basement, (in the center of which stands the celebrated baptismal font,) two great halls which extend nearly the entire length and breadth of the building, and a third hall underneath the roof, with small apartments on either side.

The baptismal font is a most extraordinary work, and will stand a monument of Mormon extravagance and grotesqueness of taste. It is an immense stone reservoir, resting upon the backs of twelve oxen, also cut out of stone, and as "large as life." The effect of a first view of these rigid animals, standing in such a singular position, and wearing such mysterious countenances, is somewhat startling; but a feeling of superstition soon gives way to curiosity, and the beholder is lost in wonder at the magnitude of the design, and extraordinary amount of labor that must have been expended in the erection of the work.

The hall on the first floor was intended as the regular meeting-place of the congregation, and when freed from the rubbish and surplus timber that now encumber it, will have a beautiful and imposing effect. The architectural decorations are chaste and rich; and the two grand pulpits at the East and West ends give to the whole an appearance of oriental magnificence. The attic (as it may be called) is lighted from the roof, and was designed for a large school-room. Leaving the body of the building, you ascend to the bell room of the steeple, thence to the clock room, and last to the observatory.

The immense structure is a chef d'œuvre of architecture, and will rank in grandeur with the largest and most costly edifices of modern times.

The entire cost of its erection is estimated at between 700 and 800 thousand dollars.

A Cool Excuse.—A gentleman was looking attentively at some amusing caricatures, in the window of a print shop, when on a sudden he felt some one at his pocket. As there was only one person standing near him, he instantly turned round upon him, and looking him full in the face, said, "Your hand, sir, was in my pocket!" "Was it, sir?" the other very calmly replied; "I really beg your pardon, if it was; but the weather is so very cold, one is glad to put one's hands anywhere!"

LIVING WITHOUT FOOD.

Most Extraordinary Case.—Capt. Mulhollen, an old and respectable planter of Rapides, whose death has been announced two or three times, was still alive some few days ago, having been forty-seven days without a particle of food or nourishment of any kind. A little water, put into his mouth by means of a spoon, is the only thing that has passed his lips in all this time. The case is said to baffle the skill or comprehension of all the medical men in the neighborhood. [N. O. Delta.

To the Editor of the New-York Tribune:—

The "medical men" mentioned in the foregoing would find their "skill and comprehension" enlightened to their entire satisfaction, if they would be enterprising enough to examine the 2d vol. page 426, of that monument of physiological wisdom, The Animal Kingdom, of Swedenborg; wherein he declares that the body is nourished in part from invisible or ethereal aliments sucked in by the innumerable little mouths of the skin, as "is convincingly demonstrated by those who have continued for months, years, and still longer periods, without visible and terrestrial food, and whose life has been renewed from day to day without blood; to say nothing of various species of living creatures that live for whole winters, and even for ages, upon no other than invisible support, as is perfectly well known to be the case with vipers and other serpents, with crocodiles, swallows, the chameleon, the ostrich, the balm cricket; nay, even with those most voracious creatures, bears, which, entering their winter dens with their cubs, lie through the bruneal months without a chance of food, sucking their paws with a constant murmuring sound, and yet meanwhile are not emaciated, but, if anything, fattened, as shown by those that have been roused up and driven from their lurking-places," &c.

Again: "Respecting the subjects of adispia, or those who have abstained from food for long periods of time, see Martin Schurig and other writers, [he enumerates nine.] C. M. Adolphus relates the case of a Silesian girl who took no food for nine months; Benedictus, of a person at Venice who took no food for forty-six days. J. M. Hesspus mentions several similar cases from other authors: for example, of a native of Almeria who neither ate nor drank for four months; of one Margaret Rhodia, who took no sustenance for more than sixteen months; of a young female, a native of Germany, with whom this was the case for two years. Johannes Weir gives an account of Henricus, at Hapalt, who abstained on two occasions for forty days. Paulus Lentalus has published a little treatise respecting one Apollonia Schriecra, who abstained for eighteen years; and Josephus Quercetanus and Gregorias Horytius have also made mention of the same person. Another instance is that of a girl at Spire, Margaritia Sagfretia by name, whom Ferdinand, King of the Romans, in 1542, consigned for the purpose of starvation to the charge of his own physician and another person, both extremely trustworthy men; and Gerardus Bucoldianus, physician to the King, and a witness difficult to deceive, declares that this girl took no food from 1530 to 1540, and again, after this, not for three years. Johannes Langius also mentions the case. Guil. Fabricius Hildanus gives an account of a girl at Menos, named Eva Flegen who abstained for sixteen years; Johannes Walfins, of a girl living near the town of Commercy, in the district of Toul, with whom this was the case for ten months; and Petrus Gregorius relates that the asitia of this patient lasted for twelve years. Franciscus Citesius relates the case of a girl at Confolent who remained without food for fourteen years. See also the account of Brother Nicholas, a hermit, who did the like for nineteen years and six months; of a boy in Brunswick who lived in this way for four years; of a girl at Hallenstadt who lived for ten years without food, though not without drink; of a Norwegian girl who abstained for nearly a whole year, only eating and drinking when compelled to do so; of a Swedish maid who abstained from food for ten years and drink for eight, and whose case was carefully watched by many, and is treated of by Dr. Dochelius, Professor of Medicine in the University of Lund, and by Jesper Swedberg, Doctor of Theology and Bishop of Sacra, my beloved father."

The authorities and references for all these remarkable cases are carefully given in notes at the bottom of the page of the book.

Your obedient servant,
WM. TURNER, M. D.

A TURKISH BATH.

In the antechamber there was a marble fountain of cold water, and around the walls were high divans with mats. On these some dozen Turks, who had just come out of the bath, were reclining very comfortably, smoking their pipes and sipping coffee, with towels thrown around them. Obeying the manager, I mounted on a divan, was undressed, and had a large towel wound around me, and a pair of heavy wooden clogs put on my feet. In this array I was led through several rooms, vaulted, and lighted by small crocks, closed with glass, built into the ceiling, to a small inner chamber, the temperature of which was so high as to make the perspiration start from every pore. In each of the rooms were men lying on the marble pavement by hot fountains, throwing the water over them at will. I lay down upon the polished marble floor beside one of these fountains, and in a few minutes an attendant came in, with no other dress than a piece of linen girt about him, and commenced rubbing me with a stiff hair-cloth. I stood the operation as philosophically as possible, and let the fellow turn me over and over at pleasure, and rub away to his heart's content. Both of us were pretty well tired of the operation before he left me to make way for another, who came burdened with a vessel of perfumed soap and water. He also turned me about as seemed good to him, washed me down well, and then drenched me from head to foot with pure hot water from the fountain; after which he left me to take my ease by the fountain side, and throw as much water over myself as I pleased. After a while came another attendant, who wrapped me up in towels, gave me a pair of clogs, and led me back again to the antechamber, where I lay down, covered with towels, on a pallet, rejected the proffered pipe, but drank a cup of delicious coffee, and fell asleep. I awoke wonderfully refreshed, dressed, and returned home. [Dr. Durbin.

Stevens' Grain Cleaner.—This is a new invention, the novelties of which are, that the operations of chaffing and screening are entirely independent of each other, the chaffing being done by a strong blast of wind, without the aid of riddles or screen; the fan or blower is situated in the lower part of the machine, and by a turn in the aperture through which the wind passes, it is made to act upon the grain twice, thereby instantly effecting a thorough separation. The grain then passes through a revolving screen which completes the operation. The hopper is formed by the necessary arrangement of the case and machinery, and in the bottom, is situated a roller armed with spikes, which draws in the grain with rapidity and regularity. Upon one of the gudgeons of this roller, out-side of the case, is fastened a wheel with a handle, which drives the fan and screen; the screen is made by winding the wire upon a strong frame and straining it perfectly tight, which keeps the spaces equal, as there are no cross wires to obstruct the grain, the operation is more effectual. The claims of superiority in this, are that it is more compact and durable than others, will clean much faster and better, and is not liable to get out of repair. The cost, says the Inventor, will be about the same as those in common use.

Printer's Greek.—A brother "typo" out in the west, recently "got married," and in sending a notice of the happy event to the Wayne Co. Standard, accompanied it with a generous allowance of wedding cake, the receipt of which the editor acknowledges in the following classic terms. It takes a "P. T." (Professor of Typography,) to understand it; but we assure our readers that it is all as "straight as shooting," and well and beautifully expressed:

"With the above message, from the hands of the fair bride, were the accompanying documents, in the shape of various large slices of most delightful wedding cake. We make our most respectful bow to the happy twain; and m⁓the opportunity to return our thanks for this almost un||ed act of liberality. May the matrimonial chase which locks the form of our brother typo, justify all his preconceived impressions. In whatever § of the country he may roam, whether called upon to face the ——ing waves of adverse fortune, or stand before the †† and ‡‡ of his enemies, may his life be such that when the ☞ of death shall be laid upon him, and the . of his existence shall draw to a close, he may produce a clean proof and a clear title to an honorable ¶ in the page of history, as well as an eternal inheritance beyond the ******."

Rather 'Cute.—A few days since, the city of New York was thrown into quite an agitation by the circulation of an Extra Sun containing the "full particulars" of the killing of Van Amburgh the lion-tamer, by one of his pet tigers. This horrible event was said to have occurred at Woonsocket, R. I., and naturally created a great deal of feeling for the unfortunate man. The story, however, was effectually discovered in the course of an hour to be a complete hoax, and the sale of the extras was suddenly stopped. The funniest part of this dreadful tragedy, however, consisted in the appearance, at about 1 o'clock, of an impromptu lithograph, purporting to be an accurate representation of poor Van Amburgh under the most stringent claws of tiger-law! The prints sold pretty well, we believe, and the feat of the engraver who got them out throws the enterprise of the Illustrated News entirely into the shade.

War without Powder.—Messers. Reynolds & Brothers, of Kinderhook, have invented an instrument which promises to be a most effective weapon of attack or defense. It is called a Projecting Engine, and throws balls with astonishing force and frequency. An experimental model, fitted to throw 1 1-2 ounce lead bullets, with the force of two men at the crank, drove these balls through a two inch plank at the distance of 150 yards. The projectile force is obtained by the centrifugal tendency of the ball to fly off from a horizontal wheel, while revolving at a very high velocity, and the engine seems to be perfectly manageable, delivering its fatal messengers at any point of the compass desired, and at the rate of twenty-six balls per second!

One, as good as a Thousand.—"A lawsuit was lately instituted in Spain, in which the heirs of a rich man sued the church, for the recovery of moneys paid under the will of the deceased, to purchase, at the fair market price, twelve thousand masses for his soul. The priests, though they took the money, objected to the labor, and the pope, at their request, abridged it, pronouncing that twelve masses should be as beneficial as twelve thousand. The council for the church, in answer to this allegation for nonpreformance of contract, produced the pope's certificate, that the soul had been delivered by the efficacy of those masses, and, that value being thus received, there was not any breach of contract."

The Arabs.—It is said by travelers that the wandering Arabs are often more attentive than the people of Christendom to the instruction of their children in the knowledge of religion and letters. An empty tent is appropriated in each for the purposes of religious worship, for the entertainment of strangers, and for a place of morning instruction to the children. In that tent all the children assemble every morning before day break, and are by an Iman, or other religious person, taught to read the prayers from the Koran, which are put before them in Arabic characters inscribed on boards, and also to commit those prayers to memory.

Woman's Voice.—How consoling to the mind oppressed by heavy sorrow, is the voice of an amiable woman. Like sacred music, it imparts to the soul a feeling of celestial serenity, and as a gentle zephyr, refreshes the wearied senses with its soft and melifluous tones. Riches may avail much in the hour of affliction; the friendships of man may alleviate for a time the bitterness of woe; but the angel voice of woman is capable of producing a lasting effect on the heart, and communicates a sensation of delicious composure which the mind never before experienced, even in the moments of its highest felicity.

"Would you like me to give you a dollar?" asked a little boy, of a gentlemen he met in the street. "Certainly," was the reply. "Very well then, do unto others as you would others should do unto you," said the boy.

SONG OF THE LABORERS.

Air—"Sparkling and bright."

Holy and pure is the labor sure,
In the rugged path we're treading,
'Twill lead us on, till the race is won,
For 'tis ever upward leading!
Then never shrink, for 'tis bliss to think
That our cause is true and holy;
Let us persevere in our calling here,
Be our station e'er so lowly.

Labor is love, and our deeds shall prove
That we're moved by kindly feeling,
And Labor's light when the heart's aright,
For 'tis only health revealing.
By toiling hands the record stands,
Shall come both wealth and pleasure,
And the time will come when we find our home,
And may claim a fadeless treasure.

Love for the Dead.—The love that survives the tomb, says Irving, is one of the noblest attributes of the soul. If it has its woes, it has likewise its delights; and when the overwhelming burst of grief is called into the gentle tear or recollection, then the sudden anguish and convulsive agony over the present ruins of all we most loved are softened away into pensive meditations, of all that was in the days of its loveliness. Who would root such a sorrow from the heart, though it may sometimes throw a passing cloud over the bright hours of gaiety, or spread a deeper sadness over the hour of gloom; yet who would exchange it even for the song of pleasure or the burst of revelry? No, there is a voice from the tomb sweeter than songs; there is a remembrance of the dead, to which we turn even from the charm of the living.

Wonders of Philosophy.—The body of every spider contains four little masses pierced with a multitude of imperceptible holes, each hole permitting the passage of a single thread; all the threads, to the amount of a thousand to each mass, join together when they come out, and make the single thread, with which the spider spins its web; so that what we call a spider's thread, consists of more than four thousand united. Lewenhock, by means of microscopes, observed spiders, no bigger than a grain of sand, which spun thread so fine, that it took four thousand of them to equal in magnitude a single hair.

Golden India.—Such has been the accumulation of the precious metals and stones in India, where the mines are indigenous, that it is generally estimated that Nadir Shah, in 1740, carried away not less than £400,000,000 sterling! In Jahanqueir's autobiography he relates that a golden platform around his throne weighed 400 lbs.; and that his throne and diadem were worth £4,000,000. When he married his minister's daughter, he presented her with as many laces as amounted to £7,000,000, and with a necklace of forty beads, each bead costing him £2,000. The province of Bearn on one occasion furnished about £4,000,000 of gold, and the same sovereign spent besides, nearly £2,000,000 on the tomb of his father Akbar, which formed one of the wonders of Golden India.

Gambling.—An individual, some time ago, published a statement in a German paper, the result of his own observation for two years—that of six hundred individuals who were in the habit of visiting gambling houses, he states that nearly one half not only lost considerable sums, but were finally stripped of all means of subsistence, and ended their days by self-murder. Of the rest, not less than one hundred finish their career by becoming swindlers or robbers on the highway.

Military Duty.—A Yankee being warned to do military duty, demanded to be excused on the plea that he was once drafted to go into the army; but that he procured a substitute, and of course was entitled to the same privileges as if he had gone himself; and as his substitute was killed, it was plain that if he had gone himself, he would have been killed, and thus forever would have been exempt from further duty. The plea was accepted by acclamation.

'Tis vain to regret a misfortune when it is past retrieving: but few have philosophy enough to practice it. A famous physician ventured five thousands guineas upon a project in the South Sea. When he was told at Garroways that it was all lost: "Why," says he, "'tis but going up five thousand pair of stairs more." This answer deserves a statue.

REASONS FOR KEEPING SUNDAY.

We have been not a little interested and instructed by reading the Report of the Board of Directors of the American Sabbath Tract Society, presented at the late Annual Meeting of that Society. A portion of the Report is made up of extracts from the journals of the tract distributors. These extracts give the reasons of different persons for keeping the first day of the week, and exhibit very clearly the confusion which prevails among them. How any person can read the Report without feeling that there is something wrong about the practice which has to be sustained by such conflicting arguments, we cannot tell. The following extracts will serve as specimens:—

January 11th.—During my visits through the day, nearly every one to whom I put the question, "Why do you regard the first day of the week as a Sabbath?" gave one uniform answer, "I do not know, unless it is because I was brought up to keep it." One man said—(and he appeared to be honest in it)—that he believed God commenced the work of creation on Monday, because he did not believe he would work on Sunday; consequently Sunday was the seventh day.

Jan. 12th.—Found some who appeared much pleased on receiving tracts, and expressed an anxiety to examine the subject. One good old Baptist sister said, she always thought that Monday ought to be called the first day of the week, and then the Sabbath would come on the seventh day.

Jan. 13th.—One individual to whom I presented a tract said, that if a vote was to be taken throughout the community to decide which day should be observed, he should vote in favor of keeping the seventh day; but that it was not convenient now for him to keep it, because he wished to attend the meetings which were held on Sunday. One individual, who is a man of talents and of considerable influence, said that if I had any tracts to prove that the seventh day was the Sabbath, he should be glad to read them, but he did not wish to read any that were designed to prove that the first day was not the Sabbath, for he never believed it to be such. He said that he was educated among the Friends, and was taught to believe that the seventh-day Sabbath was abolished; but since the agitation of the question in this place, he had thought much upon the subject, and the more he thought of the benefits of the Sabbath to community, and how much our moral and physical nature needed a day of rest, the more he was convinced that God had never abolished an institution which was so well calculated to benefit the human race. His wife, a very intelligent member of the Presbyterian Church, said that the Bible did not teach a first-day Sabbath, and although she was educated in the observance of that day, yet she did not believe it to be the Sabbath of the Bible. A Baptist sister to whom I offered some tracts said, that she was satisfied that she was right in keeping the first day of the week, and did not wish to read upon the subject.

Jan. 17th.—A Methodist exhorter, upon whom I called, said, that it could be proved from history that the early Christians observed the first day as a Sabbath—that there was a history to that effect, though he had not seen it. That appeared to be all that he had to support his observance of the first day. While at his house, some travelers called. One of them, a Baptist minister, said that the seventh day was the Sabbath, and should be kept, if we could tell which it was; but that the reckoning of time had been lost, so that no one could tell which was originally the seventh day; and if we kept one seventh part of time, God would accept it, and not condemn us for not keeping the original seventh day, seeing we could not tell which it was. Another, an aged Baptist brother, said that there was no Sabbath—that under the Gospel dispensation all days were alike; in proof of which, he read the 3d chapter of 2d Corinthians. Another, not a professor of religion, said that he had always believed that the seventh day was the Sabbath, but that his wife would not keep it, and so he had never regarded any day.

Feb. 10th—12th.—Distributed tracts in two townships. Found the people willing to converse upon the Sabbath question, and they thankfully received our tracts. Some professed to believe that the seventh day only was the Sabbath, but did not observe it because it was not convenient. One individual said, that about three years since his mind was called to the examination of the subject. He was never acquainted with any who observed the seventh day, and could find nothing to read upon the subject but the Bible. During his examination he conversed with ministers and others in order to satisfy himself that Sunday was the Sabbath, but instead of that, he became convinced that it was not, and that it was his duty to keep the seventh day. This he at once began to do. He was, however, compelled to work six days. To do this he must work on Sunday, to the annoyance of his neighbors. This he did not feel authorized to do, and so came to the conclusion that it would be right for him to practice as his neighbors did, until he could convince them that the seventh day was the Sabbath, and that they ought to keep it. This he had since been trying to do, and he thinks that some of them are convinced, but they are not willing to keep it. I found this man to be "mighty in the Scriptures" upon this subject. About the time that he became satisfied that the seventh day was the Sabbath, he had a conversation with the circuit preacher, (being himself a Methodist,) who told him that he believed the same, but that he had two reasons for not keeping it—first, that he was a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and if he embraced the Sabbath he would be silenced as a minister and excluded from the Church; second, that in order to have church fellowship he must unite with the poor Sabbatarians, which he was unwilling to do. As might have been supposed, the declaration from a minister of the church, and a professed follower of the meek and lowly Jesus, that he would not obey him because he should be despised and rejected of men, and compelled to take up his lot with the poor Sabbatarians, astonished this simple-hearted Christian beyond measure. He was very solicitous that I should visit him again, and bring with me a minister to preach a few times in that place, and lecture upon the subject of the Sabbath.

After this I fell in company with a man living about sixty miles distant—a member of the Free-will Baptist Church. He appeared to be convinced, during a conversation with him, that the seventh day was still the Sabbath of the Lord, and that it was his duty to keep it, and said that if, after examining the Bible a little more, he still remained of the same opinion, he shouldkeep it himself and try to persuade the church to which he belonged to do the same. He was very anxious that I should visit his place and distribute tracts, promising to go himself with me through the church and society.

In concluding his reports, this agent or colporteur says:—I think I may say that the Sabbath question is exciting a good deal of interest in this section. Many are ready to acknowledge the claims of the seventh day, who have not either religion or moral courage enough to carry out their principles in their practice. Many I find who admit that the seventh day is the Sabbath, but excuse themselves for not observing it because they say they cannot tell which it is. This is the position taken by the Presbyterian minister at C. He holds that before the change from old to new style, the reckoning of time had been lost, so that it is now impossible to tell which is the seventh day. If we knew, it would be our duty to keep it; but as long as we do not, it is as well to keep the first day as any other. This is now a common ocurse of reasoning with those who do not contend for a change of the day, and has great weight with a certain class of minds. A tract upon this point would do good.

I have not had an opportunity to ascertain the effect generally produced upon the minds of those who have read the tracts; but I firmly believe that sooner or later a harvest of Sabbatarians will be the result of the seed sown. I think I have good reason so to hope in view of one fact which I will here relate to you as a matter of encouragement to labor in the tract cause:—

The first Sabbath Vindicator that found its way into the town where I live, was sent to a clerk in a store. A deacon of the Baptist Church saw it lying on the counter, and requested the loan of it. After reading it through, he compared it with the Bible. He soon became convinced that the seventh day was the only day recognized in the Bible as the Sabbath. He had never in his life been acquainted with an individual who so regarded it. He however immediately changed his practice, although strongly opposed by the church to which he was attached, and also by his own family and friends. One result of his course has been, the organization of a Sabbath-keeping Church in the place, of sixteen members, all of whom were converts to the Sabbath through the means, under God, of one copy of the Sabbath Vindicator.

We may not expect, however, that many who have grown up, and have connected themselves with the first-day churches, will ever change their practice. As a general thing, they will believe and practice according to the creeds of the churches to which they belong, be they right or wrong. They think of their minister as a Catholic once said to me—"Our priests are learned men; they know which is the right way." As far as my knowledge extends, where the subject has been discussed the young people are growing up in the belief that the seventh day is the Sabbath. In after life, should they be brought to love God, they may be led to love and obey the truth in reference to his holy Sabbath, instead of obeying the traditions and commandments of men.

The Westminster Catechism quoted as of equal authority with the Bible.

I gave to an old and respectable looking man a tract. He seemed to be much pleased, and said he was a friend of the Sabbath. But on being informed that it was published by the Seventh-day Baptists, he appeared somewhat perplexed; his countenance fell; he began a sort of fault-finding, and said that the Lord had changed the Sabbath to Sunday. I asked him where he learned that? He replied, that the Bible said so. I asked him where, but he could not tell. I then asked him if he could repeat the passage. He answered that he could, and on further solicitation repeated the following: "From the beginning of the world to the resurrection of Christ, God appointed the seventh-day to be the weekly Sabbath, and the first day of the week ever since, to continue to the end of the world, which is the Christian Sabbath." I informed him that we did not acknowledge his Catechism to be Scripture; but he affirmed it to be true, and this, to him, was equal to "an oath for confirmation, which is the end of all strife." I saw in this man the necessity of correctly instructing our children.

Prayer.—It is not the length but the strength of prayer, that is required; not the labor of the lip, but the travail of the heart that prevails with God. "Let thy words be few," as Solomon says, but full and to the purpose.

READING.

Of all the amusements that can possibly be imagined for a hard-working man after his daily toil, or in its intervals, there is nothing like reading an interesting newspaper or book. It calls for no bodily exertion, of which he has already had enough, or perhaps too much. It transports him into a livelier and gayer, and more diversified and interesting scene; and while he enjoys himself there, he may forget the evils of the present moment fully as much as if he were ever so drunk, with the great advantage of finding himself the next day with the money in his pocket, or at least laid out in real necessaries and comforts for himself and family—and without a headache. Nay, it accompanies him to his next day's work; and if what he had been reading be anything above the idlest and lightest, gives him something to think of, besides the mere mechanical drudgery of his every-day occupation—something he can enjoy while absent, and look forward to with pleasure. If I were to pray for a taste which should stand in stead under every variety of circumstances, and be a source of happiness and cheerfulness to me through life, and a shield against its ills, however things might go amiss, and the world frown upon me, it would be a taste for reading.

BIBLE DISTRIBUTION.

We cheerfully make room for the following communication, and commend the object which it presents to the attention of our brethren.

To the Friends of the Bible throughout the United States:—

Dear Brethren:—The City Bible Society of the City of New York, auxiliary to the American and Foreign Bible Society, invites your attention to the following communication.

The object of the City Bible Society is the distribution of the Word of God among the poor and destitute, irrespective of locality. As its name imports, this Society is located in the City of New York, and is dependent to a great extent for its efficiency and usefulness upon the friends of Bible distribution in that particular section of the Union.

The history of our country shows that those portions which are newly settled, or thinly populated, most require the aid of the benevolent in furnishing the means of religious knowledge and improvement. This peculiar feature of our population has for several years engrossed the attention of this Society. The City Bible Society has ever sought and is now seeking to reach those who are destitute of religious privileges wherever such destitution has been known to exist. While Providence has smiled propitiously on our efforts, and blessed them even beyond our expectation, it has also furnished still greater incentives to activity and enterprise. Truly we can say the dispensation of charity is oftentimes its own reward. While the City Bible Society has thus sought to supply the destitute with the Word of God, its own usefulness has apparently increased its resources, as though a promise of rejoicing was returned even to the unknown giver. The City Bible Society has now on hand a supply of Bibles and Testaments adapted to general circulation, which it is proposed to furnish to ministers, colporteurs, and others, to be sold for a reasonable price, or in their discretion at their nominal value, or even to be circulated gratuitously among those who are unable otherwise to purchase them. While the City Bible Society, under the blessing of God, relies upon the generosity of a public heretofore of approved liberality, for the means of distribution, it also seeks to reach every destitute village and hamlet in the land.

From the organization of the City Bible Society even to the present time, one great obstacle to the consummation of this enterprise has been the want of the right kind of information respecting particular sections of the country. It is true that the Society has often heard complaints of great destitution prevalent in some specified county or section of a State, but at the same time no definite information concerning the benevolent and religious men who are residents of that immediate vicinity is in its possession. Similar statements have also emanated from the religious press. Doubtless if we knew the names, residences and post offices of such men, they would readily co-operate with us and communicate all the information requisite, and also fully reciprocate our wishes and efforts. But as yet we must unwillingly say that to many such we still are strangers. The City Bible Society, desirous of sending the Bible wheresoever the wants and exigency of the people may require, invites all who are willing to give their countenance and support to this great and good cause, to communicate the names of ministers and others who will co-operate with us, and also to furnish information as to the destitution of particular sections and localities, with which they are acquainted. The Bible is emphatically the Book of the world. It speaks a language and breathes a sentiment consonant to every human bosom, and while it cheers and gladdens the pathway of the children of calamity and misfortune, it also imparts to them the consolations and blessings of a holy religion. We ask all who love and revere the Bible to think, feel, and act with us.

Ministers, editors, agents, colporteurs, clerks of religious bodies, and others who possess the information desired, will confer a great favor by communicating with us and sending us the minutes and proceedings of different religious bodies with which they are connected.

This communication is addressed indiscriminately to all who appreciate the Bible. The sympathy and efforts of fellow laborers who also rejoice in the merits of a risen Saviour, would greatly accelerate the triumphs of the Christian religion. In behalf of the City Bible Society,

Emery Townsend,
Chairman of the Committee of Circulation.

THE RHODE ISLAND SABBATH UNION.

The good Book tells us of a class men in old times who supposed that gain was godliness. It strikes us that the writer of the following paragraph may justly claim some relationship to those men. We copy from Zion's Advocate:—

"The Rhode Island Sabbath Union held its annual meeting on Tuesday, the 19th ult., in this city, at the First Baptist meeting house. The meeting during the day was interesting, from the facts which were related in reference to keeping and violating the Sabbath; but the attendance was small—lamentably so for a meeting of such importance. Very few besides the clergy were out. It appears that the people of Rhode Island have coupled the idea of 'religious liberty,' with doing as they like on the Lord's day—with a neglect to sanctify the day. There is at present room for improvement, though a far better observance of the day prevails than formerly. It has been a common thing in large factories to make repairs on Lord's day. This originated in part from paying double wages to those who would work on that day, and in part from a competition in companies to see who would turn off the most work. Facts were brought out which showed that Sabbath-keeping establishments located on the same stream in close juxta-position, and in all respects equal with Sabbath-breaking mills, have had to stop less times in the week for repairs, and of course done more work and have less repairs to do as a whole. On the contrary, while a bonus for working on Lord's day was given, the machinery some how was wonderfully rheumatic. Shrewd agents have begun to see the economy of Sabbath-keeping. The evil is now fast going into desuetude, and is nigh gone. This society have employed the labors of the Rev. Dr. Edwards part of the year past, and have put a copy of his 'Manual' in every family in the State (25,000 copies) gratuitously."

THE TWO BROTHERS.

The site occupied by the temple of Solomon was formerly a cultivated field, possessed in common by two brothers. One of them was married and had several children; the other was unmarried. They lived together, however, cultivating, in the greatest harmony possible, the property they had inherited from their father.

The harvest season had arrived. The two brothers bound up their sheaves, made two equal stacks of them, and left them on the field. During the night the unmarried was struck with an excellent thought. My brother, said he to himself, has a wife and children to support; it is not just that my share of the harvest should be as large as his. Upon this he arose, and took from his stack several sheaves, which he added to those of his brother; and this he did with as much secresy as if he had been committing an evil action, in order that his brotherly offering might not be refused. On the same night the other brother awoke and said to his wife, 'My brother lives alone, without a companion; he has no one to assist him in his labor, nor to reward him for his toils—while God has bestowed on me a wife and children; it is not right that we should take from our common fields as many sheaves as he, since we have already more than he has—domestic happiness. If you consent, we shall, by adding secretly a certain number of our sheaves to his stack, by way of compensation, and without his knowledge, see his portion of the harvest increased.' This project was approved and immediately put into execution.

In the morning, each of the brothers went to the field, and was much surprised at seeing the stacks still equal. During several successive nights the same contrivance was repeated on both sides; for as each kept adding to his brother's store, the stacks always remained the same. But one night, both having stood sentinel to dive into the cause of this miracle, they met, each bearing the sheaves, mutually destined for the other. It was thus all elucidated, and they rushed into each other's arms, each grateful to heaven for having so good a brother.

Now, says the legend, the place where so good an idea had simultaneously occurred to the two brothers, and with so much pertinacity, must have been acceptable to God. Men blessed it, and Israel chose it, there to erect the house of the Lord!

GEMS ON PRAYER.

From Bishop Hopkins on the Commandments.

"In the morning, prayer is the key that opens to us the treasury of God's mercies and blessings: in the evening, it is the key that shuts us up under his protection and safeguard."

"It is less reproachfnl to tender God no service, than to perform it slightly and ceremoniously: the one is disobedience, the other contempt."

"Sacrifices, which under the Jewish economy were the greatest part of God's solemn worship, were commanded to be offered up with fire; and no other fire could sanctify them but that miraculously sent down from heaven .... So truly, all our christian sacrifices both of praise and prayer, must be offered up to God with fire; and that fire which alone can sanctify them mtst be darted down from heaven—the celestial flame of zeal and love which comes down from heaven, and hath a natural tendency to ascend thither again, and to carry up our hearts and souls upon its wings with it."

"God is not delighted with the ostentation of performance, but with the sincerity of intention; for every one is delighted with that which doth most of all declare some singular excellency that is in himself; but it is God's excellency and prerogative to contemplate the heart, to weigh and consider the spirits of men; and therefore he is chiefly delighted in the unfeigned desires and breathings of the heart after him, because by these we own him to be an all-knowing God."

THE HISTORY OF LIFE.

Day dawned. Within a curtained room,
Filled to faintness with perfume,
A lady lay at point of doom.

Day closed. A child has seen the light,
But for the lady fair and bright,
She rested in undreaming night.

Spring came. The lady's grave was green,
And near it oftentimes was seen,
A gentle boy with thoughtless mein.

Years fled. He wore a manly face,
And struggled in the world's rough race,
And won at last a lofty place.

And then he died. Behold before ye,
Humanity's brief sum and story,
Life, Death, and all there is of—Glory.

DEATH OF MAHOMET.

In Medina, feeliug that his death was fast approaching, he ascended the pulpit from which he had so often preached, and thus addressed himself to the surrounding crowd:—"Oh! ye faithful, if any one of you have reason to complain that I have ill-treated him by blows, here is my body, let him return them; if I have wounded the reputation of any one, let him treat me in the same manner; if I have taken silver from any one, I am ready to restore it on the spot." A man here interrupting him, and demanding payment of a debt of three drachms, Mahomet paid him, and said, "It is more easy to suffer shame in this world itan in the other." This task finished, he betook himself to his bed, which he never more quitted. The evenine before his death he would fain have dictated a new chapter of the Koran; but the friends who stood round him wovld not allow it, thinking that his weakened mind might perplex his followers with some strange doctrine. It weıe better if they had permitted him; for, as the traveler, when he gains the summit of a hill, looks back, and perceives not only the road by which he has come, but also the position in, and relation to the surrounding country, so Mahomet, at that critical moment, set free from the influence of prejudice or passion, may have seen more clearly how far his own conduct had harmonized with that plan which his conscience pointed out as the plan of the Creator. Haply, if he had been permitted to speak, he might have modified much, and suppressed some of the doctrines which have, since then, so troubled and perplexed the world. But they would not let him speak—so the night passed in weeping and watching; and when the morning dawned, there was a sonnd of lamentation on on the minaret and the house-top, whilst couriers went forth on swift-footed camels to proclaim amongst the tribes that their lawgiver was dead.

And What Next?—A gentleman riding near the city, overtook a well dressed young man, and invited him to a seat in his carriage. "And what (said the gentleman to the young stranger) are your plans for the future?" "I am a clerk," replied the young man, "and my hope is to succeed and get into business for myself." "And what next?" said the gentleman. "Why, I intend to marry and set up an establishment of my own," said the youth. "And what next?" continued the interrogator. "Why, to continue in business and accumulate wealth." "And what next?" "To retire from business and enjoy the fruit of my lahors." "And what next?" "It is the lot of all to die, and I of course cannot escape," replied the young man. "And what uext?" once more asked the gentleman; but the young man had no answer to make—he had no purposes that reached beyond the present life.

How many young men are in precisely the same condition?—their plans embrace only this life—what pertains to getting wealth and enjoying lite. What pertains to the world to come, has no place in all their plans.

Timely Advice.—The following anecdote is related of the late Rev. John Fletcher, by one of his parishioners, as characteristic of the man:

"When a young man, he was married by Mr. Fletcher, who said to him as soon as the service was concluded, and he was about to make the accustomed entry, 'Well, William, you have had your name entered in our register once before this.' 'Yes, sir, at my baptism.' 'And now, your name will be entered a second time. You have no doubt thought much about your present step, and made proper preparations for it in many different ways.' 'Yes, sir.' 'Recollect that a third entry of your name,—the register of your burial, will sooner or later take place. Think, then, about death, and make preparations for that also, lest it overtake you as a thief in the night.' This person is now walking in the ways of the Lord, and states that he often adverts to this and other things which his serious and affectionate pastor found frequent occasion to say to him."

Anecdote of Dr. Rush.—Dr. Rush was perhaps one of the most untiring students that ever lived. Two young physicians were conversing in his presence once, and one of them said, "when I finished my studies"—"When you finished your studies!" said the Doctor abruptly, "why you must be a happy man to have finished so young. I do not expect to finish mine while I live." The writer once asked him, how he had been able to collect such an amount of information and facts as his publications and lectures contained. "I have been able to do it," replied he, "by economizing my time as Mr. Westley did. I have not lost one hour in amusement for the last thirty years." And taking a note-book from his pocket, and showing it to me, he said, "I fill such a book as this once a week with observations and thoughts which occur to me, and facts collected in the rooms of my patients, and these are preserved and used."

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, July 9, 1846.

FAREWELL MEETING OF MISSIONARIES.

On third-day afternoon of last week, the Baptist Church in Baldwin Place, Boston, was filled by a company who had met to bid farewell to the band of missionaries about to sail for Burmah. The occasion is said to have been one of deep and solemn interest. All the missionaries were present, consisting of Mr. and Mrs. Judson, John Taylor Jones, of Siam, Mr. and Mrs. Beecher, Mr. and Mrs. Harris, and Miss Lillybridge. After the usual devotional exercises, the Rev. Mr. Stow delivered an address, designed to show that in the rise and progress of the Burman Mission the interposition of God was as real and authoritative as it was in the call of Abraham or in the mission of Peter to Cæsarea. He contended that from first to last there was not a humanly-contrived link in the chain of events. Many years ago, Dr. Morse said, in a notice of Burmah, "Here are two missionaries supported by the Baptists; it is supposed they will be obliged to leave on account of the opposition of the Government." Contrast this statement of human probabilities with the present prospects of the mission, and see what the Lord has done.

The instructions to the missionaries were read by Rev. Mr. Peck, Secretary of the Board, after which Mr. Judson made a few remarks, and requested Rev. Mr. Hague to read a farewell address which he had prepared for the occasion. The address speaks of the changes which have taken place since Mr. Judson sailed from this country in 1812, and urges in view of them a vigorous prosecution of the missionary work. But we cannot do it justice by a mere notice, and will therefore copy it entire, as follows:

"There are periods in the lives of men, who experience much change of scene, and variety of adventure, when they seem to themselves to be subject to some supernatural illusion, or wild, magical dream,—when they are ready, amid the whirl of conflicting recollections, to doubt their own personal identity,—and, like steersmen in a storm, feel that they must keep a steady eye to the compass, and a strong arm to the wheel. The scene spread out before me, seems, on retrospection, to be identified with the past, and, at the same time, to be reaching forward and foreshadowing the future. At one moment, the lapse of thirty-four years is annihilated; the scenes of 1812 are again present; and this assembly—how like that which commended me to God, on first leaving my native shores for the distant East. But, as I look around, where are the well known faces of Spring, and Worcester, and Dwight? Where are Lyman, and Huntington, and Griffin? And where are those leaders of the baptized ranks, who stretched out their arms across the water, and received me into their communion? Where are Baldwin and Bolles? Where Holcombe, and Rogers, and Staughton? I see them not. I have been to their temples of worship, but their voices have passed away. And where are my early missionary associates—Newell, and Hall, and Rice, and Richards, and Mills? But why inquire for those so ancient? Where are the succeeding laborers in the missionary field for many years—and the intervening generation, who sustained the missions? And where are those who moved amid the dark scenes of Rangoon, and Ava, and Tavoy? Where those gentle, yet firm spirits, which tenanted forms—delicate in structure, but careless of the storm—now broken, and scattered, and strewn, like the leaves of autumn, under the shadow of overhanging trees, and on remote islands of the sea?

"No; these are not the scenes of 1812, nor is this the assembly that convened in the Tabernacle of a neighboring city. Many years have elapsed; many venerated, many beloved ones have passed away to be seen no more. 'They rest from their labors, and their works do follow them.' And with what words shall I address those who have taken their places, the successors of the venerated and the beloved—the generation of 1812?

"In that year, American Christians pledged themselves to the work of evangelizing the world. They had but little to rest on except the command and promise of God. The attempts then made by British Christians had not been attended with so much success, as to establish the practicability, or vindicate the wisdom of the missionary enterprise. For many years the work advanced but slowly. One denomination after another embarked in the undertaking;—and now American missionaries are seen in almost every land and every clime. Many languages have been acquired; many translations of the Bible have been made; the gospel has been extensively preached; and churches have been established containing thousands of sincere, intelligent converts. The obligation, therefore, on the present generation, to redeem the pledge given by their fathers, is greatly enhanced. And it is an animating consideration, that with the enhancement of the obligation, the encouragements to persevere in the work, and to make still greater efforts, are increasing from year to year. Judging from the past, what may we rationally expect during the lapse of another thirty or forty years? Look forward with the eye of faith. See the missionary spirit universally diffused and in active operation throughout this country,—every church sustaining not only its own minister, but, through some general organization, its own missionary in a foreign land. See the Bible faithfully translated into all languages,—the rays of the lamp of heaven transmitted through every medium, and illuminating all lands. See the Sabbath spreading its holy calm over the face of the earth,—the churches of Zion assembling, and the praises of Jesus resounding from shore to shore,—and, though the great majority may still remain, as now in this Christian country, without hope and without God in this world, yet the barriers in the way of the descent and operations of the Holy Spirit removed, so that revivals of religion become more constant and more powerful.

"The world is yet in its infancy; the gracious designs of God are yet hardly developed. Glorious things are spoken of Zion, the city of our God. She is yet to triumph, and become the joy and glory of the whole earth. Blessed be God that we live in these latter times—the latter times of the reign of darkness and imposture. Great is our privilege, precious our opportunity, to co-operate with the Saviour in the blessed work of enlarging and establishing his kingdom throughout the world. Most precious the opportunity of becoming wise in turning many to righteousness, and of shining, at last, as the brightness of the firmament and as the stars forever and ever.

"Let us not, then, regret the loss of those who have gone before us, and are waiting to welcome us home, nor shrink from the summons that must call us thither. Let us only resolve to follow them who through faith and patience inherit the promises. Let us so employ the remnant of life, and so pass away, as that our successors will say of us, as we of our predecessors, 'Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord. They rest from their labors, and their works do follow them.'"

COUNTY AUXILIARY BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

In your last paper but one, a correspondent speaks of the formation of a County Missionary Society, auxiliary to the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association. That is a good plan of operation to promote benevolent objects. Indeed, there can scarcely be a better one devised, if they will follow it out with a judicious organization. It is a plan, however, but little used among Sabbath-keepers. I would suggest, whether it would not be well for us generally to go into such organizations. Perhaps County Societies would not always be advisable. There should, if possible, be several churches united in such organization; the Executive Board of which should be mainly selected from the church having the best men able to meet frequently for transacting its business. One Director at least should also be elected from every church. With this Executive an intimate correspondence might be held by the Executives of the Parent Societies. Meetings to discuss the question which the organization is intended to affect, should be held with each of the churches in the confederation at regular intervals. At these meetings, the best talent could be selected, or otherwise obtained, to speak, and the best plan of operating individually would be suggested—(and no plan, however wisely matured, could be prosperous, which did not base its operations upon individual efforts)—and all such facts as might from time to time transpire within the compass of its labors, calculated to encourage further effort, might be stated and commented upon.

These meetings, if judiciously conducted, would partake much of the character of the Anniversaries of the large benevolent societies of the day, and would have a great influence upon the community, as they would frequently be held where we should seldom if ever think of going to hold the sessions of the Parent Societies, or the Associations, or the General Conference, and they would naturally call out the people to hear what they might not be disposed to attend our ordinary meetings upon the Sabbath to hear.

Such meetings might frequently be held without much if any sacrifice of time, by transferring existing meetings, or a part of them, into the meetings of the organization. There are in New Jersey four churches which might be so associated, which now are in the habit of holding joint meetings without any definite object before them when they convene. If at this season one day was appropriated to such organization, it would add much to the interest of the meeting, and would in no way lose by the change. And if all of our benevolent operations were included in the objects of the organization, they might all be advanced, and they would doubtless be aided just in proportion as the community were interested in regard to them respectively. There are also in Rhode Island similar meetings. The compass of these meetings might be extended so as to take in all the churches in the State, if they do not already, and also the church at Waterford, Ct. If these meetings were held quarterly, as I believe they now are, they would be held at each of the churches once in about two years. The churches in Rensselaer County might also thus have an organization to meet in each of the present places of worship once a year. There are but few churches in the Central or Western Associations which might not thus have meetings at proper intervals, to their own advantage, and to the great advancement of the common cause. Of the churches in the South-Western Association I know little or nothing, but presume that they are so situated that they might with more or less advantage enter into similar arrangements.

I will now state some of the advantages of these organizations:—

1st. Their influence will be more general than any other plan can be, as they will go to every man's door, as it were, and will make far more interesting meetings than can otherwise be got up for these objects. They will have a better influence upon the character of our denomination, inasmuch as our neighbors generally will get a chance to see occasionally a respectable representation of us.

2d. They will be of a more familiar character than ordinary religious meetings, and will be well calculated to bring out talents that otherwise might be neglected. They will also be calculated to engage the greatest possible number of active laborers to promote the objects contemplated.

3d. By the frequency of their convocations, properly conducted, as they would soon necessarily be, they would familiarize the brethren with the proper ways and means of doing business, and thus conduce to the preparation of a better class of delegates to our Anniversaries, Associations, and Conferences.

4th. As they would elicit a greater interest, they would be productive of a greater amount of collections.

5th. In tract operations they would tend to a harmony and activity that could not be hoped for in any other way.

6th. They would greatly familiarize and fraternize us—a desirable object, as our Lord's prayer may testify, "that they all may be one; as thou Father art in me, and I in thee, that they may also be one in us;" or, "I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one."

Other advantages might be named, but these are enough, I hope, to secure for the plan a fair consideration. P. S.

PUBLIC WORSHIP.

How interesting to the devout mind is the return of the Sabbath. The husbandman retires from the field—the merchant from his speculations—and the mechanic from his shop. The toils of domestic life are suspended as far as possible—a season of rest for weary man and beast arrives. The Sabbath morn brings fresh to our recollection the divine existence, and the glorious Creator of all worlds. The dawn of the first Sabbath may be brought to view, when the noble creature man looked with wonder and rapture on this lovely sphere—when in notes divine and harmonious nature proclaimed the Almighty's praise—and when heaven and earth responded to the commendation of the great Creator. Oh what an infinite loss is sustained by the man who does not appreciate the Sabbath! Nothing, surely, is so calculated to kindle and improve the flame of devotion as the worship of God's house. Thither the pious multitude resort. The notes of praise begin to sound—the voice of prayer is heard—Christian hearts begin to beat—Christian love to glow—one holy and happy family communing with their Father. He speaks, and his Word proclaims his love. He tells of the incarnate One who died to save. Oh what music in the name of Jesus, to the soul that feels its need of mercy! Heaven's portals open to the eye of him who was doomed to woe, and he leaps for joy. Who can help wending his way to the house of prayer? Who will be hindered by trifling things—by slight indisposition—by a few drops of rain—or by the winter's cold? The soul-satisfying pleasures realized—the divive hopes inspired—the heavenly instruction gained, all serve as a fresh impetus in the Christian course. These delightful seasons will soon come to an end. So let it be, that we may enter upon an endless Sabbath in a nobler clime. W—R.

CONSISTENCY NECESSARY TO SUCCESS.

In an age when we hold the singular TRUTH, that "the seventh day is the Sabbath" of the Old and New Testaments—the Sabbath observed by our Saviour himself when on the earth, and by the primitive church previous to their religion becoming fashionable—do we not retard the progress of this truth, weaken the force with which it naturally applies itself to the minds of men, and derogate from our own consistency, when we observe the day so much to ourselves instead of to the Lord—when we observe it in so loose a manner that the question is often asked, Does such a person keep the Sabbath, meaning the Sabbath of the Bible in distinction from Sunday? Now I am not a stickler for the routine formula of observing the day as did the Jews anciently; but I believe that an observance consistent with the interests which gather around it, and the purposes for which it was constituted, will tend to spiritual health and activity—will say, in language stronger than tongue most eloquent, to those who observe it not, and refuse to read and understand the Bible as it is, "This is the way, walk ye in it." But when those who keep a man-made Sabbath, see those who profess to keep the Sabbath of the Bible pursuing on that day very many of the ordinary duties of the week, they sneeringly exclaim, "See how those fanatical Jews expect to be saved by their works." Do they represent us out of our just position, especially such of us as thus loosely observe the day? Do they not judge of us by the true criterion, that acts are in reality the exponents of intentions?

Look around, and how often do we see those who profess to love and honor the Sabbath of the Bible, reviewing the business of the week and planning their schemes of gain on that day; or find them taking time on that day to cast up their accounts, or rummage for obligations that are about to become outlawed; or see them scanning the farm, laying up rails and stones that are out of place in the fences, looking up their sheep and their young cattle to salt them, especially if they run in the common; or how often do we find them unnecessarily visiting the sick, because they cannot spare time on any other day in the week, or making friendly calls to learn the news of the day, the price of stock, grain, wool, etc.; or even lounging and sleeping at home, when it is but a step to where religious instruction is being imparted.

All this, and much more, is so often observed on that day set apart by the great God himself for the progress of the mind in spiritual things, and to show our regard and obedience to Him, that it is not strange that Sunday-keepers charge us with heartlessness in a matter to which we professedly attach so much importance.

Now if these things be so, every reasonable mind will at once acknowledge that they are not as they should be, for the very good reason that the Sabbath was not given to man for the performance of such labor, sufficient proof of which develops itself by an examination of the scriptural condition of those who practice as above described, in contrast with the religious interest manifested by those who observe the day to the Lord, and endeavor each week to make a full Sabbath-day's journey towards the haven of eternal rest.

Can we ever, as a denomination, expect to succeed, even with Bible truth on our side, whilst we practice such glaring inconsistencies—whilst we have not that abiding love of principle which will oblige us to practice what we profess? I believe it is vain to talk of enlightening the world around us, while we hold our peculiar truths so loosely as not to consider it essential to live up to their requisitions. Our consistency must be seen of all men. Then, and not till then, are we to feel that the work of Sabbath reform prospers. The same God rules now who ruled eighteen hundred years ago, and he works now as he did then by means, by his agents, and requires now as then that the members be brought into subjection to his government as set forth in the divine law, and made willing to execute his commands, which he declares are given in love to a fallen race, that the old man with his affections and lusts be put away, that we become new creatures, always abounding in the work of the Lord, striving to make ourselves perfect in Christian love, that we may have a well-grounded hope when it shall be ours to leave this world of sorrow and seek a mansion with the redeemed at the right hand of the Majesty on high. LUD.

Brookfield, 17th June, 1846.

Dr. Edwards and Joshua Leavitt.—In a late number of "The Emancipator," we find a letter from Rev. Joshua Leavitt, addressed to the Rev. Justin Edwards, D. D., Secretary of the American and Foreign Sabbath Union. It seems that Dr. Edwards has published in the newspapers an article on Christian Union, pointing out some things for the London Convention to do, among which perhaps the most important is, to declare "the right and duty" of all men to possess, read and obey the Scriptures, and keep the Sabbath. This doctrine evidently meets with the cordial approbation of Mr. Leavitt, and he is anxious to know whether the man who puts it forth for effect abroad, is consistent in carrying it out at home. For the purpose of deciding, he calls his attention to the fact that there are nearly three millions of slaves in this country who are not allowed to have any rights whatever, and many of whom are prohibited from reading the Bible or keeping the Sabbath. Now as the Doctor has been pretty free in applying his principle of "right and duty" to the laborers of the North and South, particularly those employed on the canals and railroads, Mr. Leavitt asks him to apply it also to the slaves, and exert his influence to secure for them the enjoyment of Bibles and Sabbaths. We should be right glad to hear Dr. Edwards' justification of his course on this subject, and wait with some interest, though with but little hope, to hear from him.

Congregationalism.—The General Association of Orthodox Congregational Churches in Massachusetts, met on the 23d ult. There were about 150 ministers present, who represented the state of the churches as generally encouraging, although their numbers have not been much increased for a year past. One of the delegates spoke of the wide diffusion of cheap pernicious literature as among the greatest obstacles to the advancement of religion. You may send us, said he, from your great metropolis, damaged goods, or clothes and provisions that are not of the best quality, but we entreat you not to send that which poisons the immortal spirit. The Association passed a resolution expressing devout thanksgiving to Heaven for the cheering prospect of continued peace with England, and their prayer that peace between the United States and a sister republic may speedily be restored. They also appointed a committee to consider the expediency of a bi-centennial commemoration of the formation of the Platform of Congregationalism, which was completed at Cambridge about 200 years ago.

Sabbath Accidents.—In the Recorder of June 25 was given a full account of the recent awful calamity at Quebec, by which about fifty persons were hurried into eternity without a moment's warning. We omitted to call attention to the solemn fact, that this calamity occurred late in the evening of the sixth-day of the week, when the Sabbath of the Lord had fully begun, agreeably to the law which says, "From evening to evening shall ye celebrate your Sabbaths." We do not now pretend to say, as is often said in regard to the accidents on Sunday, that this was a direct manifestation of divine displeasure for a neglect of the Sabbath. But we do say, that if the company had been engaged in keeping the Sabbath according to the commandment, instead of attending upon a theatre, no such calamity would have occurred. Let this truth be laid to heart.

Death of a Missionary.—Rev. Daniel McCoy, long known as a missionary to the Indians, died at Louisville, Ky., on the 21st of June, after an illness of twenty-one days.

Jewish Worship in New York.—We learn from the "Occident" that the Jewish Congregation in Elm-street, in this City, has recently chosen a new reader, who has engaged to lecture at least once in a month. We are glad to see that this custom of having lectures, or short sermons, at regular intervals, is becoming quite common. It will add greatly to the interest of the synagogue, and give opportunity for conveying much valuable instruction. We could wish, also, for a restoration of the custom which prevailed eighteen hundred years ago, when, after the reading of the law and the prophets, the rulers of the synagouge sent unto the visitors, saying, Ye men and brethren, if ye have any word of exhortation for the people, say on.

Jewish Missions.—We have received the 23d Annual Report of the Board of Directors of the American Society for Meliorating the Condition of the Jews, from which we learn that the receipts into the Treasury during the past year have been $8,301 36. This money has been expended principally in the support of the Jewish Chronicle, the Mission-House in New York, and several missionaries among the Jews in different parts of the country. The Report represents the prospects of the Society as quite encouraging.

Likenesses of the Missionaries.—J. R. Bigelow & Co., of No. 9 Spruce-street, N. Y., have recently published lithographic prints of Rev. E. L. Abbot, Baptist Missionary to Arracan—Rev. J. L. Shuck, Missionary to China—and Yong Seen Sang, the Chinese preacher who accompanied Mr. Shuck to the United States. The prints are well executed, and the likenesses good. Many persons will thank Mr. Bigelow for thus placing it in their power to obtain some definite idea of the personal appearance of these men.

Accident to Bishop Wolle.—The stage between Bethlehem and Reading, Pa., was upset on Wednesday night of last week, and Right Rev. Peter Wolle, Bishop of the Moravian Church of the United States, and his lady, were severely injured. It was thought that the Bishop could not survive. The accident is attributed to a race with another stage belonging to an opposition line.

Accidents on the Fourth of July.—The papers from various directions contain about the usual number of fourth-of-July accidents. We shall not attempt to chronicle them as Sabbath accidents, although they occurred on the day of the week which we hold to be sacred. In this city there was an unprecedented amount of intoxication, and no less than three deaths occurred during the day from intemperance. One boy was brought to the Hospital with his right arm very much hurt by the bursting of a pistol. Another had his fore-finger blown off in the same way. A third had his right leg, from the knee down, most horribly crushed and mangled. A man in Brooklyn had a leg blown off by the bursting of a small ship's cannon which he was firing. In Albany, a woman was badly hurt by the falling of a stand on which the people had collected. At Harrisbnrgh, Pa., the premature discharge of a cannon took place, and blew over W. B. Rodney and Solomon Snyder, in doing which Snyder's arm was so much shattered as to require amputation. Rodney's front teeth were knocked out, his chin split in two, and his eyes completely blinded. It was thought that Rodney would not survive over twenty-four hours.

"Where is Dr. Edwards?"—The following paragraph, from a Pittsburgh paper, shows that there is work yet for the Doctor to do, and suggests the inquiry as to his present whereabouts:

"During all last Sabbath, military implements were being conveyed through our streets, to ship for Texas. Where are the zealous friends of the 'better observance of the Sabbath?' Or is it less wicked to convey munitions of war, to prepare for mangling human beings, than to pay a quiet visit, or pursue a needful journey, on 'the Lord's day?' Speak out, Revs. and D. D's. We want light! If God will not sustain the nation in the observance of the Sabbath, how can the people trust that he will secure them against loss in refraining from labor, and lying by from journeys, on the Sabbath?"

Dancing.—The following resolution was passed unanimously at a recent meeting of Presbyterians in Harrisburgh, Pa.:—

"Resolved, That it is the deliberate conviction of this Presbytery, that dancing by professed Christians is, in its tendency, sinful; that Church Sessions should regard it as a fit subject of admonition, and if persisted in, of discipline, and that we commend every appropriate effort which is put forth to suppress this evil.

Another Synagogue.—The corner-stone of a new Jewish Synagogue was laid in this city on third-day of last week, in Wooster-st., between Spring and Prince-sts.

Gen. Armstrong contradicts the rumor that Sir Robert Peel was opposed to offering the Treaty to our Government, and states that the Premier zealously advocated it.

General Intelligence.

FIFTEEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamship Britannia reached Boston on Sabbath morning last, bringing fifteen days later news, the substance of which we give below:—

The bill reducing the Corn Laws has passed through Committee in the House of Lords by a vote of 135 to 103—33 majority. There can no longer be a doubt of its becoming law.

The Ministry of Sir Robert Peel is on its last legs. Its Tory opponents are far more bitter than the Whigs ever were, and are ready to turn it out at any moment, but the Whigs will not allow it to be done until the Corn Law reduction is perfected. That accomplished, Sir Robert will resign or be ejected from his post, probably before the corresponding reductions on other articles shall have been effected.

Pope Gregory XVI. died on the 1st ult. in his 74th year. He was a good, kind, tolerant man, and his death is generally regretted. His successor will be either Cardinal Fronzoni, born in Genoa, aged 71, or Cardinal Acton, born in England. (There has never been but one English Pope, Adrian, several centuries ago.) It is apprehended that Revolutionary convulsions will now break out in the Papal States.

Cotton is rather lower. Grain and Flour are no better. The British Crops look well.

The accounts of the Battles on the Rio Grande have been received in England, and excited a general contempt for the Mexicans. Gen. Taylor's bulletins are much praised.

France.

The following items are taken from a letter dated Paris, June 14:—

The Journal des Debats has lately published a remarkable article on the state of affairs between Mexico and the United States. It thinks that Mexico is totally unable to resist the United States, and that the existing hostilities will result in its dismemberment. It thinks, too, that the States will endeavor to seize the Californias, to make up for what they will be obliged to lose in Oregon; and it says that the Californias are infinitely more valuable than that barren territory.

The Epoque, the recognized organ of M. Guizot, Minister for Foreign Affairs, has also had a very long and carefully written article on the pending dispute between the two great Republics of Northern America. This article points out the necessity of France and England interfering in the matter, in order to bring about a reconciliation, and to protect Mexico. It alleges that France has interests sufficiently vast in Mexico to warrant such interference.

Lecomte, the would-be assassin of Louis Phillippe, has been brought to trial, condemned to death, and executed.

Last Sunday the little railway from Paris to Sceaux was opened with much ceremouy. It is for the trial of a new invention, which enables curves, exceedingly narrow, to be gone over with as much rapidity as straight lines.

Miscellaneous.

Emigration from Sweden and Norway to the United States is on the increase. A vessel lately left Skien with 250 emigrants, leaving 700 prepared to follow at the first opportunity. The greater part of the emigrants are artizans and agriculturists, and many of them are tolerably well to do in the world.

According to the Limerick Reporter, 3,857 emigrants have left that city for the United States during the present season.

The number of paupers in England was, in 1813, 1,426,065; in 1843, they were 1,539,490 in number.

Desertions from the French to the English West India Islands, where the slaves on arrival become, de facto, free, are said to be frequent of late, more especially from Martinque and Guadaloupe.

MEXICO AND THE WAR.

The week past has brought but little intelligence of interest from the seat of war. At the last accounts recruits continued to arrive, and preparations were making for future operations. The news from Mexico, which we give below, shows that the present government of that country is likely to have enough to do to take care of itself without fighting our troops.

Revolution in Mexico.—The New Orleans Picayune of June 24, gives the following important intelligence from Mexico:—

A revolution had broken out in the Department of Jalisco. It commenced on the morning of the 20th of May in the city of Guadalaxa. The battalion of Logos, followed by other bodies of military, and by the enthusiastic populace, attacked the palace of the Governor.

The assault of the insurgents was so prompt, that the guard had only time to make one discharge, by which one man was killed and one wounded.

Some of the defenders recognized friends among the assailants, and refused to fire. The disaffection then became general, and some of the leaders of the Government troops were arrested to save them from the fury of the insurgents. Some skirmishing ensued and preparations were making for a general engagement, when General Duque, who had taken command of the Government troops, proposed a parley. This was agreed to, and the result of the deliberation was that the troops under General Duque should be allowed to retire with the honors of war, by a route designated by them, directly to the city of Mexico. Provisions were given them, and they were allowed till the 22d, to prepare for their departure.

Don Jose Maria Tanez was at the head of the insurrection. A formal direction was drawn up by the insurgents proclaiming Santa Ana their Chief, and declaring that a new Congress should be summoned to be elected by the people, according to the electoral laws of 1824, to form a new constitution in which the monarchial principle is to be excluded.

It also provides that the Congress should meet four months after the liberating army shall gain possession of the Capital. Don Juan Camplida is recognized as Provisional Governor of the Department, and his oath includes the "repulsing of the infamous usurpation of the Americans."

Later.—Recent advices from Mexico and Havana leave little room for doubt that the insurrection at Jalisco was but a link in a chain of similar movements framed to take place in every province, and intended to overthrow Paredes and restore to Santa Ana the direction of affairs. It is evident that the rising has been planned by Santa Ana himself, aided perhaps by his friend Almonte. We shall soon learn the result in the various provinces, and see which of the rival chieftains is likely henceforth to be in the ascendant.

DOINGS IN CONGRESS.

In the Senate there was no single subject of absorbing interest last week. A bill was introduced for the relief of the heirs of Robert Fulton. The Secretary of War was directed to furnish the names of officers and privates killed or wounded in the battles of May 8th and 9th. A bill was passed to retrocede Alexandria to Virginia. A bill was under consideration to reduce and graduate the price of Public Lands. This bill proposes to divide the land into five classess. The first class is to be five years in market, at $1 25 per acre; second class ten years at $1; third class fifteen years at 75 cts.; fourth class 20 years at 50 cents, and the fifth class 30 years at 25 cents. Lands remaining unsold ot the end of any of these periods, are to go into the next lower class.

In the House of Represenratives, the most important matter under consideration was a bill for the reduction of the Tariff, reported by Gen. McKay of North Carolina. The debate on this bill closed on Thursday afternoon. Much time was occupied in disposing of the various amendments proposed. But the final question was taken on Friday afternoon, when the bill passed by a vote of 114 to 95. The bill takes effect on the 1st of December next, after which the duty on Brandy and other Distilled Liquors will be 100 per cent.; on preserved fruits, tobacco, mahogany, &c., 40 per cent.; on clothing, jewelry, paper, wool, &c., 30 per cent.; and so down by different schedules to five per cent, and nothing.

Freeman's Trial.—The negro Freeman, of Auburn, who murdered the Van Nest family, is on trial at Auburn. He is defended by W. H. Seward, D. Wright, and C. Morgan. The prosecution is conducted by the Attorney General and District Attorney.

The testimony as far as we have it, shows Freeman to have been convicted of horse-stealing, wrongfully, as is said, when he was sixteen years old, for which he was sent for five years to the State Prison. He was slow and dull at his work, in Prison, and of violent temper, for which he was frequently and severely flogged. He came out of prison deaf, and departed, and failing to get work, became reckless. He applied to magistrates for warrants against those who sent him to prison, and insisted that he ought to be paid for the time he had been wrongfully imprisoned, &c. Being refused warrants, he made up his mind to kill somebody. He went with such view to several houses before entering that of Mr. Van Nest, but finding them without light, he passed on, because, as he said, he could not "see to fight in the dark."

Wreck and Loss of Life.—On Sabbath morning, June 27th, the Brig Sutledge of Picton, N. S., for Fall River, Mass., struck a rock and sunk in ten fathoms of water. She had on board fifty-six passengers, all foreigners, and mostly Scotch, who were on their way to Pennsylvania, where they expected to find employment in the mining establishments. Thirty of the passengers were drowned. Sixteen dead bodies, together with the Captain, the crew, and twenty of the passengers saved, were brought into Newport, R. I., by the schooner Dusky Sally. The bodies recovered from the wreck were buried at Newport.

A 'Quid' for Tobacco Chewers.—Dr. Woodward, Superintendent of the Worcester Insane Hospital, speaks thus of tobacco.

'If asked my medical opinion, which is safest, four glasses of wine or four quids of tobacco daily, I should say unhesitatingly, the wine. Of the two evils, this would, in my opinion, be the least. Tobacco is the strongest and most difficult to overcome, and the influences felt from it the most baneful and destructive to health.'

Transposition of Letters.—By the transposition of letters, fifty nine words can be made from one word containing seven letters, and being two syllables, namely, Remains:—the words are, main, aim, rain, man, ream, name, mire, remain, men, rein, same, ran, sam, smear, ire, ram, is, arm, ear, an, ire, rim, seam, am, mar, sea, in, mea, are, mane, sir, mare, sin, rise, sire, arms, rine, amise, raise, sear, rinse, aries, earn, I, arise, inseam, manes, names, marine, miser, resin, miner, snare, maine, sane, mien, manse, amen.

The Crops.

A letter dated Dansville, Livingston Co. N. Y., June 29, says:—

For twenty-eight years I have been a resident of Western New York, and for the most part of Gennesee Valley. In all that time I have never known so great a promise of an abundant crop. There is nothing common to our soil but what bids fair to pay the farmer richly for his labor. And while we can proclaim abundance, we can also say that it is in a state of forwardness that is without a parallel in this section.

The Cincinnati (Ohio) Atlas says the prospect of an abundant crop of grain throughout the entire West, and indeed in the whole Wheat-growing region, was never better than the present. With a few exceptions we have heard of no complaints of any damage having been sustained by the growing crop.

We hear equally favorable accounts from Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin, &c. Should nothing extraordinary happen, the product of Wheat this year will be considerably greater than any previous one.

The Detroit Advertiser says that the favorable prospect noticed some weeks ago still continues. Wheat eyerywhere throughout the State promises a most abundant yield. But a short time now remains before the harvest, and we may look forward with reasonable certainty to the result. In all human probability the crop will far exceed any ever gathered in Michigan.

A Pittsburgh paper says that judging from all accounts, never were there more bountiful crops in this section of country. The wheat is very heavy and stands thick on the ground, and the quality excellent. The prospect also for fruits of all kinds, for grass, corn, and indeed for every production of earth almost, cultivated in this section, is exceedingly favorable.

A paper from Augusta, Me., says: "The prospects of our farmers were never more encouraging than at the present time. Our fields are covered with the most luxuriant verdure, and the weather is most propitious. Grass and grain never looked more promising. The recent rains have effectually secured a most abundant crop of hay. Potatoes and corn also look well.

A paper from Independence, Mo., says: "The grain crops in this country never promised better than now. Wheat will be abundant. We have had fine growing weather for some time, and not more rain than was necessary for vegetation. Corn looks very promising."

SUMMARY.

A young lady of Baltimore, Miss Margaret Hugar, has completed a quilt in which there are 27,000 pieces, none of them larger than a half dime. It is all her own handiwork, and for three years most of her spare time was devoted to it. It took her two days to count the pieces.

Mr. Packenham, the British Minister, bought a suit of chamber furniture in the National Fair, at an expense of $8,000. The correspondent of a Baltimore paper thinks that this furniture is destined for the British Court, as a specimen of Yankee ingenuity and the mechanic arts of this country.

The astonishing power of machinery is shown in a single fact, that the machine tended by one girl at the Westbury, Conn., pin factory, does the work performed by 300 persons by the old process. At that factory, they manufacture 8,000,000 of pins each day. American pins will soon become an article of export.

The reader will recollect that a few months ago, the French in Algiers destroyed a large number of Arabs, by suffocating them in a cavern in which they had taken refuge. The last accounts from that country represent that as soon as the fact was communicated to the chief, Abdel Kader, he caused 320 French prisoners immediately shot! A dreadfnl retribution?

It is a fact not perhaps generally known, says an Eastern paper, that Washington drew his last breath in the last hour in the last day of the last week in the last month of the year, and in the last year of the century. He died Saturday night, 12 o'clock, Dec. 31, 1799.

The New England Farmer, published by Joseph Breck & Co., the oldest agricultural paper in New England, a paper which has always been prized for its correct statements, its good sense, and its valuable facts, is about to be discontinued. It was for many years edited by Thomas G. Fessenden, Esq.

A beautiful young lady, in Delaware county, Indiana, having been compelled by her father to marry a gentleman of fortune, though she had promised her hand to another, took poison in her coffee the morning after her marriage, while at breakfast with her husband and parents, and expired in less than an hour.

A lady in New Haven numbers among the members of her family a mouse, who makes his appearance every day when the dinner-bell rings, trots gently down stairs, and into the dining room, where he takes his station, and feeds on the crumbs dropped from the table, without any symptoms of fear. When the company rises from their meal, his mouseship is off also, and, hopping up the stairs, is seen no more until the following day.

The Dayton Transcript says that when one of the volunteers was about leaving Piqua for the Rio Grande, the other day, a lady who wished to prevent his going, poured a basin of boiling water on his foot, in order to disable him from a march. The voluntear "bound up his wounds" and limped off, notwithstanding.

The Waterbury American relates as good an instance of the useful sagacity of the dog, as we remember to have lately seen recorded, numerous as stories of this kind are. While a farmer in a neighboring town was paying another for a cow, he accidentally dropped a five dollar bill in the street. Without noticing the loss, both left the spot, but the dog kept by, and on their return sometime after, he was still occupying the place, and as they discovered with surprise, holding the lost bill between his teeth in a very careful manner, so as not to injure it.

The Anti-Mormons have gone to Carthage, where they threaten to rally in large numbers and make another demonstration against Nauvoo. The whole purchase will amount to nearly $500,000.

A late number of the Milwaukie Sentinel, in a large city located 1,500 miles west of a point ever dreamed of by 'the oldest inhabitant,' announces the receipt of news from Albany only four days old! DIED,

In Hounsfield, on the 24th inst., Ann Mercy, youngest daughter of Rev. Wm. Green, aged 21 years. The disease which terminated the earthly existence of this excellent young woman, was pulmonary consumption. For many months her health has been gradually declining, and every means, suggested by the skill of physicians, and the affection of doating friends, had been tried for the purpose of restoring her to health; but all was vain. She continued to decline till a few days since, when she ceased to visit her friends as usual, was confined to her room, and finally to her bed, and ended her life without pain, other than that which attended a slight difficulty of breathing, and without fear. The sting of death had been extracted. She conversed on her approaching dissolution with the utmost composure, and expressed a pleasure in the prospect of departing and being with the Saviour. Miss G. made a public profession of religion about four years since, but had been pious almost from childhood. Possessed of an amiable disposition, her piety was not of an ostentatious, but of a deep and consistent character. Connected with a large circle of friends and acquaintances, to whom her many virtues had endeared her, her loss is severely felt, especially by the young. Her funeral was attended by an unusually large and deeply affected concourse, who testified the estimation in which they held the deceased, and their sympathy for the afflicted family in their flowing tears. "The righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance."

LITTLE THINGS.

Scorn not the slightest word or deed,
 Nor deem it void of power;
There's fruit in each wind-wafted seed,
 Waiting its natal hour.

A whispered word may touch the heart,
 And call it back to life;
A look of love bid sin depart,
 And still unholy strife.

No act falls fruitless; none can tell
 How vast its powers may be;
Nor what results enfolded dwell
 Within it, silently.

Work and despair not; give thy mite,
 Nor care how small it be;
God is with all that serve the Right,
 The holy, true, and free. [Lon. Inq.

CHINESE RITES FOR THE DEAD.

The Chinese are distinguished for the respect which they pay to the memory of deceased parents and ancestors. Indeed, there is no religious act which they perform with such commendable assiduity and apparent devotion as this posthumous duty—a neglect of which is punishable by the laws of the empire. When a father or elder relative dies, the event is formally announced to all the branches of the family; to the priesthood, who hasten to the house of mourning to commence their prayers for the departed, and is made known to the neighborhood by the fixture of white labels on each side of the principal door, and the suspension from bamboos, of numerous burning papers, curiously figured, which are seen fluttering in the breeze. The lineal descendants of the deceased, clothed in coarse white cloth, with bandages of the same round their heads, sit weeping near the corpse on the ground; the women keeping up a dismal howl after the manner of the Irish. In the meantime, the friends of the deceased appear with white coverlets of linen or silk, which are placed on the body; the eldest son, or next lineal male descendant, supported on each side by relations, and bearing in his hands a porcelain bowl, containing two copper coins, now proceeds to the river or the nearest well, to "buy water," as it is termed, with which the "face and body of the dead are washed." After this the deceased is dressed in his finest garments, and is laid in a coffin, of which the planks are from four to six inches in thickness, and the bottom strewed with quick-lime. On being closed, it is made air-tight by cement, and covered with a thick varnish within and without. By its side the priest sets up a tablet, which bears the name and titles of the deceased, as they are to be engraven on the tombstone; at its foot is a table loaded with meats, lights, and perfumes. On the preparation of a coffin, in which his body may be incased after death, a Chinaman sets his heart during his life, and great expense is frequently lavished upon it, insomuch that the poor peasant will give all he is worth to obtain a decent one; and even a son has been known to sell himself into slavery, that he might purchase for his venerable father a magnificent coffin, as the most suitable gift of filial affection.

After these preliminaries they place the remains of their relative in a pavlion or shed erected for the purpose, till the appointed time for interment, which usually occurs after twenty-one days, though many, bidding defiance to laws, preserve them above ground a year, some even thirty years, and according to the Canton Register, in January, 1830, there were no less than ten thousand coffined bodies in that city, which were uninterred.

On the expiration of the days prescribed, the funeral procession takes place, in which the bonzes, or priests, take the lead, while the children and relatives of both sexes follow, being dressed in white habiliments, which betoken grief. The coffin borne under a canopy is carried by four men, often by eight, on account of its weight, while the tablet is conveyed in a gilded sedan, with incense and offerings before it. As they slowly proceed to the place of sepulture, which is always at a distance from a city or town, and generally upon an eminence, beautiful in site, and tastefully planted with trees and shrubs of various kinds, two or three persons are employed in strewing on the highway pieces of paper, which serve as charms to drive away all malign spirits, and to purchase for the corpse a safe passage from their annoyance and detention. On their journey they are not permitted to pass through any walled town or gateway, which is within the jurisdiction of the Emperor, as the transit of a corpse is supposed to be an unfavorable omen.

On reaching the burial ground, which is sacred to Howtoo "queen of earth," the rites and offerings for the dead commence, and the coffin is deposited under a discharge of rockets and crackers. In selecting a site for the sepulchre great care is taken, as in their estimation it exerts no little influence on the prosperity and happiness of surviving friends, and the circumstance is not unfrequent for children who have fallen into poverty to ascribe their misfortunes to the unlucky spot of their father's tomb; and with the hope of ameliorating their condition, to remove the bones of their progenitors to a more favorable one. The Chinese do not put the dead into a grave dug in the earth, but place the coffin on the ground, when it is either covered with matting or inclosed in a small brick building, well whitened, and finished with great taste. The form of the tomb, whether large or small, is that of the horse-shoe or of the last letter of the Greek alphabet, which, it has been observed, if taken in the sense of "the end," is an odd accidental coincidenee. The sepulchres of the wealthy and honorable are usually magnificent; they generally face a pond of water and extend to the edge;—they might with propriety be styled mausoleums, some of them "occupying ground enough for a hundred ordinary graves," and adorned with pillars and ornaments of almost every conceivable form.

After the interment, the tablet of the deceased is brought back in procession, and if the family be rich, it is placed in the hall of ancestors; if poor, in some apartment of their domiciles, before which incense is kept constantly burning, and a sumptuous entertainment concludes the solemnities of the funeral.

But the rites for the dead do not close here The period of mourning for a parent, extends through twenty-seven months; and, according to the precepts of Confucius, children are bound to pay an annual visit to the tombs of their departed relatives, and to sacrifice to their manes. The day for commencing these sepulchral festivities is about the 5th of April, when multitudes may be seen hastening out to "the cities of the dead," to repair and sweep the tombs of their forefathers, to present the prescribed oblations, and to decorate the surrounding spot with paper of variegated hues, and "at this season whole ranges of hills, speckled with tombs, may be seen covered with these testimonials of attention to the departed, fluttering in the wind and sunshine."

On these anniversaries, the Rev. Mr. Abeel relates, "The more wealthy erect booths on the hills, assemble their kindred, prepare a sumptuous entertainment, provide candles, incense, gold and silver paper, which is cut and formed in imitation of houses, suits of clothes, sedan chairs, boats, horses, and whatever articles of necessity or luxury the deceased are imagined to require; which being converted by the operation of fire into smoke, pass away into the world of spirits. Then they kneel and pray to this effect:—'We, a multitude of children, grand-children, and other descendants, now—on such a day—have come hither to worship at our ancestors' tumuli. We pray, that by the protection of our ancestors we may become prosperous, and that their descendants may be constantly supported.' Even those who profess to believe the doctrine of spiritual annihilation, or metempsychosis, are among the most scrupulous in their 'offerings to the dead.' Such are some of the absudities sanctioned by Confucius, the greatest sage of this 'land of sages'—but what light has he afforded his disciples on the mysteries of the grave, of the world to come? None. 'Christ hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel.'" [London Sunday School Mag.

POVERTY AND WEALTH.

The following testimony of an eye-witness to the poverty and utter wretchedness of the people of Ireland, is given by a clergyman, Rev. Justin McCarthy of Mallow. Doubtless similar horrors are constantly enacting in portions of the earth deemed far more favored than the Green Isle.

I myself saw, a few days ago, a lot of grayhound dogs belonging to one of those gentlemen to whom I allude, and, on talking with persons in the neighborhood about them, ascertained that his pack consisted of 14, and that each dog was allowed a pint of new milk every day, and a competent quantity of oat-meal, and that the milk would be given in greater abundance if it were not for its fattening qualities. (Some persons of this class adopt the convenient practice of mixing sulphur with the meal intended for the kenels, as it answers the double purpose of acting medicinally on the dogs, and preventing the unfortunates who have them in charge from sharing their commons!) This gentleman has lately come into possession of an unincumbered property estimated at from £10,000 to £12,000 a year, has a residence, and about £500 a year of that amount in our district. There is at his gate a hamlet, containing a pauper population of at least 200 souls, and I can safely aver, that those dogs consumed more milk during the past winter than that number of human beings—as for oat-meal, it is an article of diet they never indulge in. When representing their distress, they often say, "We envy Mr. ——'s dogs." One of his race-horses was the winner at a race-meeting very lately, and these starvlings made a bonfire to commemorate the event. He was written to, on their behalf, now at least three weeks ago, by the Relief Committee, and though the statistics of distress above given were laid before him, he has not vouchsafed even to send a reply.

"Another gentleman in his neighborhood keeps a pack of the same species of hounds, and to the above food adds fresh beef or mutton for three or four days before each coursing or hunting meeting. This latter, too, is a resident of our district—has property, though in other counties, put down at 2 or £3,000 a year; but occupies here a mansion and demense admired for its natural beauties, and appropriate landscape gardening, beyond anything in the neighborhood—was waited on by the Relief Committee—first refused their application—but was coaxed, after a little humorous badinage, into a donation of £3 ! !

"A gentleman who ranks with the elite of the aristocracy, when prosecuting his dog-boy for the alledged theft of a few potatoes, which the accused said he was permitted to eat, asserted that he meant his permission should only extend to the potatoes boiled and stewed up with the carrion in the chaldron of the kennel, but that he did not intend he should prepare any for his own separate use. Though his assertion naturally produced a thrill of horror in a crowded court, yet this gentleman, who receives at least £30,000 in rents as agent to four or five properties, has not been deprived of any of his agencies, nor lost aught of his status in society.

City of Mexico.—The city of Mexico is said to be the finest built city on the American continent. In some respects it certainly is so. In the principal streets the houses are all constructed according to the strictest architectural rules. The foundations of the city were laid, and the first buildings were erected by Cortes, who did every thing well which he attempted—from building a house or writing a couplet, to conquering an empire. Many of the finest buildings in Mexico are still owned by his descendants. The public square is said to be unsurpassed by any in the world; it contains some twelve or fifteen acres, paved with stone. The cathedral covers one entire side; the palace another; the western side is occupied by a row of very high and substantial houses, the second stories of which project into the street the width of the pavement; the lower story is occupied by the principal retail merchants of the city. The most of these houses were built by Cortes, who, with his characteristic sagacity and an avarice which equally characterized him in the latter part of his life, selected the best portion of the city for himself.

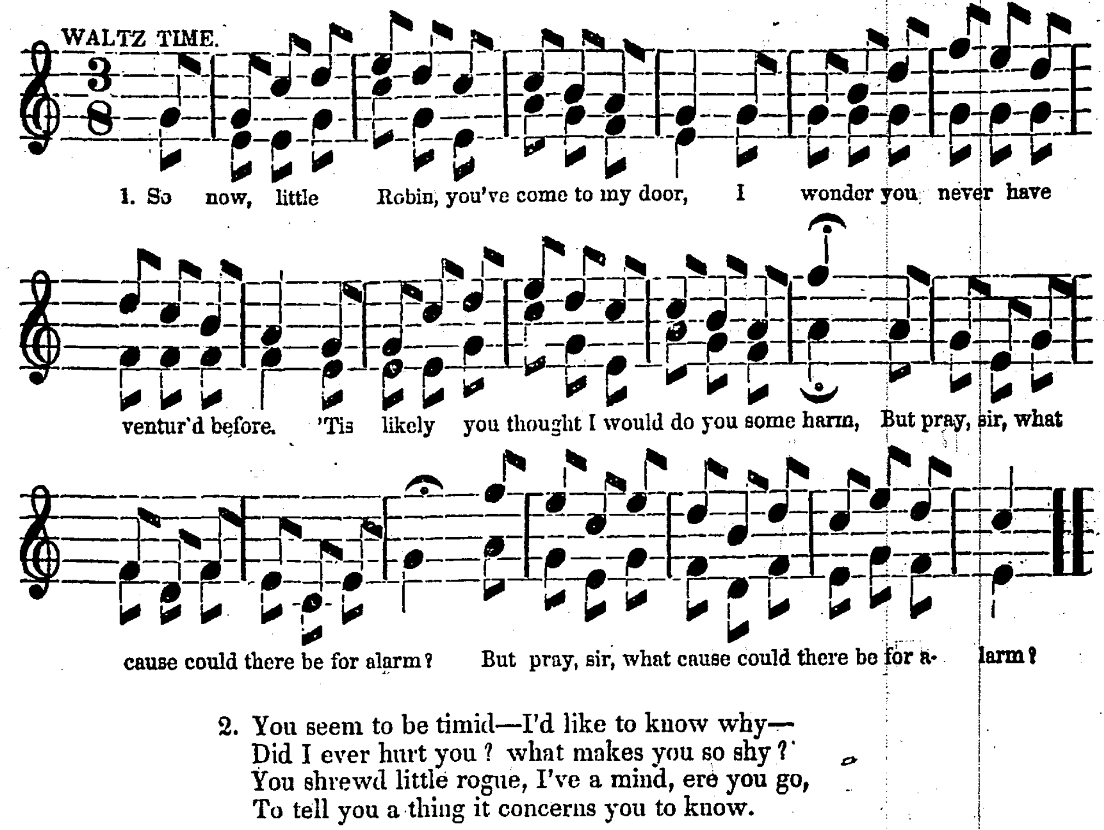
The Boy and the Robin.

POETRY BY FRANCIS C. WOODWORTH.—MUSIC BY WILLIAM B. BRADBURY.



WALTZ TIME.
1. So now, little Robin, you've come to my door, I wonder you never have ventur'd before. 'Tis likely you thought I would do you some harm, But pray, sir, what cause could there be for alarm? But pray, sir, what cause could there be for a-larm?

2. You seem to be timid—I'd like to know why—
Did I ever hurt you? what makes you so shy?
You shrewd little rogue, I've a mind, ere you go,
To tell you a thing it concerns you to know.

3. You think I have never discovered your nest;
'Tis hid pretty snugly, it must be confessed.
Ha! ha! how the boughs are entwined all around!
No wonder you thought it would never be found.

4. You're as cunning a robin as ever I knew;
And yet, ha! ha! ha! I'm as cunning as you!
I know all about your nice home on the tree—
'Twas nonsense to try to conceal it from me.

5. I know—for but yesterday I was your guest—
How many young robins there are in your nest
And pardon me, sir, if I venture to say,
They 've had not a morsel of dinner to-day.

6. But you look very sad, pretty robin, I see,
As you glance o'er the meadow, to yonder green tree;
I fear I have thoughtlessly given you pain,
And I will not prattle so lightly again.

7. Go home, where your mate and your little ones dwell;
Tho' I know where they are, yet I never will tell;
Nobody shall injure that leaf-covered nest,
For sacred to me is the place of your rest.

8. Adieu! for you want to be flying away,
And it would be cruel to ask you to stay;
But come in the morning, come early, and sing,
For dearly I love you, sweet warbler of spring.

THE RED MAN.

The following paragraph occurs in an address delivered before the new confederacy of Iroquois, by Henry R. Schoolcraft:—

"But it is not alone to these, that the Red Man and his associations, present a field for study and contemplation. His history and existence on this continent, is blended with the richest sources of poetry and imagination. His beautiful and sonorous geographical nomenclature alone, has clothed our hills and lakes and streams with the charms of poetic number. The Red Man himself, who once roved these attractive scenes, with his bow and arrows, and his brow crowned with the highest honors of the war-path and the chase, was a being of noble mould. He felt the true sentiment of independence. He was capable of high deeds of courage, disinterestedness and virtue. His generosity and hospitality were unbounded. His constancy in professed friendship was universal, and his memory of a good deed, done to him or his kindred, never faded. His breast was animated with a noble thirst for fame. To acquire this, he trod the war-path, he submitted to long and severe privations. Neither fatigue, hunger nor thirst was permitted to gain the mastery over him. A stoic in ensurance, he was above complaint, and when a prisoner at the stake, he triumphed over his enemy in his death-song. The history of such a people must be full of deep tragic and poetic incidents; and their antiquities cannot fail to illustrate it. The tomb that holds a man, derives all its moral interest from the man, and would be destitute of it without him. America is the tomb of the Red Man."

Sir Robert Peel's Devotions.—It is stated on authority of confidence, says a London paper, that a certain distinguished Irish law functionary, who is on the most intimate terms with Sir Robert Peel, calling upon him one day, made his way into Sir Robert's study, without being announced. Seeing the Premier on his knees, he stood still for a moment, and then, as noiselessly as he could, retreated into the outer apartment. After a short period had elapsed, Sir Robert Peel joined him, and, conscious that he had been discovered, remarked: "You were perhaps surprised to find me at prayer; but the truth is dear ———, I find that, in aeality, the whole of the affairs of this people is laid upon my shoulders. I have, therefore, been to the only source of strength for help, and I find it continually requisite, and only to be obtained there."

Americans in Russia.—A London correspondent of the Boston Traveler says:—"It is now stated that the Emperor has smiled upon another American, a Mr. Slocum, who is about to introduce throughout the Russian Empire such improvements in agricultural implements and the useful arts, as, in his opinion, are suited to the condition of that country. For this purpose a fund is placed at Mr. Slocum's disposal by the Russian Government to be expended as he may consider expedient. Mr. Slocum is now on his way to St. Petersburg, accompanied by a practical iron founder and machinist, who will manufacture in Russia such implements and machines as seem best adapted to the requirements of that country. Mr. Slocum has taken with him specimens of the approved agricultural implements and machinery used in the United States; also the best varieties of garden seeds, fruit and other trees. Mr. Slocum will probably return to America in a few years with honor and wealth, and his port feville filled with the sparkling gifts of the Emperor!"

A Word to Butter Makers.—A correspondent of the Tribune, who subscribes himself Butter Dealer, says, "As the season for butter manufacture progresses, it may not be amiss to hint to your numerous subscribers engaged in the same, to be careful and not salt their butter too much, keep it in new white-oak firkins of fifty and one hundred pounds—proportioned to the number of cows—which are perfectly air tight. One half inch salt at top and bottom—without brine, unless to soak the firkin, is all-sufficient; keep it in a cool cellar until frost comes, and then forward it to market. It is atmospheric air which ruins butter, and if kept free from it in cool situations it will keep sweet for years."

Ephesus.—A more thorough change can scarcely be conceived, than that which has actually occurred at Ephesus. Once the seat of active commerce, the very sea has shrunk from its solitary shores; its streets, once populous with devotees of Diana, are now ploughed over by the Ottoman serf, or browsed by the sheep of the peasant. It was early the stronghold of Christianity, and stands at the head of the apostolic churches of Asia. It was there, that, as St. Paul says, "the word of God grew mightily and prevailed." Not a single Christian now dwells within it! Its mouldering arches, and dilapidated walls, merely whisper the tale of its glory; and it requires the acumen of the geographer, and the active scrutiny of the exploring traveler, to form a probable conjecture as to the very site of the "first wonder of the world."

Too True.—An African preacher speaking from "What is a man profited if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" mentioned among other things that they lost their own souls by being too charitable! Seeing the congregation astonished beyond measure at his saying, he very emphatically repeated it, and then proceeded to explain his meaning.

"Many people," said he, "attend meeting, hear the sermon, and when it is over, they proceed to divide it among the congregation—this part was for that man, and that part for that woman; such denunciations for such persons, these threats for you sinners—and so," continued the shrewd African, "they give away the whole sermon and keep none for themselves."

State's Evidence.—A good story is told of George White, a notorious thief, in Worcester county, Mass. He was once arraigned for horse stealing, and was supposed to be connected with an extensive gang, which were laying contributions on all the stables round about. Many inducements were held out to White to reveal the names of his associates, but he maintained a dogged silence. An assurance from the Court was at last obtained, that he should be discharged upon his revealing, under oath, all he knew of his accomplices. The Jury were accordingly suffered to bring in a verdict of "not guilty," when he was called upon for the promised revelation. "I shall be faithful to my word," said he; "understand, then—the Devil was the only accomplice I ever; had we have been a great while in partnership;—you have acquitted me, and you may hang him—if you can catch him!" Tumult in a Church at Jerusalem.—A letter from Jerusalem says:—"A deplorable scene occurred in the church of the Holy Sepulcher, at Jerusalem, on Good Friday. The Latin priests were engaged in the ceremonies of the day, and a procession was passing through the Church of the Holy Sepulcher, when a carpet happening to be placed in the part of the church set aside for the use of the Greek schismatics, gave rise to an extraordinary tumult. The Greeks insisting that the carpet should be taken away, the Latins insisting upon its remaining. An exchange of abusive words ensued, which were speedily followed by blows. A tremendous battle was the consequence, in which the wax candles were upset, the candelabra destroyed, the banners pulled down, and their poles turned into pikes for the use of the combatants. A great number of persons were seriously hurt, and some were killed; but at length the Pacha came with a party of troops, and cleared the church of both parties. It was then found that not only had a great deal of damage been done to the church, but that some of the most valuable and portable objects had been stolen by the pious and pugnacious pilgrims."

A machine for sowing wheat has recntly been invented in England, which not only facilitates the process of sowing the grain, but proves a great saving in the quantity of seed. It distributes the seed very uniformly over the surface of the ground, and preforms the labor exceedingly well. Dr Drummond, a very clever writer on this subject, remarks, that 'the introduction of the use of this important machine will save much time and labor, and will in addition, save to the United Kingdom five millions of bushels of wheat annually, in the quantity required for seed.

Board of Instruction.

IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant andeconomical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25
EXTRAS PER TERM.
Piano Forte,	$10 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

LEGAL PROTECTION OF SEVENTH-DAY BAPTISTS.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:

SIR—I am directed by the Central Association to transmit to you for publication in the Recorder the following extract from my report of labors under their appointment in Albany last winter. JAMES BAILEY.

To the Seventh-day Baptist Central Association:—

DEAR BRETHREN—I received an appointment at your last Semi-Annual Session, as a delegate to Albany, to secure, if possible, an amendment to the law passed in 1839, for the protection of Seventh-day Baptists. I herewith submit to you an account of my labors under that appointment.

Conceiving it of importance that early action should be secured, I requested, through the Sabbath Recorder, that all petitions should be forwarded as soon as practicable. About the first of February I left for Albany, carrying with me several petitions from different sections. Through the courtesy of Hon. Benjamin Enos, then State Treasurer, I obtained an introduction to several members of the Assembly. I likewise obtained an introduction to many other members, and several of the Senators. I explained to them the peculiar embarrassments under which all observers of the Sabbath in this State are placed, and requested their influence to secure an amendment of the existing law that would protect us in the enjoyment of the Sabbath as fully as those are protected who observe the first-day. Among them all, I found only two that raised any sort of opposition. These were Mr. Morehouse of Otsego, and McNeil of Jefferson. The substance of their objection was, that if we wished protection, we ought to keep Sunday as other folks do. The petitions that I carried, I distributed among the Members, all of which were presented, with the exception of the one entrusted to Mr. Morehouse.

Previous to my arriving in Albany, a Bill had been introduced by Mr. Graves, of Cortland, of the Committee on Charitable and Religious Societies, that was designed to meet our petitions. On examining the Bill, I found that it did not cover the ground of the petitions. This Bill was framed from one that was sent to Albany by some of our brethren. The following is the Bill:—

AN ACT

To amend an act entitled, "An act in relation to the Seventh-day Baptists," passed 7th May, 1839.

The People of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

SECTION 1. The first section of said act shall be amended so as to read as follows:

"§ 1. No writ, process, warrant, order, judgment or decree issued by any court, or any process issued by a justice of the peace, which shall be served or executed upon the seventh-day of the week, commonly called Saturday, upon any person or persons whose religious faith and practice is to keep said seventh-day set apart by divine command, as a day of rest from labor, and dedicated to the worship of God; nor any judgment rendered by or any requirement of any court or justice of the peace to or against any such person, to attend as a party, witness, or juror in any case or suit at law upon said seventh-day of the week, shall be valid, but utterly void and of no effect, any law or requirement of law to the contrary notwithstanding, except in cases of breach of peace, or where charged with crimes or misdemeanors."

§ 2. No person shall be subject to do or perform any military duty, or attend any court martial on said seventh-day of the week, whose religious faith and practice shall be the same as specified in the first section of this act, except in cases of invasion, domestic insurrection, or in time of war.

This bill is essentially the same as the existing law, with the exception of rendition of a judgment on the Sabbath, whereas our petitions asked for full protection from all civil service, &c., the same as is granted to the observers of Sunday. In conversation with Judge Hull of Erie, I learned that he designed to offer an amendment to it when it should come up in the Committee of the whole. He stated that any and every officer who should serve a process, &c., on any Seventh-day Baptist on the seventh-day, would be liable to an action for false imprisonment. I was also assured by other legal gentlemen, that such was the case. The design of his amendment would be to protect the officers of the law.

I very soon learned, that unless Bills had some particular friend to urge them forward, they would be very likely to be passed over through the session; and I also learned that almost every law that was passed was thus urged forward of its order on the General Orders. Mr. Rice of Cattaraugus, volunteered to take this Bill in charge. In order to get it in the best possible shape, it was thought best to take it from the General Orders and have it referred to a Select Committee to report complete. Bills thus reported are not subject to amendment. After three days effort, Mr. Rice succeeded in having the Bill thus referred. Mr. Rice of Cattaraugus, Judge Hull of Erie, and Dr. Potter of Madison, were appointed as the Select Committee. I designed to go before this Committee and explain to them fully our wishes, and also give them a statement of our number, and the reason for our practice, together with the reason why we should be thus protected, viz. because our Constitution designed to afford equal protection to all. I was, however, informed, on the sixth-day, that the Committee would meet on the seventh-day to arrange the Bill. I then hastily drafted the following, a copy of which I handed to Mr. Rice:

ALBANY, Feb. 6, 1846.

To the Honorable the Select Committee of the Assembly, to whom is referred Bill No. 3 of the General Orders, relating to the Seventh-day Baptists, to report complete:—

The undersigned would respectfully represent, that he is now in Albany to secure an amendment to the law passed May 7, 1839, for the protection of Seventh-day Baptists, so that they may be protected in the peaceful and undisturbed enjoyment of the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath.

In asking an amendment of said law, your petitioners conceive that they are only asking the protection guarantied in the Constitution, which provides the free enjoyment of religious profession without any discrimination. The denomination that I have the honor to represent here, conscientiously believe that the seventh-day of the week, commonly called Saturday, should be observed and kept as the Sabbath, holy to the Lord. There are upwards of thirty churches, consisting of near four thousand communicants, of the denomination in this State. Besides these, there are many in their societies, not members of the churches, whose faith and practice is the same. All of these persons are now liable to do and perform on said seventh-day any and every duty that they are required to perform on any other day of the week. Immense cost and damage has already been sustained by them, because they could not conscientiously attend to secular business on said day. All others are fully protected in the observance of the first day of the week as a Sabbath. It is no more than right that we should be equally protected on the day we observe. You will therefore allow me to suggest to you the substance of what we wish incorporated in the law we ask.

1. To be exempt from the service or execution of any and every process of any court, justice of the peace, or other officer, upon the time we observe as the Sabbath. And here allow me to suggest, that most of our denomination commence the Sabbath on the evening before the seventh day, believing it to be in accordance with the Word of God. I would therefore wish that the law might be so framed as to cover all the time kept by us.

2. We wish any judgment of any court rendered against us on said Sabbath to be invalid, and also any requirement to attend as parties, witnesses, or jurors.

3. We wish to be exempt from the performance of any military or civil duty on said time.

4. We wish that our rights and privileges may not be abridged by the holding of any school-district or other meeting for the transaction of business where we are alike interested with others on said day.

5. We wish to be as fully protected in the enjoyment of the Sabbath we observe, as they are who observe another day as the Sabbath.

Whenever any service is required of us on said day contrary to the provisions of the law we ask, or any writ or requirement of any kind is served or executed by those who may be ignorant of our practice, we are willing to give them notice properly certified that we come within the provisions of the law, and wish shat all such officers may be fully protected from any action for such violation of this law.

But it would be unequal and oppressive to require us to give such notice to those who are acquainted with our faith and practice. It is the duty of all persons, especially all officers, to be acquainted with the laws; but it may not be their duty to know every man's peculiar sentiments. We therefore ask that we shall not be required to give such notice to those who know our faith and practice on this subject.

I would further respectfully suggest, that if any writ is made returnable on the seventh day against any who observe it as the Sabbath, that the law you may frame may provide for its return on the following Monday, at the same time of day.

Your petitioners feel and have ever felt it a sacred duty to render due obedience to all the laws of the land, when such laws do not contravene the higher and more authoritative law of God. JAMES BAILEY.

The result of their deliberation was the following Bill:

AN ACT

To amend an act entitled, "An act in relation to the Seventh-day Baptists," passed May 7th, 1839.

The People of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

SECTION 1. The several sections of the Act entitled An Act in relation to the Seventh-day Baptists, passed May 7th, 1839, shall be and are hereby repealed.

§ 2. No writ, attachment, warrant, summons, or other process, or order issued out of any court, or by any justice of the peace or other officer, shall be served or executed on the seventh-day of the week, commonly called Saturday, upon or against the person of any individual resident in the same county in which such service is offered or attempted, or in any adjoining county, whose religious faith and practice it is to keep said seventh-day as the Christian Sabbath, and as a day of rest from labor, set apart by divine command of God, dedicated to the worship of God, provided that such individual shall at the time of the attempt or offer to make such service, deliver to the officer or person offering or attempting to make the same, a printed copy of this Act, with an affidavit of such individual annexed thereto and duly sworn to by him before some justice of the peace, not more than six months prior to such delivery, that such individual is one of the persons whose religious faith and practice is such as is mentioned in the act, a copy of which is thereto annexed, and that the seventh-day of the week, commonly called Saturday, is by him conscientiously regarded and observed as the Christian Sabbath. Whenever such affidavit shall be delivered or offered, such offered or attempted service shall be of no effect; but no officer or person shall incur any liability by the attempt or offer in good faith to make such service. In the case of a summons or other process or order returnable on a future day, the service thereof, if made either personally or by leaving a copy thereof with some person of suitable age and discretion, at the usual or last place of residence of said individual, on the Monday or Tuesday next succeeding such offered or attempted service, the return of such service and of the delivery of such affidavit shall be for all purposes of the same validity, force, and effect, as if said service had been made on the Saturday preceding such service.

§ 3. No person whose religious faith and practice is such as is specified in the last section, shall be forced or required to attend any court or officer, or any court martial, or arbitration, on the said seventh-day of the week, as a party, witness or juror, provided that such person at the time of the service on him of the summons or other process, notice or order so to attend, shall deliver to the officer making such service an affidavit such as is specified in the last section.* In case such affidavit shall be delivered to the officer or person making such service, it shall be his duty to annex the same to such summons, process, notice or order, and to state the delivery thereof on his return; and thereupon every such summons, process, notice, or order, which by its terms should be proceeded on on any Saturday, may be proceeded on on the succeeding Monday, at the same place and time of day on which the same might have been proceeded upon on Saturday if this act had not passed.

§ 4. No cause in any court of record in which an affidavit of merits shall have been filed according to the course and practice of said court, and to which any person of the religious faith and practice mentioned in the second section of this act shall be a party, shall be tried on said seventh-day of the week, provided that on or before the Thursday preceding such Saturday such party shall have filed with the clerk of such court his affidavit, such as is specified in the second section of this act, and served a copy thereof on the opposite party. In case of the filing and service of such affidavit, such court may in its discretion, and to prevent injustice, take up and try said cause out of its order, at any time except on said seventh-day of the week.

§ 5. No cause in any court of record, the trial of which shall be delayed or postponed on account of any party or necessary witness being excused from attendance under the provisions of this act, shall, by being passed, lose its place upon the Calender, but the same shall be entitled to be called on after the next Monday before any other cause having a lower place on the Calender. No party shall be compelled to pay costs on account of any such delay or postponement. No cause depending in a justice court shall be adjourned to or tried on said seventh-day of the week, if an affidavit annexed to a printed copy of this act shall have been filed in said court with such justice, showing that either of the parties or any necessary or material witness therein, is of the religious faith and practice mentioned in the second section of this act.

§ 6. No person whose religious faith and practice is such as is mentioned in the second section of this Act, shall be forced to attend any military training on said seventh-day of the week, provided such person shall have filed with the Captain of the company to which he belongs such an affidavit made by him as is specified in the second section of this Act.

§ 7. No person whose religious faith and practice is such as is specified in the second section of said Act, shall be liable to work on the highways, in any road district in this State, on the said seventh-day of the week, provided he shall within eight months next previous have filed with the overseer of highways of said district an affidavit made by him in the form specified in the second section of this Act.

§ 8. No School District Meeting shall be called or held on said seventh-day of the week in any school district in this State in which one-fourth of the taxable inhabitants of said district, being of the faith and practice mentioned in the second section of this Act, shall have filed with the district clerk their affidavits in the form specified in the second section of this Act. And when, by adjournment or otherwise, any such meeting is now to be held on said seventh-day of the week, the trustees of said district shall be authorized, and they are hereby required, to change the day of such meeting, and the usual and required notice of such meeting for the day to which the same shall be changed, shall thereupon be given as required by law.

§ 9. Nothing in this act contained shall extend to any process or proceeding against any person of the description mentioned in the second section of this act, for any felony, misdemeanor, or breach of the peace, nor to any writ, attachment, execution, or process against the property of any such person.

§ 10. Any wilful false swearing in making any affidavit authorized by or mentionod in this Act, shall subject the party guilty thereof to the punishment, fines, and penalities of perjury.

On showing me the Bill, the Committee assured me that it would be impossible to frame a general law that would be as good as a specific one. They therefore framed it with its several specifications. On examining it, I expressed my gratitude for the improvement made in it, but informed them that we should consider it burdensome and unequal to be compelled to submit to its provisions, and requested that they would amend it by striking out of the several sections of the Bill the clause that required the affidavit with a copy of the law annexed in order to be protected. The Committee agreed to consider it further, and I then penned the following note:—

ALBANY, Feb. 12, 1846.

Gentlemen of the Select Committee of the Assembly, having in charge the Bill for the protection of Seventh-day Baptists:—

As a representative of that denomination, I would most respectfully ask that those observing the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath be not required to make affidavit, with a copy of this law attached thereto, as is required in the second section of the Bill now before you; but instead of that, give a written notice to the effect that they, as observers of the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath, come within the provisions of this law. To any false notice thus given, you may annex whatever penalty you may deem proper. I am induced to ask this, because I am persuaded that your petitioners will be satisfied with this course, while they will consider it oppressive and unequal to require the former.

Most respectfully yours,
JAMES BAILEY.

I also objected to the last clause of the 9th Section, viz. "That nothing in this Act shall extend to any writ, attachment, execution, or process, against the property of any such person." By this clause, any evil disposed person might very much annoy many who observe the Sabbath.

The Committee finally engaged Mr. Harris of Albany to draft a Bill. I had an interview with him, and explained our wishes and views, to which he fully responded, and drafted a Bill that would give us all that we could ask without the objectionable features of the other Bill. It also provided for imposing a fine of $25 against any one who should maliciously annoy us on the Sabbath. Mr. Hull however objected to it, and the Bill framed by the Select Committee was so modified that the oath could be made on or after the service of the process, and a copy of the law be dispensed with. In this shape it was reported to the House, and was passed without opposition.

I conversed with several Senators, but deeming it inexpedient for me to remain in Albany till final action should be had, I engaged several Members of the Assembly to use their influence to secure its passage in the Senate. From all the encouragement I received, I considered the Bill safe, and therefore returned home. After several weeks, I received information that after the Bill was passed in the House, it was referred to the Judiciary Committee in the Senate, and an adverse report made, that was concurred in. Thus the Bill was lost, and we placed on the law of 1839. I am persuaded that some of the Senators, especially Mr. Spencer, could not have been in their seats when this report was made, or they would have objected to it.

It was suggested at the time of my appointment, that I should use my influence against the passage of any law for closing canal locks, &c., on Sunday, if an effort should be made; and also do what else I could to bring the Sabbath into notice. There was no effort of importance made to have the canal locks closed on Sunday, or in any other way to legally sanctify Sunday. Only one petition to that effect was presented while I was there. I conceived it would be productive of more harm than good to attack this single petition in any manner, and therefore let it pass unnoticed.

I designed to secure, if practicable, the use of the Assembly church to give a Sabbath lecture in, hoping by this course to bring the Sabbath into notice. Dr. Edwards, a few years since, obtained it to deliver a Sunday lecture in. But I soon learned that the Members were unwilling to grant the use of it for almost any purpose, and were in the habit of refusing it; and having no one upon whom I could rely to aid me, I deemed it unadvisable to make the request. Still hoping to bring the subject before the public, I applied to the clerk, who was also a deacon of one of the Baptist churches, for the use of their house, but could not obtain it. All prospect of bringing the subject before the public was thus cut off. I did not think it advisable to bring the subject into the public journals, unless there had been some demonstrations for securing aid for sanctifying Sunday. In that case, I should have done according to my ability.

In conclusion, I would add, that although our petitions have not been granted, yet some prominence has been given to the denomination by the large list of petitions presented. And perhaps a failure, just at this time, is better than to have succeeded, as we can now make an effort to have our organic law so amended as to meet our wishes. Every effort we make brings the Sabbath of the Bible and its claims, more into notice, and such agitation will be very likely to bring the conscientious Christian to a proper examination of the subject.

JAMES BAILEY.

THE WAYS OF PROVIDENCE.

The following account is given by the Rev. Legh Richmond, as having been related by a minister in a meeting of the British and Foreign Bible Society.

A drunkard was one day staggering in drink on the brink of the sea. His little son by him three years of age, being very hungry, solicited him for something to eat. The miserable father, conscious of his poverty and the criminal cause of it, in a kind of rage occasioned by his intemperance and despair, hurled the little innocent into the sea, and made off with himself. The poor little sufferer, finding a floating plank by his side on the water, clung to it. The wind soon wafted him and the plank into the sea. A British man-of-war passing by discovered the plank and child, and a sailor, at the risk of his life, plunged into the sea and brought him on board. He could inform them little more than that his name was Jack. They gave him the name of Poor Jack. He grew up on board that man-of-war, behaved well, and gained the love of all the officers and men. He became an officer of the sick and wounded department. During an action of the late war an aged man came under his care, nearly in a dying state. He was all attention to the suffering stranger, but he could not save his life.

The aged stranger was dying, and thus addressed this kind young officer: 'For the great attention you have shown me, I give you this only treasure that I am possessed of, (presenting him a Bible bearing the stamp of the British and Foreign Bible Society.) It was given me by a lady—has been the means of my conversion, and has been a great comfort to me. Read it, and it will lead you in the way you should go. He went on to confess the wickedness and profligacy of his life before the reception of this Bible; and among other enormities, how he cast his little son, three years old, into the sea, because he cried to him for needed food.

The young officer inquired of him the time and place, and found here was his own history. Reader, judge, if you can, of his feelings, to recognize in the dying old man his father, a dying penitent under his care; and judge of the feelings of the dying penitent, to find that the young stranger was his son, the very son whom he had plunged into the sea, and had no idea but that he had immediatly perished. A description of their mutual feelings will not be attempted. The old man soon expired in the arms of his son. The latter left the service and became a pious preacher of the gospel. On closing his story, the minister in the meeting of the Bible Society bowed to the chairman and said, 'Sir, I am Poor Jack.'

CALVIN AND LUTHER.

Calvin was a clear-headed lawyer; Luther was a stout-hearted hero. Calvin was as remorseless in carrying out his dogmas as was ever Napoleon in charging bayonet upon his foe. He was not deterred from his sober purpose even by any superstitious feelings or wayward fancies. He never saw devils as Luther did, nor brought the allegorical conceits of his time to the interpretation of Scripture. Calvin had none of Luther's glowing fancy, little of his love of nature, his passion for music, his delight in the arts that adorn the home and the altar. He had a mind in its very nature puritanical, and it cost him no sacrifices of taste to exchange an imposing cathedral for an ungarnished conventicle. Luther was by temperament much of a churchman, and exhibited the old church feeling quite as much in his ideas of music, rites and emblems, as in his dogmas of consubstantiation.

In personal relations, Calvin was a much cooler friend and far more deliberate opponent than Luther. He could never, like the Saxon, weep in agony over a child. His letters after the death of his father, his wife and only child, show little of a breaking heart. His pen turns easily from the mournful theme to write other things. If his idea of woman is to be taken from his own description of the qualities he needed in a wife, she who best combines the qualities of nurse and cook is the ideal of the sex. The fact that his constitution was somewhat nervous and sickly may somewhat excuse such an opinion.

In active power, Calvin was more the student and counsellor than the man of executive force. He was naturally timid and retiring, with little disposition or gifts to move him to be forward even in a sphere so quiet as the pulpit. In the study, he could be the theologian, the lawyer, and the statesman. He did not love the market place, the council, or the social hall. Necessity seemed to make him in reality what otherwise he could have been only in thought—the theocrat of a new Israel. Yet no necessity could change his nature or give him the warm blood and heroic will of Luther. [Rev. S. Osgood.

A GEM.—In an account of a lost child in Missouri, going the newspaper rounds, we find a sentiment, that for a simple expression of that confiding reliance on the Divine care, which should characterize a believer in a Providence, we have never seen surpassed. The little boy narrating the incidents of his wanderings, when night came on, says, "It grew very dark, and I asked God to take care of little Johnny, and went to sleep."

WISDOM.—Wisdom consists in not thinking we understand those things, or rather fancies, of which we can form no natural conception. [Socrates.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, July 16, 1846.

☞ The Executive Board of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association holds its next meeting at Metouchin, N. J., on first-day, July 19, at 2 o'clock P. M. This meeting is one of great importance. It should be generally attended by members of the Board, and prayerfully remembered by all who feel an interest in the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom.

SUNDAY LAWS—PERSECUTION IN PENNSYLVANIA.

We are often told by those who favor the enactment of laws against working on Sunday, that such laws are not designed to restrict the privileges of Sabbath-keepers, and ought not therefore to meet with their opposition. No doubt this declaration is sometimes made in good faith, by persons who really think that they are doing God service in advocating Sunday laws, and that we are wounding the cause of religion by opposing them. But facts have come to light within a year past, which show beyond the possibility of dispute, that all laws in favor of the first-day of the week, when consistently carried out, are necessarily unjust and oppressive in their bearing upon those who observe the seventh-day. Of course, therefore, we are bound to resist them, and have a right to expect the countenance and support of all enlightened friends of religious freedom an equality.

We are led to these remarks by reading a letter from one of the German Seventh-day Baptists of Snowhill, Pa., informing us that the work of persecution has again commenced against that unoffending people. Our readers will remember, that something more than a year ago certain "lewd fellows of the baser sort" created a riotous disturbance at one of the religious meetings of the Snowhill Society. For this they were complained of—not by members of the Society, but by friends of good order in no way connected with the Society—and several of them were fined or imprisoned. Last August, as a means of securing revenge, some of these persons entered complaint against several of the Snowhill members for working on Sunday, and had them brought before a justice of the peace, by whom they were fined according to an Act passed in 1794, which had seldom if ever before been enforced. Since then they have refrained from working in their fields on Sunday, and have petitioned the Legislature, though unsuccessfully, to relieve them from the application of the old law by which they were fined.

On Sunday, the 21st of June, however, being the busiest part of the haying season, when several of the members had much grass lying out, they went to work in the fields. To this course they had been advised by many of their first-day neighbors, who recommended them, if complained of, to stand a trial, and if fined to carry the case up to the higher courts. Their persecutors were aware of their intention, and accordingly formed a company who rode to a meeting in the neighborhood, and thence went from farm to farm to see who was at work. Fourteen persons were singled out for persecution, and their names returned. The trial was to have taken place on the 30th of June, but the suit was posponed until the 14th of July. Should the magistrate then give judgment against them, they intend to carry the case to the County Court; and if defeated there, they will appeal to the Supreme Court, and see how far the Constitution of the State is respected by that body. In determining to pursue this course, they have no doubt acted wisely; and we confidently hope that the result will be a triumphant vindication of that portion of the State Constitution which says, "No law shall ever be passed to interfere with the rights of conscience."

There can be but little difference of opinion as to the motive which prompted this crusade against the German Seventh-day Baptists. It was not a respect for the Sabbath, but a love of revenge. That the men who went from farm to farm to spy out those who were at work had no respect for the Sabbath, is evident from the fact that on their route they called at a tavern for liquor, and also rode several miles out of their way to get a supply of cherries. That revenge was what they sought, is evident from the fact that every person who has yet taken part in the persecution is connected in some way with the riot of last summer—the riot on account of which prosecutions were commenced, as we have before said, not by members of the Seventh-day Baptist Society, but by persons in no way connected with them. We are glad to state, that the religious portion of the commmunity in the immediate neighborhood of the Society, do not sympathize with the persecutors, but with the Sabbath-keepers. They have shown their sympathy during the past winter by signing petitions to the Legislature for relief, and they show it now by giving no countenance to these movements. Of course religious men would be as likely as any body to feel the annoyance of having their neighbors at work on Sunday. But yet they suffer no inconvenience from it. Why should others complain? This whole transaction deepens our conviction of the truth of what we have said heretofore, that the laws now in existence against working on Sunday are good for nothing else but to enable blind bigots and designing hypocrites to wreak their vengeance upon those who conscientiously observe the seventh-day.

—In this connection we cannot refrain from publishing the following letter, written last winter to a member of the Pennsylvania Legislature, by a gentleman who was a member of the late Convention of Pennsylvania, and whose name is favorably known. It breaths a true manly and Christian spirit, and shows in what light the German Seventh-day Baptists of Snowhill are regarded by candid persons:—

John Stewart, Esq.:

Dear Sir—Permit me to address you upon a subject about which I have for some time had serious reflections; and not I alone, but many of my neighbors have their sympathies. The subject in question is relating to our Seventh-day Baptists at Snowhill. It appears that their case is now before your honorable body, and it is hoped that a favorable result may be effected. I would consider it, on my part, rather presumptive to intimate an idea to you which might be construed as dictating. But suffer me to state, that some of our good people have expressed the opinion that a law to exonerate said Baptists from the fine of violating the first-day of the week, or what we call the Lord's Day, would be unconstitutional. You are well aware, that such is not the fact; for the Constitution says that "no law shall ever be passed to interfere with the rights of conscience." It would therefore appear, that the act of 1794, which inflicts a fine for violating the first-day of the week, is unconstitutional, for that act makes no exceptions, and therefore infringes upon the rights of conscience with the Seventh-day Baptists. It is much to be regretted, that they did not make application to the Convention when revising the Constitution. Had they done so, they might have had a clause inserted which would have avoided all the present difficulty.

It is well understood, I may venture to say, by a large majority of our well-disposed persons, that said Baptists are a sober, unoffensive, honest class of our community, and as respectable as any other. It is therefore hoped, and also the desire of the neighbors generally, that your honorable body will pass a law exempting them from the fine for pursuing their labors on the first-day of the week; otherwise they will be compelled to keep both days. But should they fail in getting their ends accomplished at this time, they certainly will persist in their intentions, and implore every legislature from year to year until they do succeed.

As stated before, it is not my intention to dictate to you or Mr. Pomeroy. With that gentleman I have but a slight acquaintance, but must confess, so far as I know him, he stands high in my estimation. But the probability is, that he and Mr. Carson, on account of the distance they reside from Snowhill Society, have not that intimate knowledge of them which their neighbors have. It is perhaps nothing unreasonable, therefore, if they should not feel the same affection for them as those who are acquainted with them. But it is sincerely hoped that you three gentlemen, from the same county, will use your influence in their behalf; and I feel satisfied that there will be no censure cast upon you by any person who loves to see good order and the laws respected, for of such is the Society at Snowhill. Your affectionate friend.

THE GREAT WESTERN ANTI-SLAVERY CONVENTION.

Chicago, Ill., June 26, 1846.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

I hasten to inform you of the great Liberty Party Convention which came off here this week—the largest one of the kind ever held in the West. The mammoth tent from Ohio was procured, which was so crowded that they were obliged to take down the sides to make room for the vast multitude. Some say there were over five thousand in attendance, full one-third of whom were females. There were several distinguished speakers present; among whom were Mr. Hamlin, of Ohio, late Member of Congress; Messrs. Bibb, Beck, and Harris, of Mich.; Mr. Lovejoy, and several other good speakers from Illinois and Wisconsin. Several resolutions were brought before the Convention, which were ably discussed; and here permit me to add, that every resolution which related to the great idea of the party was passed with scarcely a dissenting voice. Many indeed who professed to be pro-slavery men voted in favor of those resolutions.

Perhaps you have seen Mr. Bibb, and heard him deliver his narrative. He is truly a subject that demands the sympathy of the American people—not altogether because he has been a poor ignorant slave—not because he lacks judgment—but because with qualities which render him one of the noblest of God's children, and with a heart full of sympathy for distressed humanity, a bosom overflowing with the patriotism of '76, he knows from observation that three millions of his brethren groan and writhe beneath the tyrant's grasp, and yet sees but little action taken upon this subject by those who profess to be opposed to slavery. It is almost insupportable to him, and for this reason he demands our sympathy. Notwithstanding he has spent twenty-five years in the most degrading bondage; notwithstanding he has been called upon to pass through scenes which it would make a man with the hardest heart shed tears to hear him relate; notwithstanding he has a wife and child in hopeless servitude in a southern clime, the tyrant over whom has reduced the darling of his bosom to prostitution; yet he stands up, in mind, eloquence, and Christian benevolence, a noble specimen of the race which God created a little lower than the angels. His language is of the best; he makes no use of high-flown words; his is pure native eloquence, simple though sublime, smooth yet deep, irresistibly piercing the heart of every hearer. At one time he holds the assembly spell-bound in the most joyful anticipations of youth; at another he casts a cloud of dark despair over their future days; again he places them, as it were, between the gulf of darkness and the haven of endless bliss, now hoping to reach the latter, now trembling for fear of sinking into the former. At one time he makes the heart leap with joy at a happy meeting with wife and children; at another melt with pity at a cruel separation. Now his countenance beams with innocence; again his low and dismal voice, like the distant thunder, tells the hearer of an approaching tempest. At one time his audience sits in listless silence, dreading the issue of an approaching event; at another impatient to have him proceed as he pauses a moment for breath. Thus, by the simplicity of his language, his sound reasoning, his warm feelings, and the truthfulness of his narrative, he entertains the largest audience for several hours. Whatever else may be said of this truly wonderful man, he is destined to become one of the best speakers in the West, a most useful citizen, and a powerful advocate of emancipation.

Mr. Hamlin of Ohio entertained the audience somewhat over two hours with a very sound and eloquent address. Mr. Lovejoy, who is the candidate of the Liberty Party for Congress from this district, brother of the Lovejoy who fell a martyr to the liberty of the press at Alton, spoke upon several resolutions with the spirit of a republican. Mr. Clarke, of your city, sung several beautiful songs, with which the audience were greatly delighted. Perfect good order preprevailed throughout the whole aseembly.

Yours &c., G. R. C.

"THE CENTRAL ASSOCIATION AND THE AMERICAN AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY."

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

I noticed in your paper of July 2d, a piece with the above caption, subscribed Thomas B. Brown, containing strictures on the course pursued by the Central Association, and the reception they gave the Agent of the American and Foreign Bible Society. He (Bro. Brown) states that his (the Agent's) mission was received in a manner that could not have been very gratifying to his feelings. I take the liberty to dissent entirely from the views expressed by brother Brown. We were bound to treat him with Christian politeness, but we were not bound to co-operate with the American and Foreign Bible Society. Brother Leonard was treated with the utmost courtesy, not only during the session of the Association, but at the houses of the ministers and brethren whom he visited previous to its session. He received their hospitalities, and was welcomed to their pulpits, and every facility was proffered him that he could desire. At the Association he was introduced to the Association, and was invited to lay before them any business with which he might be charged. On his presenting his mission, a committee was raised to confer with him on the subject embraced in his mission, who met with him, and a free interchange of views was made, after which the committee recommended that he be invited to lecture before the Association, with which request he complied, and gave an excellent lecture on the importance of giving the Scriptures to all men, which I presume gave universal satisfaction. But we have the evidence of the New York Baptist Register to sustain us against the charge preferred by brother Brown. (See Baptist Register, July 3d.) I deeply regret that brother Brown should have felt himself at liberty to publicly assail the Central Association without possessing more extensive information on the subject.

But impoliteness is not our only fault. Bro. Brown insinuates that we think that every organization composed of religious people, no matter for what purpose formed, ought to regard itself as bound to preach in regard to every sin that troubles the land. I presume no member of the Central Association entertains any such opinion, at any rate the writer of this repudiates it in toto. But while he rejects this doctrine, he does hold, that in every organization of religious people for benevolent objects, they should be governed by the divine law in forming their organizations, and they should not adopt principles that would to any extent defeat their object and expose them to the charge of inconsistency and hypocrisy. Our objection to co-operating with the American and Foreign Bible Society is not based upon their object; of this we cordially approve. Nor is it because "they do not leave the circulation of the Scriptures to expound them." We object to the organization of the Society, and the manner of compassing its object. God has forbidden the bringing into his treasury the wages of a harlot. See Deut. 33: 18. He likewise declares that he hates robbery for a burnt-offering. See Isaiah 61: 8. Would brother Brown receive the wages of licentiousness to aid in sending the Scriptures to the heathen? I presume he would not. But slavery compels its victims to live in a state of concubinage, and strips the female of all protection to her chastity. Slavery robs its victim of his wages, and himself in the bargain, and then offers the one and the price of the other to send the Bible to the heathen of other lands, while it makes it a crime to teach a colored man to read* in this.

The Apostle exhorts to have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them. See Eph. 5: 11. Does the American and Foreign Bible Society reprove slaveholding while she admits the slaveholder to all the privileges of the Society? By no means. If slaveholding is not a work of darkness, it will be difficult to say what is. But slavery to a certain extent defeats the avowed object of the American and Foreign Bible Society, which is to give the Scriptures without note or comment to all men; while American Slavery denies the Bible to nearly three millions of American citizens. I conceive that the American and Foreign Bible Society recognize principles that subject them to the charge of inconsistency and hypocrisy. They profess to give the Bible to the heathen of foreign lands, yet they fraternize with men who make heathen of American citizens and then withhold the Scriptures from them. This is shown by the reports of southern ecclesiastical bodies themselves. How would an agent of the Society appear to an enlightened heathen of Asia? Would he not charge him with hypocrisy, when proffering the Bible to him as Heaven's best gift to man, and at the same time holding those in full fellowship who deny this boon to their own countrymen? But I contend that the American and Foreign Bible Society do virtually sustain the Central Association, in the course they have adopted by withdrawing from the American Bible Society. What was the charge preferred by the former against the latter? It was simply withholding the translation of a few words, while they gave those words in their original dress. If they were justified in separating for the above cause, are we not justified in refusing to unite with a society which in its connections withholds the whole Bible from millions of American citizens?

Brother Brown, in conclusion, professes to be gratified that some of the Seventh-day Baptist churches have contributed to the funds of the American and Foreign Bible Society, and that the act of the Central Association is not a denominational one. To which I reply, that the Central Association never pretended to be the representative of the denomination, nor has she ever presumed to dictate to other ecclesiastical bodies what principles they should adopt, or what course they should pursue, but has attended to the transaction of their own business in their own way.

A Member of the Central Association.

How our Tracts work among Sunday-keepers.—Some years ago I happened to be temporarily occupying the room of a Baptist brother at Hamilton, where he was studying for the ministry. Eld. W., of Washington Co., N. Y., came in and was introduced to me. During a conversation which ensued, he saw a "Sabbath Almanac," and supposing me to be one of his own brethren, said, "Ah, do you have these things here too?" I replied, that there was now and then one to be found at the Institution. "Well," continued he, "somebody sent me one through the mail, and I read it through, and I think they have got the strongest argument on their side." I replied, that I believed there were some who thought so. "Yes," he continued, "I think the Scripture evidence is on their side, and it will be a difficult thing to get round them." At this stage of the conversation, I was called out for a moment. On my return, he appeared to have learned that I was a Sabbath-keeper, and had no more to say. Of course, under such circumstances, I could not press him, and so the matter ended. I could but think that his unwitting confession of the truth was just what might be obtained from hundreds if we could meet them in the same circumstances.

Progress of the Sabbath [Sunday] Union.—The Rhode Island branch of this organization lately held a meeting, and urged upon its Executive Committee the expediency of using all exertions to stop the running of steamboats, railroad cars, and omnibuses, on the Sabbath—(meaning the Sunday)—and to prevent the opening of livery stables for letting horses and carriages, of markets for the sale of provisions, of post offices, etc., on that day. Of course, if the Executive Committee are faithful to their trust, an appeal will be made for legislative authority, if they have not laws at present which will enable them to do it, since nothing less than that will be "using all exertions." The labor of the past year has been to supply every family in the State with a copy of the "Sabbath Manual," through which the good people of the State have seen the necessity of the Sabbath to secure a long life and the greatest amount of work from both man and beast; and now, it seems, the Union designs to put on the screws, and carry out the maxim, that "the bird that will not sing must be made to sing."

P.

Speaking like a Christian.—The Michigan State Journal, in speaking of the doctrine couched in the popular adage, "Our Country, right or wrong," and the danger that denouncing the iniquity of the war with Mexico will hurt the party to which it is attached, says:—

"Straight-forward honesty is as superior in policy as in true manliness to the cunning shams of expediency politicians, who are afraid that speaking the truth, and acting honestly, will injure the party! Why, bless your careful souls!—don't you know that a party that is injured by doing right, deserves to be killed stone dead? Speaking the sincere and honest truth and living it, can never injure any thing but Satan's kingdom."

Well would it be for "our country," if it had only such editors to direct its public press, and politicians to act out such principles. Well too would it be for the church, if she had only such editors and ministers. Men are slow to learn that honesty in all cases is really the best policy.

Progress of Episcopacy.—The English government is about to establish a Bishopric in Hong Kong. The Bishop of London has received $25,000 from one individual to endow it, and the same sum from another for the foundation of a College; $40,000 has been received from other sources for the same objects. Two bishoprics are also to be established in Australia.

Great Temperance Meeting.—The Delavan State Temperance Union, embracing several of the Temperance Societies of the People of Color in New York, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Jersey, and Maryland, held its fourth anniversary at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., on the 8th of July inst. Four or five steamboats, chartered expressly for the purpose, conveyed the members of the Society to the place of meeting from New York, Troy, Albany, and other towns along the Hudson. There were probably four thousand persons present from abroad. A procession about one mile long was formed, composed entirely of the colored race, with banners, devices, &c., and several bands of music. The exercises were held under a large and beautiful tent prepared for the occasion. They consisted of an address by the President, H. H. Garnett—the Annual Report, read by the Secrtary—and the discussion of several resolutions by Messrs. Julius C. Morell, Horace Greeley, Rev. C. Van Loon, and others. The meeting adjourned towards evening, when the boats left Poughkeepsie on their return. Those who were present speak of the meeting as one calculated to cheer the heart of every friend of the temperance reform.

London Missionary Society.—This Society held its anniversary at Exeter Hall, London, on the 14th of May last. It was stated in the Annual Report, that gratifying success had attended the missions in Polynesia, India, China, and the West Indies. Several new missionary stations have been added. There are now connected with the Society one hundred and sixty-five European missionaries, and seven hundred native pastors. The Society has theological seminaries established in India and Polynesia, in which more than fifty young men are receiving a ministerial education. It was stated that the worst difficulties the missionaries have to contend with are the agents of the Church of Rome, particularly in South Africa, where their strength is very greatand rapidly increasing. In the Mauritus, batch of young Irish Roman Catholic priests had just arrived to cope with the missionaries. One of these young men was such a zealot that he scarcely ever ate any thing, lived constantly in the church, wore a belt closely studded with small nails, and slept in a coffin half filled with ashes. The receipts of the Society during the year were £80,000, or near $400,000.

The Free Church of Scotland.—The experiment of sustaining a church in Scotland upon the voluntary principle proves quite successful, and there is reason to hope that its influence will not be lost upon other Churches supported by the State throughout Europe. The Free Church has already fifty ministers and about seventy congregations in Canada; its missions in India and other pagan lands are nobly sustained; and its efforts in the work of evangelization at home indicate an enlarged liberality. At the late meeting of the General Assembly it was stated that the contributions to missionary and educational objects during the past year had been more than three hundred and fifty thousand dollars. Of this sum more than five thousand dollars was contributed by juvenile societies."

Consequences of the Hot Weather.—There were two or three excessively hot days last week, the consequences of which were frightful to man and beast. We have seen no statement of the number of over-driven horses which dropped down and died in the streets of N. Y.; but the Coroner's report states that from Friday to Sunday noon he was called to hold inquests upon over thirty persons whose deaths, with few exceptions, were occasioned by exposure in the sun.

☞ The following article is copied from the Geneva Evangelist. We wonder if the Editor of that paper ever heard of a man's being drowned on any other day than Sunday. One would think not, from the improvement which he makes of this instance. Yet we could tell him of thirty persons drowned on a Sabbath morning less than three weeks ago, or of fifty persons burned to death while attending a theatre on a Sabbath evening less than five weeks ago. In either of these instances we think it would be much easier to find proof of an "awful visitation" than in the case before us. They did not occur on Sunday, however, and therefore the editor of the Evangelist can see no warning in them.

Sabbath Desecration—Awful Result.—The particulars of the following awful visitation we take from the Democrat of Wednesday. On Sunday last, at the mouth of Sandy Creek, in the town of Clarkson, about twenty-six miles from this city, a party of young men entered a boat for the purpose of amusing themselves on the water. Among them was a Frenchman named Pierce, who could not swim, and who showed some alarm whenever the boat was rocked. His companions discovering this, commenced rocking the boat so violently that it finally upset, and threw the whole party into the water. The Frenchman immediately called for help, and one of the party went to his assistance. The drowning man seized him and held him so tight that there was danger of both perishing. He managed, however, by tearing off part of his clothes, to get clear from him and swim to shore. A young man named Robert Hoskins, an expert swimmer, then went to the assistance of the Frenchman, who was fast sinking, and he was seized and dragged under water, where they both perished before assistance could arrive to their aid. The bodies were recovered about three hours afterwards. Hoskins was a son of an old settler in that vicinity, and was very much esteemed.

DOINGS IN CONGRESS.

The Senate last week passed a bill to sell the reserved mineral lands in Arkansas, Illinois, Iowa, and Wisconsin. They also passed the Land Graduation Bill by a vote of 26 to 18. The resolution passed by the House thanking Gen. Taylor and the army for the victories on the frontier of Texas, was adopted by the Senate. The Tariff Bill was received from the House, and made the special order of the day for Monday of this week. A great number of private bills were passed, which are not of sufficient interest to the general reader to pay for enumerating.

The House of Representatives passed a resolution to adjourn on the 3d of August. But the principal subject before that body was the Land Graduation Bill. This was discussed with much animation through several sessions. The debate on the Bill ended on Friday. The whole of the following day was spent in disposing of amendments, and the final vote was not taken when the House adjourned at two o'clock until Monday morning. The subject was under consideration all of Monday, but no decission was obtained.

American Ocean Steamers.—There is now lying at the Novelty Iron Works in this city, where she is receiving her machinery, an Ocean Steamer of about 1,000 tons measurement, nearly completed. She is intended for a new line between Charleston, S. C., and this city, and is to be called the Southerner. She will be the first mercantile marine steamer in the United States. Her owners intend, as soon as she is completed, to build a companion for her, to be called the Northerner. The Ocean Steam Navigation Company are just closing a contract with the same eminent steam-engine establishment for the machinery for the first of five magnificent steamers of 1,750 tons measurement, which the Company have contracted with the United States Government to run as mail steamers to Cowes, Havre, and Bremen.

Singular Case of Poisoning.—We find in Alexandria, La., papers the following account of the trial and conviction of an old negress named Hannah, a black girl named Judy, and a boy, for poisoning Mr. Sheffield, an overseer on the plantation of Capt. Wilkinson, on the Red River, his wife and child, and Dr. Shields:

From some cause the negress Judy formed a dislike for Mr. Sheffield, the overseer, and communicated her feelings to an old woman named Hannah, who wielded considerable influence in the quarter. It would seem that this woman was the master spirit of the diabolical proceedings that ensued. She suggested poison as the surest means of getting rid of the overseer, and named the seed of the Jamestown weed as 'certain death.'

The seed were procured by the boy Bill Johnson, and this appears to be the head and front of his offending. They were green, and were ground with coffee, which was given to Mr. and Mrs. Sheffield and child, Dr. Shields, and a negress. Sickness immediately followed, which would undoubtedly have resulted in death had the seed been in a state of preservation, as a more certain poison cannot be named.

When arrested the girl and boy made a full confession, but the old woman maintained rigid silence. After a clear and patient investigation, she was found guilty and sentenced to be hung on the 3d inst. The boy was sentenced to wear around his neck a five pound iron collar for twelve months; and the girl to wear a similar collar, and to receive twenty-five lashes per month for the same period.

Shooting.—In New York, on Saturday last, Henry C. Marx, alias Dandy Marx, residing in Broadway, near Fourth-street, was arrested for shooting and dangerously wounding a young milk-man named Francis Crusick, under the following circumstances, viz: It appears that a sister of Crusick had been living in the family of Marx as a domestic for about six weeks, but in consequence of her compensation not being liquidated to her satisfaction she left, and this morning came to the city with her brother, and called at the house to ask for the amount alledged to be due her, when, as it is stated by the girl, the door was shut in her face; whereupon she informed her brother how she had been treated, and on going to the house of Marx himself, with a view of seeing that justice was done to his sister, Marx fired off a pistol loaded with heavy shot, seriously wounding him.

Cleanliness and Godliness.—A New York paper of Monday morning last says: "A friend who looked down to the Pavilion at Coney Island yesterday, reports that he saw at least Five Thousand of our citizens illustrating the natural affinity between cleanliness and godliness by a cooling roll in the surf which breaks on the shining sand of that fairy Isle. We trust they all came up refreshed and edified, and were prompt and attentive at Church in the afternoon and evening."

Murder of Mr. Schoolcraft.—The Albany Evening Journal contains the following by Telegraph:

Buffalo, July 10, 1846.

The steamer Niagara is in from Chicago, having made the run in 3 days and 20 minutes, including all stops. By her we learn of the death of Mr. Henry R. Schoolcraft, late Indian Agent at Sault St. Marie. He was murdered by a Half Breed named Tanner, last week. The muderer is at large, but pursued by the entire population.

The Boston Post has an account of a stupendous piece of ordnance which was cast at Alger's Foundry, South Boston, on the afternoon of the 8th inst., which when finished, will exceed Captain Stockton's celebrated "Peacemaker," by 5000 pounds in weight. The quantity of metal used was about 46,000 pounds, and the amount of coal used in reducing it to the requisite state of fusion was eight chaldrons.

The Striped Pig.—Some years since, on a muster day in old Massachusetts, a rumseller erected his tent and advertised on the outside, that a stiped pig was to be seen within—admittance, six cents. Within was a common pig with some stripes made upon him with a paint brush. So they paid for seeing the pig, and drank what rum they pleased for nothing. From the following, which we clip from the Genesee Evangelist, it appears that a rumseller has tried a similar plan in Western New York, but without success.

"A rumseller in Erie Co. undertook to evade the license law by exhibiting the pictures of "Polk and Dallas" at six-pence a show, and giving the viewers a drink. But some of his customers were called upon to give testimony, which they did to the purport that they frequently went to the defendant's house for the purpose of seeing Polk and Dallas—gave six-pence, and got a drink of whiskey gratis. The jury found the defendant guilty."

Decidedly the Coolest Case of Impudence yet!—The Rochester Advertiser says that one of the most unblushing cases of impudence of the rascals who prey upon our citizens, that has ever come to our knowledge, occurred a day or two since. Something like three months ago a rogue entered the barn of Dr. Mathews and carried off a set of one-horse harness, which had just been purchased. Diligent search was made for a short time, but without success, and the Doctor was forced to buy him another. The new one, however, had hardly got soiled before that, too, came up missing, and on going to harness his horse yesterday morning he found the same identical old harness hanging up in the place of the new one, and attached to it was a very polite letter explaining the reason of its return. The rogue stated that some time previous he had taken the harness under the impression that it would answer his purpose, but after using it three or four months he found it would not do at all; and as the new one looked as though it might do very well, he would make the exchange; that he was just going out on a little peddling excursion, and would return in the fall, when he would call upon the Doctor, and either pay him for the harness or return it!

Pillory.—The punishment of Pillory was, on the 6th, inflicted upon Andrew Musseiman and Wm. Marks, who were sentenced to endure this punishment, so little beneficial to the criminal, so disgusting to the spectators, and so disgraceful to the age and the country. The prisoners remained in the frame about half an hour exposed to the view of about 500 white persons and three times that number of negroes. It is twenty years since this punishment has been inflicted in Charleston, and having been again revived, we trust it is only to receive its death blow from our Legislature at its next session.

The Commissioners made every effort in their power to reclaim her, but she would not listen to their kind offers; but fled with her husband to the prairies. Even if she should be restored to her kindred here she would probably take advantage of the first opportunity, and flee away to the wilds of Northern Texas.

The Louisville Courier says, "During the recent severe storm in this vicinity, a large tree about two feet in diameter, on the farm of Mr. Brasher, was blown down, and a large pile of musket balls, about 150 pounds in weight, was found among the roots of the tree. A French boat, on its way from Fort Duquesne in 1754 or '55, was captured by the Indians near where the tree was blown down, and it is supposed they threw this keg of bullets on the bank of the river, and the tree sprung up and hid the bullets until the recent storm revealed them.

Considerable excitement was caused in Rochester, N. Y. on the 4th inst, by the announcement in a flaming hand-bill that at a certain hour in the day, an individual would jump from the center of the Genesee Falls into the stream below. Long before the hour arrived, the banks on both sides were lined by an eager crowd, with eyes wide extended, and waiting with gaping wonder for a demonstration of the fact that "some things can be done as well as others." The appointed hour came and went, as did the succeeding one, and yet no Sam Patch appeared; and then the crowd, in the most quiet way imaginable, "grew small by degrees and beautifully less."

The Philadelphia correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune, under date of July 10, says: "To think of writing a letter to-day is preposterous—the thermometer at 103, and not a breeze stirring! I could as soon expect to imitate the old Roman and hold my hand over a flame to show my powers of endurance. Write! why, flesh is melting and drops from our finger's end like tallow from a dip. How they came into the possession of the family is not known; but there was no question of their being genuine.

FLOWERS.

The English appear to me to have a strong passion for flowers, and I commend their taste. A country house without its plantation of flowers and flowering shrubs would be quite an anomaly; and many of the humble and moss-grown cottages have their small gardens of flowers, their doors trellised with woodbines and honey-suckles, and their outer wall covered with a thick mantling of ivy, and made gay with the sweet brier and monthly rose. The dooryards of the English in the country, their windows, their halls, their palaces, are all decorated with flowers; they are among the most beautiful ornaments at their festivals, and even the highest charms of female loveliness are studiously augmented by these innocent and splendid adornments.

Looking out of my window a short time since, I saw that the laborer, wheeling his barrow before the door, had his button-hole decorated with a beautiful geranium. I went into the street, and the driver of the omnibus whom I first met wore a handsome nosegay. I met a bridal party, and besides the white favors worn by all the servants in attendance, each one had a bunch of flowers at his breast. I met the crowd of magnificent equipages hastening to a drawing-room to pay their courtly homage to a sovereign queen, whose virtues and most exemplary demeanor render her worthy of the homage of true affection and respect; and every lady bore in her hand a magnificent bouquet; and the coachmen and the footman seemed to emulate each other in the gaiety and beauty of the flowers which they all wear. At St. Paul's at the opening of the term of courts, the long procession of grave and learned judges, who then go in state to church, appears, each one with an elegant nosegay in his hand. At the opera, upon the breathless and successful competitors for public favor, in the midst of a tempest of applause, descends a perfect shower of floral wreaths and rich bouquets.

I sympathize heartily in this taste of the English for flowers, which thus pervades all ranks, and flowers being accessible to all, and among the most innocent and the cheapest of all pleasures, diffuse a vast amount of enjoyment. They are indeed among the richest adornments of the creation, and every where, in the tangled forest, in the most secluded thicket, on the ocean prairies, and even upon the desolate heaths, are scattered about in such an endless variety and profusion as cannot fail to impress a reflecting mind with the most grateful veneration and delight.

As for those persons who can see no good and no utility in any thing beyond that which fills the belly, or covers the back, or puts money into the pocket, they are of the earth, earthy. Such groveling selfishness and animalism I trample under foot with ineffable scorn. But the cultivation of flowers does much for the benefit of the mind. A taste for objects so pure expels a taste for others, which are unworthy. A passion for what is beautiful and refined in nature often secures the mind from the intrusion of passions low and hurtful. Every advance which is made in any direction for the improvement of the taste or the refinement of manners, is so much done for the general comfort of social life and for good morals.

BOOKS IN LONDON.

An American in London, after spending a few days in looking over the Library of the British Museum, and the stocks of the London booksellers, will not wonder that Englishmen should find it difficult to acknowledge that America has any literature at all. If the quantity of our books is the test, we certainly have no literature worth speaking of. It is my candid opinion, that if you were to empty the stocks of all the Boston booksellers into one, the aggregate would not equal what may be found on the shelves, and counter and floor of many a London bookseller. The press has been at work three or four hundred years, and for the last twenty by steam. Books beget books. Hundreds of writers employ themselves in diving into the depths of the book ocean, to bring up what pearls they can. Besides that literary genius which is born of poverty, which is sharp, pungent, and pushes its way in the world for very life—and which, in this great focus of the world, is abundant—there is the literary genius which is born of wealth, and which is sharper or duller as the case may be, but, heavens! how prolific! One day I was looking over some magnificent pictorial works at a bookseller's shop, and came across one of inferior size which I had seen on this side of the water. It was Audubon's largest book of birds! At the Library of the Capital in Washington, it cuts something of a figure, and is regarded by most visitors as the gigantic king of books. But here, on a bookseller's counter, it was but a humble and obscure individual, hid among stacks of larger works, the products of Dukes, Lords, and great learned Societies. Some of these books, it is true, contain but little "matter." With paper as thick as paste board, and type as large as that of a show-bill made to be read across the street, there were acres of margin. But they were generally full of costly engravings. Some literary lord who has several estates, and nothing to do but to be waited on, and eaten up alive by his flunkies, takes it into his head to write a history of his family or his castles. He employs writers, engravers, printers, and the result is, a magnificent book which might be read comfortably by the Titans. A few copies are sold at an enormous price, or given away to his friends, and the rest find their way to the trade. Stocks of such publications have accumulated with a few dealers, who make it their special business to buy the remainders of editions at a nominal price, and sell them as they can find purchasers. Henry G. Bohn, of York street, Convent Garden, is the prince of this trade. He occupies about four four-story dwellings, all the rooms of which, from the cellar to the garret, are filled up with all manner of books, ancient and modern, acquired chiefly by purchasing the remainders of editions, from Longmans, Murry, Knight, and the Paternoster Row publishers.

Newspaper Literature.—The Paris correspondent of the Boston Atlas says that Eugene Sue, Dumas, Scribe, and in fact almost every French writer of any distinction, are now at work for the daily press, "the intellectual life of the nineteenth century—the great agent of modern civilization," as Dickens terms it. Even the British Quarterly Review admits "that there is no capital on earth where good newspaper writing is better paid than in Paris, and no capital where better newspaper writing is produced; if there, indeed, be any capital where so good is fabricated." The leading articles of the leading daily journals of London, such as the Times, the Chronicle, and the Daily News, are written with great strength, vigor and boldness of tone, but being for the most part composed on the spur of the moment, bear about them, occasionally, marks of haste, incorrectness and inelegance. The French leading articles in the Debats and the Constitutionnel, are written more carefully, and in a more chaste and classic style. The writers in French papers have sometimes twenty-four hours, and often a week, to prune, to elaborate, and to polish.

A NOBLE REPLY.

Rev. W. Chalmers, minister of the Free Church of Scotland, after a few remarks at one of the London Anniversaries, said:—"I remember standing, two or three years ago, near a stone on the shore of one of our deepest bays in Scotland. It marked the resting-place of one of our 'noble army of martyrs'—one of the many thousands that lost their lives for the cause of truth in the reign of Charles II. On that stone was cut the name of 'Margaret Wilson;' she was a young girl of eighteen, who, along with an aged widow of sixty-three, was adjudged to die, because she refused to acknowledge the supremacy of any other than Christ in the church. The sentence pronounced against them was, that they should be fastened to stakes driven deep into the oozy sand that covers the beach, and left to perish in the rising tide. The stake to which the aged female was fastened was further down the beach than that of the young woman, in order that, being soonest destroyed, her expiring sufferings might shake the firmness of faith of Margaret Wilson. The tide began to flow—the waters swelled; they mounted from the knee to the waist, and from the waist to the chin, and from the chin to the lip of the venerable matron; and when she was almost stifled by the rising tide, when the bubbling groan of her last agony was reaching her fellow-sufferer further up the beach, one heartless ruffian put to Margaret Wilson the question, 'What think you of your friend now?' And what was the calm and noble reply? 'What do I see but Christ in one of his members wrestling there? Think you that we are the sufferers? No, it is Christ in us—He who sendeth us not a warfare upon our own charges.'"

PRESSED GLASS TUMBLERS.

Every house-keeper must have observed the admirable imitation of cut glass furniture which has become so common. We believe the imitation is a western invention—at any rate the manufacture is almost exclusively confined to that section. A correspondent of the Christian Mirror, (Maine,) writing from Steubenville, Ohio, thus describes the process of making the pressed glass tumblers:—

"In the first place, they have a brass mould, consisting of a solid mass, about as large over as a half-peck measure, containing a hollow in it, exactly the form of the tumbler to be made, with a follower of brass, of the same form, but so much smaller as to fit the inside of the tumbler. When the two parts of the mould are put together, the space between them is the exact thickness of the vessel required.

"In the process of manufacturing, three men and two boys are required. The first thing done, is for one of the men to dip an iron rod in the melted glass, and move it about, till he has a sufficient quantity of the fluid mass, on the end of his rod; he then holds it over the hollow of the mould, and, with a pair of shears, cuts off what he judges to be enough to constitute the substance of the tumbler. Instantly, the other man brings down the follower with a lever power, and the melted glass is so compressed as to fill the cavity of the mould. He then turns his mould bottom up, with a little blow, and the tumbler drops red hot upon a stone table. One of the boys with an iron rod having a little melted glass on its end, presses it on the bottom of the tumbler and it slightly adheres. He then holds it in the mouth of a glowing furnace, turning it rapidly, till it is almost in a melting state, when the third man takes it, and whirling the rod and tumbler, on a sort of arm of a chair, he holds a smooth iron tool against the edge of the tumbler, till all the roughness is removed from its edges, when a boy takes the rod from him, and by a light stroke on the end of it, drops the tumbler into a box of coal dust, when the other boy, with an iron fork on the end of a stick, takes the tumbler and places it in a hot oven, to cool gradually. These five hands will make a beautiful tumbler in about forty seconds, or about 100 in an hour."

Farming in Great Britain.—A London paper states that at the present moment, 'with an area of 61,522,970 arable acres in the United Kingdom, there is only one proprietor for every 305 acres. The stout yeoman class is rapidly disappearing; the number of persons farming their own land every day diminishes; a dozen properties are run together into the hands of one holder; three or four small farms are combined into one large one; the small farmer is now an animal almost as rare as the small landlord; and the children of those who constituted the former tenantry of the country have become the laborers on the very land their ancestors cultivated as holders. Farming, like all other trades, is becoming a wholesale business, and while a few are becoming extensive and wealthy agriculturists, the mass are sinking into hopeless poverty.'

Expenses of British China.—The Hong Kong Gazette complains that the expenses of that colony and of the five British consular ports in China, are exorbitant. The whole civil expense of the colony (no military expenses being included) is £48,739, and of the consular establishment $31,515—making a total say of $400,000. The salary of the Govenor of Hong Kong is $30,000, Colonial Secretary and Treasurer, $15,000 each, Chief Justice and law courts, $30,000 besides fines, which the Gazette says are no trifle; Police $30,000, contingent expenses $80,000, &c. The consular establishment is monstrous. The salary of the Chief Superintendent (an office which appears to be a sinecure) is $20,000, Consul at Canton $25,000, and Consuls at Amoy, Foo-chow, Ning-po and Shanghai, $20,000 each.

THE DYING GIRL.

They say I'm failing fast, mother,
  Indeed I feel it so;
For all seems over-cast, mother,
  And my cheeks have ceased to glow;
Just place your hand upon my heart,
  How wild its pulses beat!
They'll soon be still—I know they will,
  And then my sleep how sweet!

Oh, raise me on your arm, mother,
  That I may catch the breeze;
And feel its breath of balm, mother,
  Fresh from the leafy trees.
The flowers are full of life and joy,
  How rich the lillies bloom:
And see my rose, how sweet it blows—
  You'll bear it to my tomb?

'Tis merry May for some, mother,
  Their joyous laugh I hear;
With happy songs they come, mother,
  Whose songs to me how dear!
Oh, let them sing them by my bed,
  I'm sure 'twill soothe my pain!
'Twill hover round me when I'm dead,
  That wild, yet pleasant strain.

The light becomes more dim, mother,
  I cannot see your face—
My brain begins to swim, mother,
  My limbs get cold apace,
An angel's bending from the skies,
  He says that I must come;
Oh, mother! dry your tearful eyes,
  I'm going to my home.

GOOD FOR EVIL.

BY REV. JOSEPH ALDEN, D. D.

It was a clear cold morning in January. The sleighing was fine, and the boys were out with their sleds enjoying it. They rode swiftly down a long hill, and then drew their sleds up again—a mode of riding which one would think "costs more than it comes to." The boys did not think so, and they were the proper persons to decide the question.

All the boys had good sleds except one. He asked several of the boys for the temporary loan of their sleds, or to allow him to ride with them, but they were too much engaged in their sport to pay any attention to him. He then applied to Francis, who was wont to be accommodating. "Frank, let me take your sled once?"

"I won't."

"Why not?"

"Because you treated me so badly. Have you forgotten how you rubbed snow in my face yesterday?" Without waiting to hear Hiram's reply he started his sled down the hill.

Hiram stood for some time, and witnessed the sport in which he could not join, and then turned away with a tear in his eye.

About a year after this, Francis was one day sitting by his mother's side. He was now eight years of age. He looked thoughtful and sad. His mother noticed it, and said to him, "Don't you feel well, my son?"

"Yes, ma'am, I feel well enough, but I don't feel very happy."

"What is the cause of your unhappiness?"

"I don't know ma'am, unless it is because I am not better."

"What particular thing were you thinking of just now?"

"I was thinking about Hiram."

"What about him?"

"Once when the boys were sliding down hill, and they all had sleds except Hiram, he asked them to let him have their sleds and they wouldn't, and then he asked me, and I told him I wouldn't, because he had treated me so badly. So he stood there for a little while looking rather sorry, and then he went home. It has made me feel bad every time I have thought of it since."

"Why does it make you feel bad to think of it?"

"Because I did not do as I would be done by. I should have felt bad if all the boys had been sliding and I couldn't slide."

"So your feeling bad is in consequence of your sympathy for Hiram?"

"Yes ma'am. I feel sorry because I did not make him happy, and because I did wrong."

"What do you think the Lord would have been pleased to have you do when Hiram asked you for the sled?"

"I should have pleased the Lord if I had let Hiram have my sled."

"What reason have you for saying so?"

"Because he says, 'Love your enemies, do good to those who hate you, and pray for those which despitefully use you and persecute you.'"

"Have you ever prayed for Hiram?"

"I always pray for him when I feel bad about not letting him have my sled."

"When did this affair happen?"

"Last winter."

Francis' mother was greatly pleased with the sensibility and conscientiousness manifested by her son. A great many boys would never have thought of such 'a trifle,' as they would call it, or if they should happen to think of it, would deny that they had done any thing to be sorry for.

Francis had been better instructed, and the instructions had not been given in vain. He knew and felt that he had done wrong. So far from regarding Hiram's ill-treatment of him as justifying his refusing him his sled, he knew that that was the very reason why he should have let him have it, on the principle of returning good for evil—the CHRISTIAN PRINCIPLE.

"Mother," said Francis, "why do we always feel bad when we have done any thing that is wrong?"

"Because God has made us feel so. He has done so that we may follow the right, and avoid the wrong. He thus shows that He is the friend of virtue and the enemy of vice."

"There are some boys who never feel bad when they do wrong; has the Lord made them different from us?"

"No, all have the same moral constitution, but the consciences of some have been cultivated more carefully than those of others. That causes the difference for the most part. Some have more natural sensibility than others, and this affects the workings of their consciences in view of wrong committed."

"Samuel Giles said he was glad he didn't always feel bad when he had done any thing out of the way; he said that he shouldn't take any comfort if he did."

"What led him to make that remark?"

"Because he saw I felt bad because I got angry, and pushed one of the boys off the fence."

"Would you be like him?"

"No, ma'am, I don't think I should be as happy as I am now, and I should be sure to do wrong a great deal oftener."

The Cat Will Play and after Slay.—We were reminded of this catechism saw, by a queer story of a fox told by a correspondent of the Concord Freeman:

"A few days since, while passing near a piece of wood, my attention was suddenly arrested at hearing the piteous cry of a young lamb, apparently but a few rods distant. My curiosity being somewhat excited, I repaired near the place from whence the sound came to learn its cause. Advancing some ten rods, I beheld through a thicket, some twenty feet ahead, a young lamb surrounded by four foxes, one old one with three young ones. The mother, while the young ones were playing their pranks, would set back some four feet and look upon the scene before her with deep interest. The little ones would form a ring around the lamb, then one would walk up to the lamb and put its arms around its neck, (which would cause it to bleat most piteously,) 'hug' it very closely, and go through all manner of manœuvres, while the other two, if the lamb was like to get the better of him, would lend him their aid. Thus they played, taking their regular turns for the space of two hours; when suddenly the mother sprung from her seat, caught the lamb, and would have devoured it, had not my feelings of pleasure and curiosity been suddenly changed to pity and sympathy, and I rescued the little frightened suffered from its foe."

Botany.—The study of this beautiful science is particularly adapted to young ladies, to whom we would recommend it as a lasting source of pleasure and amusement. It will be found much less difficult than may at first be apprehended, and the enjoyment experienced in its progress will be such that difficulties much greater than those which really present themselves, should be no barrier to the attainment of the science. The nomenclature, which appears at first view so repulsive, soon loses its terrors, and becomes familiar, and the pleasure which results from the application of principles, the exercise which this science requires, and the perpetual contemplation of the variegated and splendid colorings of nature, operate as a species of attraction so irresistible, that the student can neither restrain nor control it. No object can be more delightful than to behold a lovely woman indulging a passion for that which is in itself so beautiful and innocent, or than to see her "Looking through Nature up to Nature's God." What higher source of gratification can there be than to stroll amidst the groves, or wander over mountain heights, and enjoy the magnificent scenery of nature, and inhale the breeze teeming with fragrance and redolent with sweets, while you are in pursuit of a richer banquet, a more delightful spectacle, the fair and exquisite gifts of Flora.

Napoleon Bonaparte.—It will be recollected by most of our readers, that Napoleon at his death, requested his executor, General Montholon, not to publish the papers which, as executor, came into his hands, until 25 years after the death of the Emperor. Those years have now elapsed, and these interesting papers are now in course of publication in Paris, and will soon be reprinted here. The reading public will no doubt seek after the work which will reveal the opinions and intentions of such a man as Napoleon, the more so as these memoirs will not be thoughts colored by others, but veritable emanations from himself. Among other interesting matters is his exhibition of the method of his contemplated invasion of Great Britain, and what he intended to do, after having conquered that country.

The Clock Struck First.—George III. was very punctual, and expected punctuality from every one who had business with him. The late Lord H. was the most punctual person who attended his ministry. He had an appointment one day with the king at Windsor, at 12 o'clock; on passing the hall the clock struck 12; his lordship raised his cane and broke the face of the clock. Upon entering the king's apartment, his majesty reminded him that he was a little behind the time, which he excused as well as he could. At the next audience, the king, as he entered the room, exclaimed:

"Why, Lord H., how came you to strike the clock!"

"The clock struck first, your majesty!"

The Excavator.—The Concord Courier says the great 'Lion' in these diggins, now a days, is the Excavator in use upon the Northern Railroad, about a mile north of the old North Church. It is a curious and most ingenious combination of all the mechanical powers. It goes by steam of course. At the end of a large beam, is a sort of a huge iron shovel,—which by means of pulleys and screws, &c., is brought to bear upon the soil, then the steam is put on, and it 'goes ahead,' till it is full, and then it stops, as it should. Then it is cunningly whirled round till it is brought directly over a dirt cart, into which it empties itself in short metre. The car being filled is quickly moved away, and another takes its place, and so on indefinitely. The way it digs into the 'bowels of the harmless earth,' is a caution.

Take care of your Feet.—The circumstances in which wet feet are most apt to cause disease, are where the person remains inactive, and where, consequently, there is nothing to counterbalance the unequal flow of blood which then takes place towards the internal parts; for it is well known that a person in good health may walk about or work in the open air with wet feet for hours together without injury, provided he puts on dry stockings and shoes immediately on coming home. It is, therefore, not the mere state of wetness that causes the evil, but the check to perspiration, and the unequal distribution of blood, to which the accompanying coldness give rise. [Combe.

Mutton.—We mean to repeat a thousand times, or at least till what we say has some effect upon our countrymen, that a pound of lean, tender, juicy mutton can be produced for half the cost of the same quantity of fat pork; that it is infinitely healthier food, especially in the summer season; is more agreeable to the palate, when one gets accustomed to it; and that those who eat it, become more muscular, and can do more work with greater ease to themselves, than those who eat fat pork. We know nothing more delicious than smoked mutton hams of the Southdown breed of sheep; vension itself is not superior. [Am. Agriculturalist.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

MORAL AND CIVIL LAW.

When a growing disregard for the claims of the laws of God, and an undue reverence for human enactments prevails, it is the duty of all lovers of morality to array themselves on the side of truth, and fearlessly to maintain the right. I mean no disrespect to the rightful claims of civil authority, when I would enforce the claims of a higher power. When the great Lawgiver and Governor of the Universe, whose throne is imperishable, issues his fiat, it is a perfect rule, and durable as eternity; and though his infinite mercy and benevolence may prompt him to forbear, he will not, he cannot suffer his law to be violated with impunity, but just as sure as God is just and true, the offender will meet a retribution. Right and wrong are self-existent principles, independent of the arbitrary will of a law-maker. The moral law had not its origin on Mount Sinai; it existed before this earth was added to the immensity of God's works, and was then written out, every precept of which is this moment as binding as when man first heard it proclaimed. Civil enactments cannot annul it; long-established usages cannot change it. While heaven and earth shall endure, not one jot or tittle shall pass, till all be fulfilled. Civil law has claims which may not be disregarded; but those claims, to be binding, must coincide with the paramount claims of God's law. The end of civil government is the protection of right and suppression of wrong. When so administered as to promote this end, it is binding upon all its subjects, and then only.

Contemplate the character of these two lawgivers—GOD, who is all perfection, whose glowing attributes are justice and mercy—and man, fallible, short-sighted man—and who can doubt to which superior obligation is due. "The soul that sins shall die," is the awful penalty attached to the violation of God's law. Obedience to human laws may deck our brows with crowns of honor, but how soon they will wither when the torments of eternal damnation shall take hold of us. The plea that we acted in obedience to law, will not stand in the great day of account, if that law was opposed to the revealed will of God. Disobedience may subject us to fines, imprisonment, and death, but after that it hath no more power. How trifling all these, when contrasted with the crown of glory which strict obedience to the will of God will ensure. "Be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do; but fear him which, after he hath killed, hath power to cast into hell," is the injunction of Christ to his disciples; and though chains and dungeons awaited them, they feared not to declare the counsels of God when forbidden by wicked rulers, and when death was their doom they yielded not. So well does the Lord approve of a strict adherence to truth, that on many occasions he has appeared in mighty power to deliver its defenders from penalties inflicted by wicked laws. The roaring waters he parted asunder, the galling chains and creaking bolts he broke, the melting fire he cooled, and shut the lion's mouth. There is always safety in obedience to God, for he is greater than Nebuchadnezzar. What though we be branded as traitors and felons? Better swing on a gibbet high as Haman's, than be traitors to God and humanity.

But we are told that we live in a land where the paramount authority of God is duly recognized, and justice is meted out to all. Let the injured shades of a murdered Lovejoy and a martyred Torrey, who for obedience to God fell sacrifices to God-defying human enactments, and the millions of suffering victims subject to the unbridled rapacity of heartless tyrants, pronounce it a lie. But I am asked, Why trouble yourself to condemn a sentiment which is already condemned by community? I would to God it were so condemned. But is it not time for even the humblest citizen to speak out in defence of right, when certain great men, after declaring certain measures to be "boldly flagitious and disgraceful," and certain declarations to be lies, in the next moment call upon their countrymen to draw their swords in defence of those very things, and the same is endorsed and reiterated by public presses all through the land? This wicked sentiment, together with the abominable practice which calls it into requisition, must be banished, or our country's sun will set in darkness and gloom, and the spirits of darkness will shout a malignant triumph over the mouldering remains of expiring liberty. Let an outraged community stamp the seal of condemnation upon those men who shall, with "God and Liberty" for their motto, pronounce the policy they have drawn their swords to sustain "vile and wicked." Fellow citizens! if you can subscribe to this sentiment, and fight to give it practical effect, deaf to the claims of justice and the shrieks of expiring liberty, as you place the victim all bleeding upon the polluted altars of your betrayed country, know that there are those who cannot, who will not aid in consummating a scheme which they have so strenuously opposed from its inception. Call us cowards, traitors, if you please, but when from the wreck of our fallen country some generous spirit shall rise, he shall see upon some of her dilapidated columns the record of a few who dared not bend the knee to Baal. Defenders of truth! sleep not; your weapons are not carnal. Let the voice of warning echo and re-echo from the rocky hills of New England to the unbroken prairies of the West. In one unbroken phalanx, let our army advance and roll back the clouds which threaten to over shadow the highest prospects of our country, and paralize the efforts of Christians to spread the cheering light of the gospel of peace to the perishing sons of earth.

A WORD TO PROFESSORS OF RELIGION.

'Examine yourselves whether ye be in the faith.'—2 Cor. 13: 5.

How important that we understand our true character while there is yet hope, for in this may be involved our eternal interest, all that is worth a smile or a tear. Our precious moments are hastening on, and to many of us our days are nearly numbered. The Apostle felt the importance of this subject, and therefore he frequently admonishes us to be diligent and severe in criticising the nature of our faith and practice.

Reader, how stands the case with you? Should this day close thy probation, art thou in readiness to meet thy God? How would your closet tell for your faithfulness in secret devotion? On what subjects do your thoughts mostly dwell? Are you the head of a family, and do you keep the fire constantly burning on the family altar? Do you enjoy as much, or more of the love of God now than when you first professed to know the riches of his grace? Does your path grow brighter, your faith stronger, and are you gaining the victory over your besetting sins? Which would cause the most grief, the consciousness of having done wrong and dishonored the cause of God, or some pecuniary loss? Would those with whom you deal have reason to suspect that you walk by the golden rule, to do to others as you would they should do to you? Do you practice nothing that your candid judgment tells you is wrong, or on which you cannot ask the blessing of God? When you are sensible that God requires of you the practice of any self-denial for the honor of his cause or for his truth's sake, are you prompt in obedience, or do you confer with public opinion, your ease, your convenience, or your purse? Do you spend as much time in supplying your soul with food, as your body? Do you take as much interest in studying the will of God from his Word, as in reading the secular and political news of the day? Do you spend your Sabbaths in honor of God, or in advancing your own interest or self-gratification? Is your conversation such as becometh the Gospel of Christ? Are you growing in grace?

"How is the fine gold become dim!" Well might the church put on sackcloth, and prostrate herself in the dust; for truly the "ways of Zion mourn." Is Jesus a hard master, that so many have adopted the customs and habits of the enemy? Is this world more attracting than heaven, that ye strive so hard to lay up your treasure here? The Saviour reminds us that "where our treasure is, there will our heart be also." Is not the soul as valuable now as when Jesus offered himself on the cross to redeem us? We have but just time enough allotted us to prepare for eternity; how are the moments wasting! How many are already gone!—gone into another world, to testify either for or against us. Can they tell as much in our favor as of Cornelius of old? Acts 10: 4.

My brother—my sister—do you enjoy the religion of the Saviour—the riches of his free grace? Is your peace like a river, and your righteousness like the waves of the sea? Or are you a half-hearted professor, hoping you are a Christian, but looking to past days for the evidence? Alas! when will Christians arise and assert their diginity? When will they purify themselves from the world, and become peculiar for holiness! "Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord; and who shall stand in his holy place? He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart." Ps. 24: 3, 4.

A JUG AN EMBLEM OF THE HUMAN HEART.—The Jug is a most singular utensil. A pail, tumbler, or decanter, may be rinsed, and you may satisfy yourself by optical proof that it is clean; but the jug has only a little hole in the top, and the interior is all darkness. No eye penetrates it—no hand moves over the surface. You can clean it only by putting in water, shaking it up and pouring it out. If the water comes out clean, you judge you have succeeded in cleaning the jug, and vice versa. Hence the jug is like the human heart. No mortal eye can look into its recesses, and you can only judge of its purity by what comes out of it.

NEVER GIVE UP.

"Never give up"—'tis the secret of glory,
Nothing so wise can philosophy preach;
Think on the names that are famous in story,
"Never give up" is the lesson they teach.
How have men compass'd immortal achievements?
How have they moulded the world to their will?
'Tis that 'midst dangers, and woes, and bereavements,
"Never give up" was their principle still.

"Never give up," though o'erladen with sorrow,
Shake not the yoke—'twill more bitterly gall;
"Never give up," for there cometh a morrow
When evil deplored shall no longer enthral.
"Never give up"—bear your fate with serenity!
Crouch not ignobly like slaves in the dust;
Life's a rough path to the realms of amenity,
Dark is the journey, but travel we must.

"Never give up." It can last but a season;
Will you—because a cloud bursts on your way—
Basely surrender your manhood and reason,
Weeping for griefs that must end in a day?
What, though the tempest around you be raving?
Soon you'll have emptied life's rancorous cup.
Soundly you'll sleep where the willows are waving,
Thunder don't wane you—"Never give up."

"Never give up." It were impious to dream of it;
Keen though your anguish be, never forget
That there are fortunes, (O raptures to dream of it!)
Bright and immortal in store for you yet
Ere the night fall—if by virtue a meriter,
May you not, mourner, in Paradise sup,
Compeer of angels and heaven's inheritor,
Think of your destiny—"Never give up!"

SQUEEZING A PREACHER.

The substance of the following letter appeared in the Welch Baptist Magazine, for February, 1845; and as the sin against which it is directed is by no means confined to the Welsh churches, but is sometimes found in English ones, perhaps its publication in our language may be of service. It was translated by one who understands the Welsh language. The word 'squeeze,' so frequently used, is a literal translation of the Welsh word, and is highly expressive.

"MR. EDITOR:—Lately a church, or rather the lords thereof, made a resolution that their minister must be satisfied to live upon what they should collect at the month's end, let the amount be little or much, and that they would not from that time forward bind themselves to make up any particular sum. This resolution they communicated to their pastor, with the solemn advice, 'Brother, you must squeeze; the times are bad.' He replied that he would think of the matter, and see how the plan was likely to answer. In a few days, he called upon the owner of his house, who was a member of his church, to pay his rent, and told him he could not promise him any specific sum for the house from that time forth; 'that the times were bad, and he must squeeze;' but he would pay for it as circumstances would permit. The landlord stared at him with astonishment, and replied, 'Man! who lets houses in that manner—to give as much you please for it—did any one ever hear of such a thing? I thought to advance the rent a pound next year; you shall not have my house, I am sure, for one half-penny less.' He next went to the miller, and asked for a sack of flour. 'Certainly,' said the miller, 'but do you know that the price of flour has advanced since you purchased the last.' 'I was not aware of it,' replied the minister, 'and indeed it is of no great consequence, as the order of things is changed. I am to give what I can for it—brother, you must squeeze, the times are bad.' 'Good or bad,' answered the miller, 'I must have according to 50s per sack for it; hearken, man, who sells flour upon those terms?'

"He next proceeded to the farmer, (passing by the maltster, who was a deacon, without calling,) and asked for a bushel of wheat. The farmer said he should have it, but it would cost him 8s and 6d. 'No, no, brother,' replied the minister, 'you must squeeze, for the times are bad; I will give you as much as I can, at the end of the month, after seeing how much the collection will be.' 'What has that to do with the price of wheat,' exclaimed the farmer, 'I have a great rent to pay next month, and I do not know how to bring things to bear between the wages, the tithes, and the payments.' This brother kept a large farm, and paid specific wages to all his laborers, except Jacko, the half-witted boy, who was at hand to fetch the cows for the women, to clean the out-houses, &c.

"He next called upon John, the shoemaker, who after hearing his terms for a pair of shoes, began to put the snuff into his wide extended nostrils, which were as black as two flues, and talk very sarcastically respecting such terms. 'He would not put a patch upon his shoe under three pence.' The butcher treated him in like manner, 'his meat was so much a pound;' and the tailor also insisted upon having a regular price for his commodities.

"On his way home, the minister went into the shop of his principal deacon, and asked him for some articles necessary for the use of his family, such as a pound of soap, a pound of sugar, a pound of candles, two ounces of tea, and a half-penny worth of soda, (but no tobacco.) After packing the things neatly, the grocer began to count their cost. 'You need not waste your time in reckoning,' interrupted the minister, 'I am to pay you for them as my circumstances will permit. Brother, you must squeeze, as the times are very bad with me at present, but I will give conscientiously for them what lies in my power.' 'Squeeze,' said the shopkeeper, 'what do you mean? give what you please? how much will that be?' 'I can not say at present,' replied his pastor, 'but you shall know at the end of the next month, when I see how much the collection will be.' 'That will not do for me,' said the shopkeeper, 'I am obliged to pay a certain price for every article, and I have a large amount to make up next week.' 'So, indeed!' exclaimed the minister. 'Well, I see there is no one but myself to squeeze, and that I am out of the reach of bad times; if I was able to perform miracles like our Saviour with the loaves and fishes, your plan would answer. I have called upon all the members who sell anything for the use of man, to see how your plan was likely to prosper, but you must all have a particular price for your goods; the owner of my house, the miller, the farmer, the shoemaker, the butcher, the tailor, and yourself likewise. You will not let me have a pound of sugar, or an ounce of tea out of your shop, without I pay a stated price for it; how then can you expect me to pay my way without a stated salary, and that too proportionable to my family? Before I can agree to receive what you collect monthly for me, you and the others must be willing to receive that between you in proportion to what I may have had from each, and I will promise you to live quite moderately; or, if you prefer it, I am willing to live on the money which is wasted weekly by the members in snuff and tobacco.' I do not know how the matter was settled.

A SKETCH FROM LIFE.

A short winter day was just drawing to a close, as a young and poorly clad girl reached the door of a splendid mansion in Bleecker-street. The servant ushered her into a large and elegant apartment, where sat Mrs. M., the mistress of so much wealth and grandeur, in conversation with a friend. The young girl stood a moment, then courtesied, and presented to Mrs. M. a small bundle, saying, "I hope the work will suit you, ma'am."

"The work is well enough," said Mrs. M. examining it carefully, "but why did you not bring it before? It is at least a week past the time it was promised. Unless you are more punctual, and keep your word better, I cannot let you have any more work."

It was growing dark, and the room was not yet lighted, so that the tears that gathered in the girl's eyes could not be seen, but her voice was very tremulous as she answered—

"I did not mean to break my word, ma'am; but my mother has been much worse, and my little brother in chopping wood cut his foot; so I have had to"—here her voice became inarticulate, and she hastened out of the room.

"That is always the way with these people," said Mrs. M.; "a sick mother, a sick aunt, or a cut foot, anything for an excuse."

Meantime Mary reached the humble dwelling she called home. Whether her feelings were laboring under the wound so thoughtlessly inflicted, or her mother's illness distressed her, or her heart sickened at the thought of helpless poverty, or it might have been the contrast between the room she had just left, and the room she had just entered, which forced itself upon her; whatever was the cause, contrary to her usual serenity and care to appear as cheerful as possible before her mother, she covered her face with her hands, and leaning upon the rude table before her, burst into a passion of tears. It was but for a moment, for a faint voice from the bed called, "Mary." She started from her posture of grief, and went to her mother's bedside. "Mary, dear, wipe your eyes and sit down by me here, and read the thirty-fourth Psalm; it will do us both good." Mary reached down from the shelf the well-worn Bible, and seated at the foot of her mother's bed, in a subdued voice, read aloud. She had just finished reading the verse, "Many are the afflictions of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth him out of them all," when a gentle tap was heard at the door. A little girl, some years younger than Mary, opened it, and a lady entered.

"Is this where Mary Morris lives?"

Mary started from the bed, "That is my name ma'am."

"Ah, yes, you are the one I just saw at Mrs. M's. I enquired you out, and am come to see if I can be of any service to you; how is your mother?"

The last tallow candle was dimly burning beside the bed where Mary had been reading. The lady went towards it, and took the hand of the emaciated sufferer.

"Have you any physician?"

"No ma'am. My poor husband's last sickness cost me so much, that I have now nothing left to pay one. I hope I shall get better in a few days, and then all will go on well; but now it is very hard for poor Mary."

"But you have a high fever and should be attended to; my husband is a physician; he will call and prescribe for you, and here are some provisions for the children, and, Mary, just open the door, my servant has brought you a wheelbarrow load of wood ready split; give all your attention to your mother, and you shall be well provided for."

Their hearts were too full for expression of thanks, but the lady needed them not to convince her that there was no luxury like that of doing good. There were tears shed in that humble room that night, but not of bitterness, and there were thanksgivings that would put to shame the feeble gratitude of thousands who are 'increased with goods and have need of nothing.'

N. B. Mrs. M. went that night to witness the performance of a popular tragedy, and was so overcome by the distresses of the hero and heroine, as to be unable to attend to anything else for several weeks. [N. Y. Evangelist.

THE ALPINE HORN.—Amongst the lofty mountains and elevated mountain valleys of Switzerland, the Alpine horn has another use besides that of sounding the famed Ranz des Vaches, or Cow Song, and this is of a very solemn and impressive nature. When the sun has set in the valley, and only the snowy summits of the mountains gleam with golden light, the herdsman, who dwells upon the highest habitable spot, takes his horn and pronounces audibly and loudly through a speaking trumpet, 'Praise the Lord God!' As soon as this sound is heard by the neighboring huntsmen, they issue from their huts, take their horns and repeat the same words. This frequently lasts a quarter of an hour, and the name of the Creator resounds fsom all the mountains and rocky cliffs around. Silence at length settles over the scene. All the herdsmen kneel and pray with uncovered heads. In the meanwhile, it has become quite dark. 'Good night!' calls the highest herdsman again through his horn. 'Good night,' again resounds from all the mountains, the horns of the herdsmen, and the rocky cliffs. The mountaineers then retire to their dwellings, and to rest.

THE REV. LEGH RICHMOND.

As I was one evening proceeding towards a church in my native city, for the purpose of hearing the Rev. Legh Richmond preach an anniversary sermon, a gentleman accosted me, and inquired the way to the Temple Church. I told him I was going thither, and would be pleased to show him. He was upwards of fifty years of age, with a remarkably pleasant countenance, and wore spectacles. He was lame, owing to a contraction of his knee joint; and so he took my arm, which, with boyish freedom, I offered him.

"And pray," said he, "are you going to hear Legh Richmond?"

I replied that I was, and I anticipated great delight in doing so, as I had perused his "Dairyman's Daughter," with delight.

The old gentleman smiled placidly, leaned a little heavier on my arm, and talked to me about heaven, until my young eyes ran over with tears. There was such a winning sweetness in his tones, and he spoke so affectionately, that I could not help but love him, stranger though he was.

When we arrived at the church door, crowds were pouring in. "I must go to the vestry," remarked my new acquaintance, "I dare say you will see me again;" and we parted.

The service had been read by the regular clergyman of the place, and the psalm before the sermon was being sung, when the preacher of the evening slowly, and with some apparent difficulty, ascended the pulpit stairs. He bowed his greyish head, for a moment, on the cushion, and then looked round on the congregation. It was the gentleman with whom I had walked to church; the author of the touchingly beautiful narrative, which I cannot, even now, read without tears—"The Dairyman's Daughter,"—Legh Richmond was before me!

A HEATHEN IDEA OF GOD.

While passing down the Hoogby in company with Rev. Mr. Pearce of Calcutta, on my way to the steamer that was to convey me to Madras, Mr. P. pointed me to a place on the opposite side of the river, where he had spent some time in missionary labors.

"One day," said he, "while conversing with a native about the true God, I asked whom he worshiped. The native answered immediately, "I worship the English."

On being asked why he was so foolish, he replied, that the English must be gods, and began to give his reasons,—"Look," said he, "at that iron bridge," pointing to one of great dimensions that had just been completed—"who but gods could make such a thing as that?"

"Look also at that iron steamboat," fixing his eyes upon one of immense size that lay in the river, "If Hindoos put iron into the water it will sink, but the English make it swim like wood and cause it to go wherever they please. And then see the smoke that rises out of it, and hear the terrible bellowing that it makes. Surely those that make such things must be gods."

Mr. P. endeavored to explain to him the reasons of the superiority of the English over the Hindoos, resulting from religion, education, &c., and that under similar circumstances the Hindoos would be able to make the same things which they now looked upon as the work of gods.

He could not however be persuaded to believe what was told him, and it seemed impossible to lead his dark bewildered mind beyond men and things, to God the Creator of all.

SACRIFICES AND PRIESTHOOD.—There never was a religion among Jews or Gentiles, Greeks, Romans, or barbarians, since the beginning of the world, without sacrifice and priesthood; of which natural religion having neither, is consequently no religion. The imagination of man, by supposing a religion without these, has done infinite disservice to the only religion by which man can be saved. It has produced the deistical substitution of naked morality, or Turkish honesty, for the doctrines of intercession, redemption, and Divine grace. It has no gift from God but that nature which came poor, and blind, and naked, out of paradise; subject only to farther misery from its own lusts and the temptations of the devil. A religion more flattering to the pride of man, pleases his fancy better than this; but it will never do him any good.

EXCITEMENT.—Inordinate novel readers are among the most heartless and selfish beings in the world. There is a striking resemblance, a family likeness, between the drunkard and the inveterate reader of fiction. Both are unduly excited, intoxicated! Both live in a world of dreams and fancies, and both are wretched when not under the influence of the exciting stimulus they love and crave. Both possess an unnatural, vitiated and craving appetite; both desire and seek excitement, without mental action or exertion. They seek it from different sources but both seek it with avidity—one from the bar, the dram-shop—the other from works of fiction.

[R. I. Pledge & Standard.

Corrupt nature cannot comprehend that afflictions are the effects of Divine love. It must be Thy grace, O Lover of souls, which must work in me this conviction; which I beseech Thee to vouchsafe me.

If we place our hopes or our dependence upon the power, the wisdom, the counsel, or the interest we have in man, and not in God only, we shall surely be disappointed.

The Sabbath Recorder.

EASTERN AFRICA.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

In pursuance of an appointment by our Missionary Board, at its recent session in Berlin, I have made a tour to Salem, Mass., for the purpose of collecting further information in reference to Eastern Africa. And I would cheerfully embrace the facilities afforded by your paper, to communicate to the friends of the mission generally, the results of my inquiries, which were reported to the Board at its late meeting.

At Salem I was so fortunate as to fall in company with Mr. Richard P. Waters, who has been United States Consul at Zanzibar for ten years, and has recently returned home. This gentleman is a religious professor, and takes great interest in the cause of missions. When he learned the object of my visit, he very courteously offered to take me to his home, four miles out of town, give me all the information in his power, and bring me back the next day in season for the Boston train. His offer was very gratefully accepted; and his pledge he fully redeemed. With a full knowledge of our sentiments, he hesitated not to aid us with a frankness worthy of record. He is personally acquainted with Dr. Lewis Krapf, a Germany missionary who has labored many years in Eastern Africa, under the patronage of the Church of England. At the request of Mr. Waters, Dr. Krapf had written out an account of his labors in Abyssinia. This document Mr. Waters had the kindness to lend me for the purpose of copying; but as I am not at liberty to publish it entire, I extract from it the following facts and statements which, although mostly in my own language, may be regarded as resting upon the authority of Dr. Krapf.

Abyssinia embraced Christianity in the year 336 of the Christian era. But the Christianity which she received was from Egypt, and had been previously corrupted.

From the loss which the Roman Church sustained by the German Reformation, she endeavored to recover by getting a foothold in Abyssinia; and only failed through the unrelenting severity with which the Jesuits attempted to impose the Roman yoke. But they have made their appearance again in that country, as will be seen in the sequel.

About twenty years ago the Church Missionary Society sent out Messrs. Gobat and Kingler, as missionaries to Abyssinia. After many trials, they, in 1829, entered Abyssinia by way of Massowa, then the only entrance place for Europeans. The ruler of Tigre, who was much beloved by most of his subjects, received them in a friendly manner. And the missionaries were, at first, much encouraged. But they had not then a knowledge, which they afterwards acquired, of the double-dealing character of the Abyssinia nobility, and lower classes. Mr. Kingler died when he had just conquered most of the difficulties of the language. But Mr. Gobat prosecuted his labors, by conversational preaching and distributing Bibles, until the unsettled state of the country, and some other reasons, induced him to leave for a short time. Previously to this the Scriptures had been translated by the Abyssinians themselves from the Arabic and Æthiopic into the Amharic language, which is spoken and understood generally throughout the Abyssinian Empire.

In 1833 Mr. Gobat, accompanied by Mr. Isenberg, returned from Europe. They took up their residence at Adowa, the capital of Tigre, six or eight days journey from Massowa. During Mr. Gobat's absence, Sabagadis had fallen in a political contest, and Oobie reigned in his stead. He was an avaricious and cruel despot. The faithfulness of the missionaries, in pressing home the claims of God, aroused the ignorant, bigoted, and pharisaical priests against them. They complained to their chief, that through the influence of the missionaries, the Æthiopic Church was about to crumble down. They accused the missionaries of intrigue, to overthrow the government of the country, and introduce English troops. Oobie, being an Abyssinian, was consequently suspicious, especially of the political designs of the foreigners. Being unacquainted with the feelings which genuine religion inspires, he could not understand how mere love to his people could induce the foreigners to devote their time and strength and earthly goods to their welfare. Before the most critical period arrived, Mr. Gobat, from ill health, had been compelled to leave Abyssinia. Mr. Isenberg was under the necessity of building a dwelling-house for himself and family, as the native houses did not agree with him and had no school rooms. He was accused by the priests of digging a canal under ground from Adowa to the sea-coast, for the purpose of bringing soldiers and artillery into the country. Oobie believed the report. A few Frenchmen, and some other Europeans, made their appearance in Tigre about this time. Among others, a German officer came, who offered his services for disciplining Oobie's troops. About this time Mr. Blumhardt and Mr. Krapf arrived as missionaries. Mr. Isenberg was accused of calling all these Europeans into the country. At this juncture the Jesuits entered the country, and it was but a little while before an edict came to Mr. Isenberg from the king, enjoining upon him and his party, to embrace the Abyssinian creed, or leave the country immediately. They chose the latter course. Isenberg and Blumhardt went to Egypt. Mr. Krapf resolved to enter Abyssinia from the South, and proceed to the kingdom of Shoa. When he was ready to embark from Mocha, to enter Abyssinia by way of Tajoura, he was taken ill, and withdrew to Cairo, whence, after his recovery, being joined by Mr. Isenberg, he set out for Shoa, which place they reached, after traveling 360 miles from the coast through a desolate country. They were favorably received, and encouraged for a time, but soon began to find that they had entertained too high an opinion of his Shoan Majesty. He wished to be benefited by the superior knowledge of the missionaries in every thing but in religion. He thought he did not want priests, but workmen. After some months, Mr. Isenberg returned to Europe, to carry through the press an Amharic Dictionary and Grammar, a Geography, a General and Church History, a Spelling Book, Catechism, and revision of the faulty Amharic Bible. After Mr. Krapf had acquired the language, he established a boarding school, and a day school, which succeeded very well for a time. But he was greatly annoyed by the constant and increasing beggary of high classes and low. He early saw that from the avaricious, bigoted, and suspicious character of the king and his people, the mission would fail in Shoa, as it had done in Tigre. And therefore he sought to have it transplanted on heathen ground, before it should come to a crisis inShoa. He accordingly applied himself to the study of the Galla language, and succeeded so far as to translate into the dialect of the Shoan Gallas, the first book of Moses, the four Gospels, and the Epistle to the Romans.

Mr. Krapf traversed Shoa in almost all directions, and accompanied the king on several of his expeditions into the Galla country upwards of 160 miles south of Shoa. On these expeditions he collected much valuable information, and became acquainted with many of the Gallas, and their chieftains, and distributed the Word of God extensively among the Shoans. But opposition arose. His pupils began to be enlightened, and question and dispute about the traditions in which they had been brought up. The clergy complained. They could not bear to have the correctness of their doctrines questioned, or the minds of the people agitated with the new heresy.

Soon after Mr. Krapf's arrival at Ankobar, the capital of Shoa, a French traveler arrived, and met with a friendly reception from the king, to whom he made presents to the amount of four or five hundred dollars. This gentleman soon became settled in a scheme to make himself king of all Abyssinia. He undertook to bring the missionary into his measures, but in vain. He finally induced the king to send him officially to France, to solicit a friendly alliance, and to bring out guns, etc., as tokens of the friendship of the king of France. But as that gentleman delayed, the king became impatient, and solicited Mr. Krapf to write to the authorities of India, that he wished to establish a friendly intercourse between Shoa and the subjects of her Britanic Majesty. Mr. Krapf, thinking that a treaty of amity and commerce would be a benefit to Shoa, readily consented. The sending of the British Embassy, at the head of which was Captain Harris, was the result of this movement. But the king soon wished the Embassy to return to India. The priests and chiefs from all parts of the kingdom, entreated the king to send the strangers away, alledging that they had come with bad intentions. The object the king had in view in soliciting the friendship of the British, seems to have been merely to obtain their presents. His Shoan Majesty could not understand how it was that Captain Harris, as representative of a great sovereign, should claim a better treatment than the king was accustomed to give the messengers of other Abyssinian rulers, which treatment is miserable.

Whilst these things were progressing, Mr. Krapf left Shoa, promising the king that he would return after six or eight months. On his way to the coast he was robbed by a Galla chief, at the instigation of the king, although he could not then conceive that the king could act a part so treacherous.

In 1842 Mr. Krapf was married in Egypt; and, joined by his fellow laborers, Messrs. Isenberg and Mukleisen, he went to Tanjoura, in order to re-enter Shoa. But they were greatly surprised, when they found a letter written by the king of Shoa, to the Mahommedan chief on the coast, stating that henceforth no Frenghee, (foreign Christian,) either English or French, should be allowed to enter the country. At first it was difficult for them to believe that such an order had been issued by the king, but a note was dispatched to Captain Harris, who was upon the point of leaving Shoa, and his reply confirmed the fearful truth, that the king had issued such orders; and furthermore, that no missionary should proceed to Shoa, as there were orders given to the chiefs on the road to kill them, and Mr. Krapf in particular. He had made an exception in reference to the Frenchman, who was on his way with presents from the king of France. His Shoan Majesty wished to catch the French presents, and then close up the road.

The British have expended ten or twelve thousand pounds in the political mission above referred to, and have entered into a commercial treaty which gives political existence to British subjects in Shoa. But finding that nothing of worldly emolument is to be gained in Shoa, they seem not to have inquired whether the terms of the treaty of amity and commerce are kept or not, by the king of Shoa. Mr. Krapf thinks he has learned one lesson thoroughly, viz., to place no reliance on political transactions to promote the interests of that kingdom which is not of this world. He thinks that Abyssinia must sink deeper in misery, before she will be susceptible of reformation. He thinks there are now prevailing in that country, dissensions in civil and ecclesiastical matters, which will lead to a result connected with the furtherance of the gospel, and the civilization of that part of Africa.

After they had given up Shoa, the missionaries determined to re-open their mission in Tigre. But all that they were able to accomplish there, was, to improve a very short period in distributing Bibles and conversing with such as would listen to them. The Jesuits were there, and were able to excite such a people to a strong opposition to the missionaries. It is thought, however, that as soon as their presents shall stop, the friendship of Oobie will cease towards them. They are already under the ban of the Abbuna, (our father,) the spiritual head of the whole Abyssinian church, who resides at Gondar.

When the missionaries returned to the coast, Mr. Isenberg wished to return to his family in Europe. Mr. Mukleisen wished to marry in Egypt and wait for another appointment, but Mr. Krapf determined to make an attempt to reach the heathan Gallas from the coast under the line. And he hopes the Lord will bless the Abyssinians by the example of the converted heathen around them, and that in this way Æthiopia may yet stretch out her hands to God. He and his fellow laborers have distributed 10,000 copies of the Bible in Abyssinia, which he hopes may produce some good results, although he should never hear of it in this world.

In my next I propose to give some items o n telligence, collected from different sources, in reference to that part of the coast of Eastern Africa, which lies south of Abyssinia.

MORTALITY AMONG MISSIONARIES.

The 27th Annual Report of the American Baptist Board of Foreign Missions has a chapter on this subject. It seems that within thirty-three years, fifty-four missionaries and assistant missionaries have labored for the Board in the Burman Empire, of whom nineteen, or about one-third, have died during the entire period. Of the nineteen deceased, only one, the late Mrs. Judson, labored on heathen ground for the term of twenty years; of the remaining eighteen, the term of service ranged from thirteen to fourteen years. This brevity of missionary life is noticed more especially among the female assistant missionaries, the average of whose deaths is more than two to one. The causes of this great mortality among the female missionaries are stated to be threefold—the unavoidable hardships of the service, and their comparative inadequacy of strength to endure them; undue exertion, under the influence of pity, zeal, and a mistaken sense of duty; and a neglect of resorting seasonably to the methods most approved for restoring an enfeebled constitution. The last of these causes is thought to be the most important, and it has brought before the Board the question of directly encouraging the temporary return of missionaries who have become enfeebled while on the field of labor. The Board seem more inclined to encourage returning than they have heretofore; but yet they feel that the announcement of such an inclination is exceedingly liable to abuse. Hence they have brought the facts before the churches, in their report, for the purpose of securing observation and advisement in future years. The subject certainly demands consideration. A missionary, it is true, generally enlists for life, and is expected sooner or later to die on the field. But life is not to be squandered, even in a holy cause. Besides, it cannot be doubted, that the second ten years of a missionary's service, when he has become familiar with the language, character of the people, and the best way of reaching them, will in ordinary cases be far more profitable than the first ten. It is important, therefore, to understand what are the best appliances to secure to him "length of days" with health and vigor.

SUNDAY LEGISLATION.

[Extract from a private letter.]

"I am glad to hear that Bro. —— has taken up the subject of Sunday Legislation. I think that is the point—or, rather, the quarter—to which we ought to direct our forces with tenfold more energy than ever before. I believe God will never let us extend ourselves much until we boldly and decidedly attack it on all sides. It appears to me as if that was the height and front of human offending against God's law. Look at it! In every State of the Union but one we have statute laws to put down God's fourth commandment!—to punish men for keeping it! If we hold our peace at this, God will not prosper us. I for one will never more creep through the "little end of the horn," by asking for EXEMPTIONS OR PRIVILEGES because we keep the seventh day. No, if permitted, I will put the little end of the horn to my mouth, and blow with all my might, until it sounds as loud as did the horns blown by the priests around Jericho, and long enough for it to have the same effect. I will aim at nothing short of overturning the whole system. With God's help it can be done, and it is my opinion that he looks to us to attempt it. Seven years labor will not be too much for us to calculate upon in order to succeed. In the seventh year we may do seven times as much as in the first year, and down Jericho must fall. 'Attempt great things, and expect great things,' is a good motto for us."

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

At a special meeting of the Executive Board of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association, held July 19th, 1846, Bro. Solomon Carpenter, our missionary elect, made a report of the information obtained by him on a recent visit to Boston and Salem, Mass., where he became acquainted with persons who have formerly resided in Eastern Africa. In view of such information, the Board have judged it advisable that their missionaries for Eastern Africa proceed first to Zanzibar, and from thence direct their efforts to the coast or adjacent islands as they may deem expedient. The missionaries were requested to prepare for their departure at as early a period as practicable, say in September next, when it is expected that they will sail if Providence permit.

The Executive Board are anxious that a suitable young man should accompany brother and sister Carpenter. It has been suggested that there are those who would be willing to embark in this enterprise, though no direct application has been made. The Board would therefore request, that should there be any persons thus willing to give themselves up to the work of missions, proposals be immediately forwarded; and, if practicable, it would be well for such persons to be present at the next meeting of the Board. They wish to obtain a single man, as they deem it inexpedient to send out more than one family at present.

New Market, N. J. July 19, 1846.

New York State Temperance Convention.—A large convention of the friends of Temperance assembled at Albany on the 15th inst. Ex-Governor Bouck was chosen President, and Dr. Beman, Rev. Mr. Pierpont, and Alvan Stewart were among the speakers. The main question of debate was—"Will the Convention recommend to the friends of temperance, in towns which have voted 'No License,' to defer prosecutions of rumsellers under the Excise Law, and continue to rely on Moral Suasion?—or, Shall it insist that the penalties of the law be promptly and universally enforced?" The two resolutions following, were reported by a Committee of nine, embracing some of the leaders in the temperance reform, and may be regarded as expressing the sentiments of the Convention upon the question what course temperance men ought to pursue:—

Resolved, That this Convention earnestly recommend to the friends of Temperance, and especially all Temperance Societies, to appoint Committees whose duty it shall be to wait personally on all manufacturers and venders of intoxicating drinks and beverages, residing within their respective bounds, and endeavor to persuade them to relinquish their business in conformity with the recent expression of the public will, and to report from time to time the result to those by whom they have been appointed. Such personal calls to be repeated and continued as long as there shall be any prospect of success.

Resolved, That while we thus advise the farther use of moral suasion, in the hope that there may be many venders who will not persist in their defiance of law, after such course on the part of its friends; yet in all instances in which such unlawful traffic shall be continued after such faithful efforts, the penalties they have incurred should be enforced by prosecution.

License or No License.—Notwithstanding it was recently decided, by a popular vote of the people of Albany, that no licenses should be granted in that city, the Mayor has taken the responsibility of defending the granting of licenses, and declaring that the license law is unconstitutional. The citizens have held several meetings upon the subject, and obtained legal opinions showing the following conclusions:—

1. The excise law of 1845 is not unconstitutional. 1 Denio Rep. 540.

2. The law is applicable to incorporated villages, and all cities except New York. 10 Wend. Rep. 547. 2 Hill Rep. 39.

3. A two-third vote was not necessary. 13 Wend. Rep. 325.

1. Wherever the electors in any town or city have determined that no licenses shall be granted, whoever sells by retail any intoxicating liquors shall forfeit $25. Laws 1845, p. 323. 1 R. S. 680.

2. Several penalties against any person may be recovered in one suit; thus, for three violations $75 may be recovered in one suit; for 100 violations $2,500. 3 Hill Rep. 527.

3. A person who has paid the above penalties is still liable to an indictment. 13 Wend. Rep. 341.

---

1. The issuing licenses, when the people vote no license, is unlawful. Laws 1845, p. 322, § 3. 3 T. R. 560.

2. Doing any act prohibited by statute is a misdemeanor. 2 T. S. 696, § 45.

3. For such offence, when no penalty is prescribed, imprisonment in jail not exceeding one year, or fine not exceeding $250, or both. 2 R. S. 697, § 46.

Consistency.—The Boston Chronotype, in announcing the decision of the Harrisburgh Presbytery, that "dancing by professed Christians is in its tendency sinful," says: "Here is a gnat pretty cleverly strained out of the water of social life. Who believes that a unanimous vote could be got out of that Presbytery declaring slaveholding to be sinful. If you should attempt it, you would presently get plenty of justification of slavery from the Bible, &c., &c. Nobody seems to have thought of pleading for dancing from the Bible, though David danced and Michael was smitten with barrenness for despising him on account of it.

George Thompson.—Our readers will remember the name of George Thompson, the Scotchman, who visited the United States in 1835, and was compelled to return to England to escape the vengeance of the mobs excited against him on account of his advocacy of the doctrine of immediate and unconditional emancipation. From recent foreign papers, it appears that the Town Council of the City of Edinburgh, have presented the Freedom of the City to this same Mr. Thompson, in acknowledgment of his exertions for the abolition of slavery in the West Indies, and for other public services.

Secret Societies vs. Churches.—It is often said by the advocates of secret societies, that such institutions are necessary on account of the carelessness of churches about supplying the wants of the needy. We are glad to know, that in some places this argument is without pertinence. As an illustration, note the fact, that of the sum of $730, recently raised in Newport, R. I., for the sufferers by the wreck of the Sutlej, $630 was raised in the churches, and $100 by the Odd Fellows.

Way of Distributing Tracts in China.—A missionary among the Chinese says that one method of distributing tracts into various parts of the Empire, is by visiting the medical hospitals, that exist at the cities of Canton and Hong-Kong. By this means there have been nearly 30,000 invalids supplied with tracts in one year. They carry them back to their respective villages, and in this way the name of Christ, or of Jesus, (for that is the term used there,) becomes familiar among tens of thousands of the inhabitants.

Sunday Travel in Michigan.—Our exchanges from Michigan have had considerable to say within a few months past against allowing the Central Railroad to run cars on Sunday. The following paragraph from one of those papers shows the result of deliberations upon the subject:—

"We regret to learn that under the letting of the new Mail Contracts, our State is compelled to run a train of cars over the Central Road on the Sabbath, in order to carry the Mail. This violation and desecration of the Lord's day is not called for by the people, and is not in accordance with the wishes of the great mass of our citizens. We have got along well enough heretofore without a Sunday mail, and why the necessity for one now? The new arrangement took effect on the 1st inst."

Careful.—We have heard much about the care of masters for their slaves, and the inability of the slaves to take care of themselves. From the following paragraph, which occurs in the report of a Florida missionary, it appears that the masters are almost as careful about the souls of their slaves as they are about their bodies:—

"An extraordinary interest has been awakened in the minds of the colored population of this place. From 50 to 100 frequently come forward desiring an interest in prayer, while several professed to find a hope in the merits of the Saviour. They were not baptized, owing to the objections of some of their owners, who seem, or pretend, not to understand this mode of baptism. They preferred them to wait until they had examined it themselves."

An Honest Sign.—Dr. Rush was a thorough peace man, and often expressed his regret, that the Federal Constitution did not provide for an officer whose duty it should be to endeavor to promote peace among the nations. The idea of a war office, but no peace office, pained him, and he suggested the following as an appropriate inscription to be painted on a sign over the door of the war office:—

1. An office for butchering the human species.
2. A widow and orphan making office.
3. A broken-bone making office.
4. A wooden-leg making office.
5. An office for creating public and private vices.
6. An office for creating famine.
7. An office for creating political diseases.
8. An office for creating speculators, stock-jobbers, and bankrupts.
9. An office for creating poverty, and the destruction of liberty and national happiness.

Great Fire at Nantucket.—This place has been visited by a most calamitous fire. It commenced on Monday night, July 13th, and raged for nearly twelve hours. The expedient of blowing up houses was resorted to, and some twenty buildings were thus destroyed; others would have been blown up except that the powder was all exhausted. The New Bedford Mercury says: "We have conversed with several intelligent gentlemen from Nantucket, who estimate the number of buildings destroyed at not less than two hundred, including one hundred dwelling houses, and five or six oil manufactories. The burnt district includes a large portion of the most densely settled and business part of the town, and the loss of property must be immense." Later accounts state that the loss is estimated to be from $900,000 to $1,000,000, and the number of buildings burnt from 300 to 400. There were no lives lost.

Errata.—In the report of Bro. James Bailey to the Central Association, which we published last week, the name Hull occurs several times; it should have been Hall. Also, in the last column, near the bottom, for Assembly Church read Assembly Chamber.

☞ Eld. Z. Campbell having removed to Milton, Rock Co., W. T., wishes his correspondents to address him accordingly.

DOINGS IN CONGRESS.

A resolution has passed both Houses to adjourn on the 10th of August.

The SENATE passed the Warehouse Bill by a small majority, Mr. Webster voting in favor of it notwithstanding his objections to some of its features. Bills were also passed for the relief of the widow of Alexander Hamilton, and the heirs of Robert Fulton.

The HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES passed the Land Graduation Bill by a majority of two. Several important amendments were made, which carried it back to the Senate again, where it was referred to the Committee on Public Lands. The House also passed the bill appropriating $11,700,000 to pay volunteers and for other purposes. This sum is in addition to the $10,000,000 already appropriated.

MEXICO AND THE WAR.

We give below all the news from the "Army of Occupation" which has been received in New York within the last week:—

Official.

"ARMY OF OCCUPATION, June 24, 1846.

"Some volunteers have arrived at Brazos Santiago from Tennessee, presumed to be of the twelve months' quota. The volunteers which previously arrived from New Orleans have nearly all moved to Barrita, except two regiments in this place. I shall bring them up the river as soon as I can procure transportation, which we are impatiently awaiting. The volunteers from Texas are encamped near point Isabel, and are now organizing under the direction of the Governor.

"We have no authentic intelligence from the interior of Mexico. The army at Linarez is believed to be moving towards Monterey, much reduced in numbers by desertion and sickness. It is rumored that Bustamente is at the head of the Government, and that Paredes is advancing with a large force to this frontier."

The steamer Potomac was wrecked about six miles beyond the pass of St. Louis on her passage from Galveston to the Rio Grande. The boat is a total loss, and the freight greatly damaged. The passengers, consisting of Captain Lumsden, Juniors' Company, were all saved.

An affray occurred in camp on the 29th June between two Texan mounted men, one of whom, named Walker, was shot dead.

No movement of the main body of the army beyond Matamoros has yet been made. The troops are impatient to march, and will do so as soon as a sufficient number of light-draught steamers arrive.

President Paredes has presented to the Mexican Congress, June 1, an address which gives a woful picture of Mexican finances, and states that Arista had been displaced from his command for disobedience to orders in evacuating Matamoros while he had 4000 troops left.

A new paper has been started at Matamoros, called the Matamoros Reville. It is printed in Spanish and English, and is a good looking sheet. The 'Republic of Rio Grande' continues to be issued regularly.

ATTACK ON SAN JUAN DE ULLOA.—We learn from the National Intelligencer, that a report, which prevailed some weeks ago, of an assault meditated by the Executive upon the Castle of San Juan de Ulloa, (the seaboard defence of Vera Cruz,) but which had apparently died away, has been revived within a day or two. It is now said that a Council of Naval Post Captains has been summoned by the Head of the Navy Department to Washington to decide upon the practicability and expediency of the measure.

GENERAL LA VEGA.—The President has given permission to this gentleman, and other Mexican officers now in this city, to reside during the months of July, August, September, and October, in Louisville, Harrodsburg, Frankfort, or Lexington, in Kentucky; or Cincinnati, Yellow Spring, Dayton or Columbus, in Ohio; and for the remainder of the year, at Baton Rouge or New Orleans, until otherwise ordered. They are to make to the Adjutant General of the Army monthly statements as to their residence. It is intimated by General Scott, through whom the permission is granted, that should General Vega desire to visit other parts of the United States, either alone or accompanied by one or more of his brother officers, on parole, his wishes will be complied with.

THE VETERAN OF NAPOLEON.—As Churchill's battalion of artillery were advancing to take their position in the second line of battle on the 8th, a private in the 4th regiment was come up to, who lay upon the battle field with both legs shot off. He was one of the first that fell after the cannonade commenced, and was a veteran in Napoleon's wars. After having escaped in the terrible conflicts of Austerlitz and Wagram, and in the retreat from Moscow, and the battle of Waterloo, he lived to fall on the Palo Alto, by a cannon shot from a Mexican battery. As his fellow soldiers passed him and noticed at every pulsation of his heart, that the blood flowed from his wounds, they stopped an instant to sympathize with him; the noble hearted fellow, as his eyes were glazing in death, waved them on, and with his last breath said, "Go comrades, I have only got what a soldier enlists for." [N. O. Tropic.

FANATICISM.—The prechers in Gen. Taylor's Camp at Matamoros are inculcating upon the minds of the soldiers the doctrine that the American People are the children of Destiny—that God has given to them the whole continent as a heritage—and Mr. Allen, chaplain of the Louisiana volunteers, writes to the pious editors of the N. O. Picayune, that "shall circumstaces render it necessary for the United States to dictate terms of peace to Mexico in the halls of the Montezumas, there will be warm and dauntless hearts to invoke the blessing of Heaven on their acts."

In what respect do these men differ from the conquerors of Mexico, who carried the cross in one hand, and the sword in the other? How much are we in advance of Cortez and his band of robbers, who, while slaughtering thousands upon thousands of the ancient Mexicans, had holy men along with them, "to invoke the blessings of Heaven upon their acts?" They too believed themselves to be "children of destiny," and felt exalted by the delusion that they were propagators of the Faith. Fanaticism wears the same bloody features, revels in the same dark delusions to-day, that it did in the time of Cortez, or the age of the crusaders. [Cincin. Herald.

SIXTEEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

By the steamship Cambria, which arrived at Boston on Friday last, we have the following news.

Two highly important events have occurred in England since last advices. These are the passage of the Corn Bill and the resignation of the Peel Ministry. The new whig ministry has Lord John Russel at its head; Lord Palmerston, Foreign Affairs; Lord Cottenham, Chancellor; and Lord Wellington, commander-in-chief. There appears to be good feeling generally towards the new ministry, which seems to have been the result of compromise. Sir Robert Peel and his colleagues regard it favorably.

The settlement of the Oregon question has diffused general joy throughout England. Sir Robert Peel said in the Commons—"I do rejoice, that before surrendering power at the feet of a majority of this House, I had the opportunity of giving them the official assurance that every cause of quarrel with that great country [America] on this side of the Atlantic, is terminated. (Loud cheers.) Sir, I feel that I have now executed the task which my public duty imposed upon me. I trust I have said nothing which can by possibility lead to the recurrence of those controversies which have been deprecated by all lovers of peace."

It is rumored in England that the navigation of the Columbia river is reserved in perpetuity, and not for the duration alone of the Hudson Bay Company's charter. Peel so understands it.

There has been a continuation of murders and ontrages in Ireland.

From the Cape of Good Hope there are melancholy tidings of another outbreak among the Caffres which had been accompanied by several conflicts with the colonists.

From India there is no news of striking interest, nor from China.

Nearly all the French papers attack this country on account of Mexico, and urge determined interference by Europe. It is a Catholic feeling against what is called a Protestant country.

A new Pope has been elected. He is a native of the papal states, is of a noble family near Ancona, who entered the priesthood when very young, after a severe illness, in which he had prayed to the Virgin for relief, and, being cured, he resolved in gratitude to devote himself to the church. He was made a cardinal in 1839, chiefly in consequence of his diplomatic services, but avowedly because he had greatly distinguished himself by his piety and benevolence.

The Marquesse d'Harcourt died at Windsor on the 24th ult., in consequence of taking an over dose of laudanum by mistake.

Haydon, the Historical Painter, has committed suicide, in consequence of pecuniary embarrassments. He had previously written to several eminent men for assistance, but received little. Peel sent him £50, and after his death sent £200 to his family, and gave one son a place in the Customs.

The news by this arrival is not favorable to our exporters of Flour and Grain. The new Corn-Law has not improved prices but the contrary, and the decline in price has led to an increase of duty under the continued sliding scale.

LATER.—The Steamship Great Britain reached New York on Tuesday morning, 21st inst., after a very short passage. She brings news of a great hurricane which did much damage in Devonshire, Birmingham, Liverpool, &c. Also of a battle between the French forces in the East and their adversaries, in which some sixty or seventy persons were killed.

CANAL ACROSS THE ISTHMUS OF PANAMA.—The Journal of the Franklin Institute condenses a report on the subject of a ship canal across the Isthmus of Panama, made by Mr. Garella, an Engineer sent out to survey the ground by M. Guizot, the French Minister. The report is said to evince great professional ability in the Engineer. We gather the following facts from a summary of the results made by the Journal:

"The whole length of the proposed Canal, from its Northern outlet on the Atlantic near Chagres, to its Southern outlet on the Pacific near Panama, is 47 1-2 miles; and the distance in a straight line between the two towns is 40 68 miles. The mean level of the Pacific, at the terminus of the line, is 8 1-2 feet above that of the Atlantic, the highest tides in the former rising 20 feet, and in the latter only 16 inches.

"On account of the hight of the intervening ground, it is said that the popular idea of a thorough cut is out of the question. The natural summit is ten miles from the Pacific ocean, and 460 feet above it. It is proposed to reduce the summit to a hight of 135 feet above the sea, by a tunnel 3 1-2 miles in length, and to overcome the remaining elevation by means of 35 lift locks, 18 upon the Southern and 18 upon the Northern side of the summit. The tunnel is to be through rock, in the form of a Gothic arch, its hight being 121 feet, and its extreme width, with a towing path, 69 1-2 feet. By such a reduction of the summit it is shown that an ample supply of water can be commanded, and a thorough-cut may be substituted for the tunnel, but at an increased expense.

"The estimates are made for a Canal of dimensions suitable for ships of 1200 tons burthen. The lock chambers are to be 210 feet long and 46 1-2 feet wide. The width of the canal on the bottom is 65 feet, at the water surface 184 feet, and the depth 23 feet. The total cost of the work, including its terminal harbors, is estimated at about twenty-five millions of dollars, and the time required to complete it ten years.

FATAL ADVENTURE.—The Charleston Courier of July 11th, tells the following: "While two young men, named George Wood and Robert Brown, were fishing on Mitchell's Flats, on Thursday morning last, a Devil Fish became entangled in the cable, drew up the anchor, and made off with the boat with great velocity. Young Wood went forward, for the purpose of cutting the cable, but before he could effect his design, the sea-monster gave a sudden turn and capsized the boat, throwing Wood off some distance from her. Brown held on to the boat, and succeeded in getting on her bottom, the Fish still towing the boat through the water at great speed. With much presence of mind, Brown stripped off his clothes, the fish still running, and making for Drum Island which he approached within fifty yards, when it made another turn, and took the boat down in deep water. Brown then swam ashore, and after reaching it, looked for and discovered his companion swimming. He hailed him and he answered, but soon after, we regret to say, disappeared, being no doubt exhausted, as he had sustained himself by swimming at least half an hour.

MURDER IN JERSEY CITY.—The New York Tribune says that on Wednesday morning last, a man by the name of E. M. S. Spencer (a traveling Magnetizer, and formerly from Otsego County in this State, where he now has friends residing,) was arrested in Jersey City for maltreatment of his wife, and disturbance of the peace. After proceeding some distance with the officer, under the pretence of having something very particular to say to his wife, he was permitted to return, and the moment he came into her presence he drew a pistol from his pocket and shot her in the back near the left shoulder, the ball coming out in the neck near the jugular vein. She died in eight minutes after receiving the wound, and the murderer was immediately arrested. Spencer is twenty-eight years of age, and was married at Columbus, Ohio, about twelve months ago to the lady he has now so brutally murdered.

The cause of the murder was jealousy on the part of the husband, together with the refusal of his mother-in-law (with whom the lady resided) to permit him to visit her at the house, he taking it as a confirmation that she did not wish to see him; and as she had no visible means of support, he was induced to believe that the man of whom he was jealous supported her. The lady, whose name was Dobbin before marriage, was twenty-four years of age, and is said to have been very beautiful and interesting. It is said, also, that her murderer was her fourth husband.

SELF-DESTRUCTION.—A Coroner's Inquest in Philadelphia, on Wednesday last, developed a singular case of self-destruction. A lad 15 years old, named Carpenter, who was afflicted by some loathsome and poisonous complaint, had expressed a determination to his mother on Tuesday morning, to kill himself. In the afternoon he entreated another lad, who was gunning, to shoot him, at the same time imploring him not to come near or touch him as he was poison! Shortly after this he ran toward the railroad a mile or so above the city, as he saw a train of stone cars approach, and deliberately threw himself upon the track. So quickly was this done that the brakeman had not time to stop the train, but the cars passed over him, cutting him to pieces. That one so young should, under the morbid influence of disease, commit so rash an act of suicide, is indeed an uncommon occurrence.

SUNDAY SCHOOL EXCURSION—ACCIDENTS.—We learn from the True Sun that the teachers and scholars of the Sunday School of the Suffolk-st. Church went on a Picknick Excursion to Yonkers, and that one of the young ladies of the party, while swinging in a large 'scup' or swing, became dizzy and fainted, and it was several hours before she was recovered so as to be removed from the spot. About 2 o'clock in the afternoon four young ladies were swinging in the 'scup,' and one of the ropes breaking, the young ladies were thown to the ground with much force. Three of the four were badly injured—two of them seriously. A little girl of the party, in running down a hill at Yonkers, gained such an impetus that she could not control her course, and ran with great force aginst the body of a tree. Her escape from being killed was miraculous. She did not appear to have suffered seriously from it.

TREASURE RECOVERED.—The Baltimore American of the 3d instant says, the brig Francis Amy arrived at this port yesterday from her second voyage of exploration and search after the treasure of the ship of war San Pedro, which was sunk off the Spanish Main in the year 1815. We understand she has recovered this voyage about the sum of thirty-five thousand dollars in Spanish dollars. This money was found at the bottom of the sea, about three feet under the sand and beneath a coral formation, in sixty feet water. The whole recovered from the wreck thus far is something more than sixty thousand dollars. Nobody has been injured in the expedition in health or limb.

The Cincinnatti Gazette of July 11th says that the people in Mercer County have forcibly prevented the Randolph Negroes from taking possession of the lands provided for them in that County. Our latest advice is, that the Negroes are encamped in the woods near Lockport on the Canal. Since the above was in type, we understand that the Negroes have returned to near Piqua. Judge Lee has gone up to give security that they shall not become a charge upon the township. That done, farther opposition to their settling on their lands is not expected.

The St. Louis Republican says it has intelligence from the Cherokees, on the borders of Arkansas, which leaves but little, if any, room to suppose that peace can much longer be maintained in that distracted nation of Indians. Every mail brings fresh accounts of murders and other outrages; and we learn that the feeling of hostility between the Old Settlers and the Treaty party, on the one side, and the Ross party on the other, has already become so deep and implacable, that nothing short of a war of extermination is likely to satisfy either side.

James S. Calhoun, Esq., Editor of the Columbus Enquirer, Georgia, has volunteered his services to serve twelve months in the War against Mexico, and is already on his way to the Rio Grande with a company.

SUMMARY.

A week ago last Sabbath, three persons were drowned in Boston. On the same day, at Trenton, N. J., the Bordentown way-train of cars ran over a wagon in which were Mr. Mintel and his wife, killing Mr. M. and greatly injuring the lady.

The Chicago Democrat announces that the lady who is entitled to a handsome fortune by the death of Alexander Grant, at Inverness, Scotland, and whose whereabouts has been so anxiously inquired after by the press, has been discovered in Chicago, as the wife of Ezra Gregory, a potrait painter in that city.

Illinois horse thieves do a wholesale business, if the papers of that State correctly report. The Star, published in Kane County, states that twenty-four horses were stolen in that county in a few days, and near that number of horse thieves had been trapped, tried, convicted, and sent to the State Prison.

We learn from Halifax papers of the 26th of June that an alarming fire had been raging in the woods in the vicinity of Sydney, during the previous week. At Glace Bay, several houses were destroyed, with their contents. At St. Ann's, ten or twelve houses were burned down, with out-buildings and crops. At Point Aconi several dwellings were consumed, with an immense number of sheep and cattle. At East Bay, several houses were burned. North Sydney barely escaped destruction by a providential change of wind.

A Cincinnati paper has an account from Licking County in that State, of a very unnatural sight—the burial of four beautiful children, all girls, and all these born at one birth. One lived six hours, one two hours, and two an hour and a half each. At the interment the coffin was opened to public view, and there was presented the most interesting sight ever seen. Four beautiful babes in one coffin, side by side, of equal size and beauty, all of perfect shape. The parents, Henry and Mary Craft, still live in Licking.

J. Milton Saunders, of Cincinnati, is getting up a Telegraph which can be worked at one fourth the expense of the one now in use, and will not only communicate information by sound, but by characters also. He says that if the matter transmitted should be of a secret nature, the apparatus in a moment can be so adjusted that it will whisper the attendant—or proper recipient—the secret, without any one present hearing it. What next?

The report that Henry R. Schoolcraft was killed by an Indian, at Sault St. Marie, on the 6th inst., is said to be a mistake. The man killed was James R. Schoolcraft, a younger brother of Henry R., and formerly a member of the Michigan Legislature.

A Cincinnati paper says: "A man, his wife, and six children, on their way to Preble Co. in this State, from seven hundred miles South-East this, held up to rest yesterday, in Third.st. The youngest child and their baggage were on a wheel-barrow, their only carriage from home, propelled by turns by the company."

We regret to announce the death of George Hurlbut, Esq. one of the most benevolent and estimable of our citazens. He was recenly the President of the Brooklyn City Temperance Society, but more widely known as one of the firm of E. D. Hurlbut & Co., the extensive shipping merchants of New York.

Rev. Mr. Kendrick, the Roman Catholic Bishop of St. Louis, received a letter from Col. Kearney, requesting that a clergyman of the Catholic faith should be sent to Fort Leavenworth. The Bishop has selected Rev. Mr. Higginbottom, who was to depart for the Fort without delay.

Independence Hall, Philadelphia, looks as fine as paint and a thorough cleaning can make it. The Councils have taken some pains to put it in order, and intend in future to keep it as a public remembrancer of the past. It is to be made as nearly like its original as possible—the old furniture to be repaired and the massive chandelier to be replaced. They also talk of a copy of Trumbull's picture of the Signing as an ornament. The old bell, too, is to be brought down from the cupola and preserved there. The room should be reserved for all time as an appropriate Mecca for patriotic pilgrimage.

A correspondent of the New York Evening Post, says that two veins of sulphuret of copper have been opened in Flemington, N. J., and that since last April with from nine to twelve hands, at an expense of nine hundred dollars, sixty tons of ore were produced, worth $67 per ton, or in all four thousand and twenty dollars.

The Cincinnati Strawberry Committee report that the number of bushels of Strawberries sold in that market during the twenty-two days following the 10th of May, was four thousand one hundred and fifty! This is exclusive of the large quantities usually delivered to the hotels, coffee houses, cofectioners, and private families, brought directly from the country.

Mr. Charles Ackerman of Providence, R. I. has recently invented a most excellent lettsr holder, which attracted considerable attention at the Great Fair in Washington, and was highly praised by those who knew its merits, as an almost indispensable article for the business man. It is made to hold upwards of seventy letters, in as convenient a form as though they were bound, and it will last for years.

Two thousand female teachers are said to be immediately wanted in the State of Kentucky.

John Burnett was executed at Schenectady, for the murder last winter of Scornberger, in Scoharie Co. He died a dreadful death, life not being extinct until 20 minutes after the bolt had been withdrawn from the drop.

A dreadful tornado visited Syracuse on Saturday prostrating chimneys and unroofing several buildings. Auburn also suffered. No lives lost.

THE FARMER TURNED SOLDIER.

My father was a farmer good,
With corn and beef in plenty;
I mowed and hoed, and held the plow,
And longed for one-and-twenty.

For I had quite a martial turn,
And scorned the lowing cattle;
I burned to wear the uniform,
Hear drums and see the battle.

My birth-day came, my father urged,
But stoutly I resisted;
My sister wept; my mother prayed;
But off I went and listed.

They marched me through wet and dry,
To tunes more loud than charming;
But lugging knapsack, box and gun,
Was harder work than farming.

We met the foe—the cannons roared,
The crimson tide was flowing;
The frightful death-groans filled my ears,
I wished that I was mowing.

I lost my leg—the foe came on,
They had me in their clutches;
I starved in prison till the peace,
Then hobbled home on crutches.

CHILDREN.

BY MRS. HARRIET BEECHER STOWE.

"A little child shall lead them."

One cold market morning, I looked into a milliner's shop, and there I saw a hale, hearty, well-browned young fellow from the country, with his long cart whip, and a lion shag coat, holding up some little matter, and turning it on his great fist. And what do you suppose it was? A baby's bonnet. A little soft blue satin hood, with a swan's down border, white as the new-fallen snow, with a frill of rich blonde around the edge. By his side stood a very pretty woman, holding with no small pride the baby—for evidently it was the baby. Any one could read the fact in every glance, as they looked at each other, and the little hood, and then at the large blue, unconscious eyes, and fat dimpled cheeks of the little one. It was evident that neither of them had seen a baby like that before.

"But, really, Mary," said the young man, "isn't three dollars very high?"

Mary very prudently said nothing, but taking the little bonnet, tied it on to his little head, and held up the baby. The man looked and grinned; without another word, down went the three dollars—all that the last week's butter came to; and as they walked out of the shop, it is hard to say which was the most delighted with the bargain.

"Ah!" thought I, "a little child shall lead them!" Another day, as I was passing a carriage factory along one of our back streets, I saw a yonng mechanic at work on a wheel. The rough carriage-body stood beside him—and there wrapped up snugly, all hooded and cloaked, sat a little dark-eyed girl, about a year old, playing with a great shaggy dog. As I stopped, the man looked up from his work and turned admiringly towards his little companion, as much as to say, "See what I have got here?"

"Yes!" thought I, "and if the little baby ever gets a glance from admiring swains as sincere as that, she will be lucky."

Ah, these children! little witches! pretty, even in all their faults and absurdities! winning, even in their sins and iniquities! See, for example, yonder little fellow in a naughty fit—he he has shaken his long curls over his deep blue eyes—the fair brow is bent in a frown—the rose-lip is turned up in infinite defiance—and the white shoulder thrust haughtily forward. Can any one but a child look so pretty even in their naughtiness?

Then comes the instant change—flashing smiles and tears, as the good comes back all in a rush, and you are overwhelmed with protestations, promises, and kisses! They are irresistible, too, these little ones. They pull away the scholar's pen—tumble about his papers—make somersets over his books—and what can he do? They tear newspapers—litter the carpets—break, pull, and upset, and then jabber unimaginable English in self-defence, and what can you do for yourself?

"If I had a child," says the precise man, "you should see."

He does have a child, and his child tears up his papers, tumbles over his things, and pulls his nose, like all other children, and what has the precise man to say for himself? Nothing—he is like every body else—"a little child shall lead him!"

Poor little children! they bring and teach us, human beings, more good than they can get in return. How often does the infant, with its soft cheek and helpless hand, awaken a mother from worldliness and egotism, to a whole world of new and higher feelings! How often does the mother repay this by doing her best to wipe off even before the time, the fresh simplicity of childhood, and make her daughter too soon a woman of the world as she has been.

The hardened heart of the worldly man is unlocked by the guileless tones and simple caresses of his son—but he repays it in time, by imparting to his boy all the crooked tricks, and hard ways, and callous maxims, which have undone himself.

Go to the jail—to the penitentiary, and find there the wretch most sullen, brutal and hardened. Then look at your infant son. Such as he is to you, such to some mother was this man. That hard hand was soft and delicate—that rough voice was tender and lisping—fond eyes followed him as he played—and he was rocked and cradled as something holy. There was a time when his heart, soft and unworn, might have opened to questionings of God and Jesus, and sealed with the seal of Heaven. But harsh hands seized it—fierce, goblin lineaments were impressed upon it—and all is over with him forever!

So of the tender weeping child, is made the callous, heartless man—of the all-believing child, the sneering skeptic—of the beautiful and modest, the shameless and abandoned—and this is what the world does for the little one.

There was a time when the Divine One stood on earth, and little children sought to draw near to him. But harsh human heings stood between him and them, forbidding their approach. Ah! has it not been always so? Do not even we, with our hard and unsubdued feelings—our worldly and unscriptural habits and maxims—stand like a dark screen between our little child and its Saviour, and keep off the sweet radiance which might unfold it for paradise?

"Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not," is still the voice of the Son of God, but the cold world still closes around and forbids. When of old the disciples would question their Lord of the higher kingdom, he took a little child and set him in the midst, as a sign of who should be greatest in heaven. That gentle teacher still remains to us. By every hearth and fireside, Jesus still sets the little child in the midst of us!

Would thou know, O parent, what is that faith which unlocks heaven? Go not to wrangling polemics, or creeds and forms of theology, but draw to thy bosom thy little one, and read in that clear, trusting eye, the lesson of eternal life. Be only to thy God, as thy child is to thee, and all is done! Blessed shalt thou be, indeed, when a "little child shall lead thee!"

IMMENSE ESTABLISHEMNT.

In our extracts from the English papers we were struck with the description of the town of Crewe, in Cheshire, England, which owes its origin to the Grand Junction Railway Company, having been constructed chiefly for the accommodation of the men employed in their immense works, and it is an admirable proof of what may be effected by enlightened liberality. Seven years ago it had not a dozen houses; at present it contains about 500, and there are near 300 more building. Its inhabitants are, probably, 4000. "The streets are pretty nearly all straight, and laid out either parallel or in right angles with one another. They are paved, lighted with gas, and supplied with water by the Company gratis. Each street contains a conduit, and on pressing in a kind of button, the stream issues forth, without giving the labor of pumping. The Company have built a pretty church, lighted it in a most ingenious way, and maintain a chaplain for it. They have also erected a news-room, an assembly-room, school-rooms, and hot and cold baths, (supplied by the steam engine at the works,) the charge for admission to them being, as we believe, a penny or two pence. The houses are most commodious, and, in general, have small gardens attached. The rent varies from 2s to 3s 3d per week, which is not meant to be a pecuniary compensation to the Company for the outlay they have been at, but is most judiciously held out as one, among many inducements for a good workman to remain in their employ. Each house has a due service of water, and is furnished with a gas light in the principal apartment, at a charge of 7s per annum.

The works themselves are immense, covering something like five acres of ground. The number employed is nearly 1000, and their wages amount to upwards of £1000 weekly. The required assistance from steam is obtained from an engine of 40 horse power, which turns a quaitus of a mile of shaft.

The workmen are not paid by the week or day, but according to the labor they have performed. Six is the hour for assembling, and if a man be five minutes behind the time, he cannot be admitted until after breakfast, that is at half past eight; if he be absent then he cannot be admitted till one. Work finishes at 4 o'clock on Saturdays, and at half-past five on other days. No spirituous liquors or beer are allowed to enter the premises. Each man keeps a book in which he enters daily what he has done, and deposits it at a receptable at the gate-way. Once a fortnight he receives his pay, which after deducting whatever fines he may have icurred, is put into a little box for him, having his number on the top, so that otherwise a long and troublesome job is easy and quickly got through by the cashier.

There is a surgeon kept in the Company's employ, who is paid in the following way; each boy receiving 10s a week and upwards, is taxed 1d per week; if receiving uuder 10s one-half penny; each married man without a family, three half-pence; each single man one penny; each married man with family, one penny for himself and a half-peuny for each member of his household. Beyond these charges the doctor has no farther claim for his services and medicines."

A COOLER TO VANITY.

Christopher North rebukes inordinate self-esteem in young orators by telling a story something like the following:—

A certain young clergyman, who was by no means disposed to underrate the power of his eloquence, having heen invited to preach in a neighboring parish, complied. While preaching he noticed that one of his audience, an interesting looking woman, in mourning attire, appeared to be deeply affected. The young man, when service was over, spoke much to the minister of the parish about the case, with evident gratification at the powerful effect of his discourse, and proposed visiting the distressed hearer at once at her house. This was acceded to, and having called upon her, the young man opened the conversation. "I perceived, my dear friend," said he, "that you seemed to feel very much under my discourse this morning, will you give us some account of the exercises of your mind?" "Ah!" said the woman, "I did indeed feel very much, as you say. You must know, Sir, that I am a poor lone widow. I had a good husband, and every week he and I would take the old ass, with our little raisings from the garden, and by our sales could raise enough to keep us comfortable. But three years ago my man died, and then I had to go alone and do the best I could, with the help of the good old beast. But a year ago my dear old ass died too, (here she burst into tears) and here I have been alone ever since, and this morning, (she continued sobbing,) when I went to church and heard your voice, it sounded so much like the dear old ass, that I couldn't help crying, indeed I couldn't! Boo, hoo, hoo!"

Effects of Opium on the Mind.—A lady, who knew nothing experimentally of opium, once told us that she "could tell when Mr. Coleridge had taken too much opium, by his shining countenance." She was right; we know that mark of opium excessively well, and the cause of it; or at least we believe the cause to lie in the quickening of the insensible perspiration, which accumulates and glistens on the face.

Be that as it may, a criterion it was, that could not deceive as to the condition of Coleridge. And, uniformly in that condition he made his most effective intellectual displays. It is true that he might not be happy under this fiery animation, and we fully believe he was not. Nobody is happy under laudanum, except for a short term of years. But in what way did that operate upon his exertions as a writer? We are of opinion that it killed Coleridge as a poet. "The harp of Quantock," was silenced forever by the torment of opium. But proportionably it roused and stung his metaphysical instincts into more spasmodic life. Poetry can flourish only in the atmosphere of happiness. But subtle and perplexed investigations of difficult problems, are among the commonest resources for beguiling a sense of misery. [Blackwood.

Influfnce of the Seasons.—A French writer states, that the number of deaths in winter is greater than in summer, in the proportion of three to two. It is the same with the births; there being three in January or February, where there are two in July. The influence of the seasons on the human constitution varies according to the period of life. In infancy, the liability to death in winter is three-fold what it is in summer; but this liability decreases, till, at the age of ten, or twelve, it is almost nothing. From that period till manhood, the vital heat being much increased, the influence of summer is more to be dreaded than that of winter. After the age of forty, the effects of winter again become perceptible; and persons beyond sixty suffer almost as much as young infants, from its influence. Of octogenarians, and upwards, three or four die in winter, for one in summer.

The growth of the body in summer is considerably greater than in winter. There is a stronger tendency to mental alienation in warm weather than cold. The influence of summer in exciting the passions of men may be estimated from the fact, that crimes against the person—that is to say, deeds of personal violence—are then twice as frequent as in winter.

A Scene in Broadway.—Passing down to our office yesterday morning, nearly opposite Niblo's our attention was attracted by the egress from the front door of a neat, but plain, two-story house, of an old gentleman, bent and decrepid, borne up on either side by a man whose vocation it probably was to perform this service. Age, decrepitude and care were strongly depicted in every lineament of his face. His assistants seemed charged with the care of keeping alive the flame which appeared flickering for the last time, and we thought as we looked at them, that each was fearful lest a breath of air might, as they journeyed their venerable charge slowly along, extinguish the faint light which so delicately lingered in the socket. The old man thus supported, was John Jacob Astor, whose life, an eventful and enterprising one, has been devoted to the accumulation of wealth. We moralized as we left the group, that it was a shame to place the happiness of life in gold and silver, for which bread and water is sufficient, and that no man would ever yet be so poor but he could procure enough to carry him to his journey's end. The best condition of fortune is that which is neither directly necessitous, nor far from it, with good health and evenness of mind. [N. Y. Globe.

Spectral Illusions.—An officer in the Duke of Marlborough's army named Prondergast, mentioned to many of his friends that he should die on a particular day. Upon that day a battle took place with the French, and after it was over and Pondergrast was still alive, his brother officers, while they were yet in the field, jestingly asked him where was his prophecy. Prondergast gravely replied, 'I shall die yet, notwithstanding what you see.' Soon afterwards there came a shot from a French battery, to which the orders for a cessation of arms had not yet reached, and he was killed upon the spot.

In 1811, writes Lord Byron in a letter to M. Murray, my old and former fellow poet, the Irish secretary, told me he saw me in St. James street. I was then in Turkey. A day or two afterwards, he pointed out to his brother a person across the way, and said, 'There is the man I took for Byron.' His brother answered, 'Why, it is Byron, and no one else.' I was at this time seen to write my name in the Palace book. I was then ill of a malaria fever. If I had died, here would have been a ghost story.

How to Procure a Bell.—The owners of a new meeting house in the town of Appleton, Maine, last fall addressed a letter to Samuel Appleton, Esq., of Boston, begging him to give them a bell, 1st, because the town was named in honor of his father; and 2d, because he could afford the gift without inconvenience to himself or his family. Mr. A. replied, declining compliance with the request, because the principal reason assigned, viz., that the town was named in honor of his father, was not true in point of fact, and stating that he should be very sorry to give a bell that might sound his praise under false pretences. The owners replied, regretting the error they had made, and withdrawing their request. Mr. Appleton thereupon wrote to them, stating that although he had declined their request on the first reason stated, yet, as they were correct in the second, viz., that he could give them a bell without inconvenience to himself or family, if they would procure a suitable bell and send him the bill, he would with the greatest pleasure pay the amount.

The Vermont Boy.—We were gratified last week with a visit from Truman H. Safford, Jr., the young mathematician from Royalton, Vt. This boy is but ten and a half years old, yet he possesses the most extraordinary mathematical powers, as well as understanding of natural science. At the age of nine and a half years, he made the astronomical calculation for an Almanac, and his ability to solve mathematical problems is surprising—indeed scarcely credible to one who has not witnessed them. His ability to perform mathematical processes in his head, or without the use of figures, is not his most surprising power, but his absolute mastery of mathematical principles, which with him seem like playthings, rendering all ordinary rules useless.

He is of small size, with slender limbs, of a highly nervous temperament, with a somewhat large and strongly marked head, a large, deep, liquid hazel eye, the brilliancy of which when he is engaged in mathematical calculations is indescribable. [Boston Chris. Alliance.

Colonization.—The Richmond Religious Herald of July 2, contains three letters from a colonist at Monrovia, by the name of Abraham Blackford. He is a yonng man and has attended school since in the colony. His first letter is dated September, '44, his last February, '46, and as both are printed just as written, they exhibit his improvement in orthography, composition, &c. He has been married out there, and says Liberia, is just "the very country for the colored man." Those who will work will prosper there, and a lazy man will not prosper any where. He has never enjoyed better health in his life. They have plenty to eat; potatoes, butter, beans, cassada, &c. When he meets white men in the streets of Monrovia, they lift their hats to him. It sounds to him much better to be called Mr. Blackford than to be called boy as as in the United States. He can sit down and converse freely with white men, and can say that he never before enjoyed such a life of freedom. Who, after reading the story of this simple-hearted African, will doubt that freedom may taste as sweet to a black man as to a white one? [Zions Adv.

The Rule of Street Walking.—The Springfield Republican calls attention to the following rules, which should be strictly observed in all populous places:—

"Let it be understood by all, that every gentleman and every lady is expected to pass on the right hand. Another matter connected with this, should be observed by all who walk with ladies. It is to place the lady on the right, and in offering your arm, let it always be the right. In this way, and by observing the first all-important rule, all who pass will go by on the gentleman's side, and thus avoid all contact of strangers with your companion. The practice of changing sides with the lady at every corner, so as to give her the wall, is ridiculous and awkward.

Water for Sheep.—Water is not deemed so absolutely necessary for sheep as for other animals since their instinct leads them to graze early in the morning, when the dew is on, and again for a while in the evening, when the temperature of the season is warmest. In the hot month of August, however, when the feed is less succulent, they appear eager for water, and should be gratified with it if possible. But the lambs, when suckling, will do better if the mothers have access to it at all times. Therefore, since every pasture is not supplied with water, those that do contain it should be appropriated to the breed ewes. It should be considered that the milk secretions cannot be so abundant, if the ewe suffers from thirst. [Merrell's Am. Shep.

Electricity.—A correspondent of the Morning Journal states his opinion that the simultaneous and instantaneous ignition of gas lamps in cities and towns by means of electricity, will ere long be substituted for the present slow and irregular method. He further states, "I confess that I am astonished that electricity has never been enlisted into the service of the steam engine, when every sound reflecting mind and clear intellect must perceive that it must ultimately do away with the present employment of fuel and boilers, and their auxiliaries. I have no pretensions to the vision of the prophetic vista, but I venture to predict that the time is not far distant when the globe will be circumnavigated by the agency of electricity."

Flashes of Truth.—Bernal Diaz was the companion of Cortes in the conquest of Mexico, and afterwards wrote a history of that conquest. Speaking of Cortes, he says, "May God pardon him his sins, and me mine, and grant me a happy end, which is of more importance than all our couquests and victories over the Indians." Some may ask why did not Diaz, earlier in life, think of a truth so evident? It is probable that it had often, in hours of thoughtfulness, passed over his mind. But this truth had been to him like lightning in the night, when the momentary flashes leave us much involved as before in the fearful darkness, It would be well if our warriors, now in Mexico, had a deeper and more abiding conviction of the great truth. [Zions Adv.

Costliness of Smoke.—If smoke were a luxury instead of being a nuisance, it would be dearly purchased at the price paid for it in some places. The loss by non-consumption of smoke, Dr. Lyon Playfair has shown to be, in Manchester alone, £60,000 a year, and if the expense of additional painting and white-washing, be added, the actual amount lost would be double the amount of poor rates every year. In Preston, if all the furnaces consumed their own smoke, the public would save £10,450 per year in extra washing.

SCRAPS.

The term Mrs. applied to a woman, formerly denoted high rank, and had no reference to being married. The change in the application is not easily to be accounted for, except on the supposition that married women were esteemed more honorable than the other class.

In the time of King Henry VIII., say in 1545, it was enacted by Parliament, "that no women, apprentices, journeymen, sewingmen, none of the degrees of yeomen, nor husbandmen, nor laborers, shall have a private reading of the Scriptures."

A story is told of a soldier in the army whose only fault was that of drunkenness. His colonel remonstrated with him—'Tom, you are a bold fellow and a good soldier, but you will get drunk.' 'Colonel,' replied Tom, 'how can you expect all the virtues of the human character combined, for seven dollars a month!'

The very last Irish case we have heard, is that off a cook, who, happening to let some candles fall into the water, put them into the oven to dry.

A fop is like a set of new knives and forks; you can't put him to any thing useful without taking away all his polish.

The Lynn News says that a very beautiful and singular appearence has recently presented itself on Lynn Beach. The prevailing west winds of the past month have brought up myriads of the young of the great clam, so that the beaches are literally white with them. They are less than a finger-nail in size, but there are enough, if fully grown, to load a hundred ships.

It is confidently stated that the present postage law has produced a much larger aggregate than was estimated by the Post Master General; and it is evident now that in a few years the revenue will exceed the outlay of the department by a large amount.

Board of Instruction.

IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant andeconomical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte,	$10 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

Your notice of the prosecution of our brethren at Snowhill, Pa., calls up again the consideration of our Constitutional Rights as citizens of the United States. There is seemingly a crisis in which it is to be determined whether might shall triumph over right—whether religious majorities shall trample upon the religious guaranties of our National Constitution, as southern oligarchists do upon the civil rights of the northern part of the Union. There is certainly some danger of religious coercion becoming the order of the day in Republican America. In all the States of the Union but one, some how or other, coercionists have managed to procure the enactment of Sunday laws, with penalties of fine and imprisonment for the transgression of their arbitrary prohibitions. The American and Foreign Sabbath Union has issued, or prepared to issue, sixty thousand publications urging the enforcement of these Sunday laws in every State and city where they exist. Nearly twenty general conventions have been held, with delegates from eleven States of the Union, in which addresses have been prepared urging our State Legislatures and municipal bodies to pass still more stringent laws for compelling all the inhabitants of the land—the stranger as well as the resident citizen—to regard their usurpative day, or see that they are punished for a violation of their arbitrary prohibitions. In four States of this Union, prosecutions have been carried on against otherwise unoffending citizens, who conscientiously refused to do honor to their SUNDAY. And now the same is being renewed in the hands of most Christian magistrates, and encouraged by the winkings of most Christian ministers; while there is in many others an unconcealed exultation at the success of these coercive measures.

If we value our rights, it is obviously high time that we awake and take the strongest and most effective positions that our circumstances admit of. After deliberate and prayerful consideration of the subject, I am convinced that we have not honored God in our past movements as we ought to have done! We have heretofore asked only for exemptions for ourselves, and have quietly looked on to see the law of God abrogated by human laws; and while we are necessarily parties to the power that has done this, we have not borne public testimony against it. I am convinced that God will not succeed us in this way. We must stand up and vindicate HIS honor.

Jehovah's law says, the seventh-day of the week is the Sabbath; our State and municipal laws say it is not the Sabbath—the first-day of the week is the Sabbath. Jehovah says the first six days of the week shall men labor and do all their work; our State laws say men shall not labor nor do any work on the first-day of the week, but whoever does labor or do any work shall be fined or imprisoned. Thus men plainly abrogate God's laws by human laws, while they confess that they have no direction from heaven to do so! Many of our fellow citizens are now urging the duty of every Christian to protest against those southern slave-making laws, which necessitate the colored people to violate the fifth and seventh commandment, and which laws themselves authorize a violation of the eighth by the owners themselves. Are we then not to regard it as our duty to bear witness against these northern laws which openly and avowedly declare the fourth commandment abrogated? Here is a monstrous usurpation, which reaches its offensive hands up to heaven's throne, and makes pretences which Louisana itself never avowed!—declares the fourth commandment abolished!—and inflicts fines and imprisonment upon white —— (what shall I call them?) who dare to attempt a strict conformity to that fourth commandment! Is white bondage less degrading than black? Is it worse to prohibit men obeying the fifth commandment, than to prohibit them obeying the fourth? Is honor to our Father in heaven of less consequence than honor to our earthly fathers or mothers? Is a transgression of law worse than usurping all its prerogatives? If we want to have Jehovah help us, we must cease asking for mere exemptions, and stand up in all the confidence of his servants, and defend his law against the usurpations of human laws. How can we protest against southern violations of the fifth, seventh, and eighth commandments, while we submit to the northern, middle, and western States ABROGATING the fourth commandment? With what face can we defend negro rights, who let our own Christian rights go, and tamely ask for mere EXEMPTIONS? Nothing short of the entire repeal of all these odious Sunday coercion statutes ought to satisfy any of us. I am aware that we shall have a storm of wrath down upon us, from the bigots of the land, for taking this position; but if others can bear it for negro rights, and the fifth and seventh commandments, we can bear it for our own rights, and that law which Jehovah himself has called holy and honorable.

We are the more inexcusable if we do not take this position, because we are not thrown upon mere natural right, as in the other case; we have the clearest and most definite constitutional right possible. We do not need an amended Constitution, in a single clause, for obtaining this right. The Constitution of the United States guarantees every thing that we can ask on this subject. It is not an ex parte interpretation that makes it so; it has been so expounded by the most competent and disinterested authorities. President Washington's letter on the subject, written within two years of the adoption of the Constitution, places the subject above any plausible dispute. R. M. Johnson's famous Sunday Mail Report says: "Congress acts under a Constitution of delegated and limited powers. The committee look in vain to that instrument for a delegation of power authorizing this body to inquire and determine what part of the time, or whether any, has been set apart by the Almighty for religious exercises. On the contrary, among the few prohibitions which it contains, is one that prohibits a religious test; and another which declares that Congress shall pass no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof. The law, as it now exists, makes no distinction as to the days of the week. It is the duty of Government to afford to all—to Jew or Gentile—Pagan or Christian—the protection and advantages of our benignant institutions, on SUNDAY as well as every day of the week."* If there be any thing definite and certain in the meaning of language, these documents, emanating from the highest authority of the nation, having the vote and imprint of the national Congress, must forever settle the meaning and intent of the present Constitution of the United States respecting religious rights. We need seek for no farther exposition of it. Several judicatories have already decided against prosecutors on this ground. What do we, then, begging exemptions? Why not stand up and assert our rights?

Our brethren at Snowhill have at length taken the right position, by determining to carry up their cases to the highest courts of the nation. Rather than have them abandon it, if need be, let them ask the whole denomination to come to their aid, and enable them to procure the ablest counsel that can be employed in the nation, until they obtain a reversal of the decision, if it be given against them. Be the issue of this case what it may, I propose that measures be taken, as early as possible, to sustain this position in every part of the Union. For this purpose, I would suggest the propriety of calling an Anti-Sunday Coercion Convention, for the purpose of devising such measures as shall secure a united effort on this subject among all who are opposed to Sunday Coercion on religious or civil consideratious. Let such persons be invited to attend and unite in it without respect to sect, party, or religious opinions. I name Shiloh as the place, and one day before or one day after the meeting of the General Conference, the second week in next ninth month, as the time. I hold myself ready to correspond with such; and will answer any respectable communication addressed, post paid, to me at Shiloh, N. J. Let those who are interested say what they wish and what they will do for this cause.

* The Constitution says, "The judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any thing in the Constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding."—See Art. VI. Secs. 2 and 3.

A RELIGION OF CEREMONIES.—There is scarcely an hour in the day (says Thompson, in his Recollections of Mexico,) when the bells are not heard in the streets, announcing that some priest is on his way to administer the sacrament to some one sick or dying. The priest is seated in a coach drawn by two mules, followed by ten or a dozen friars, with gold wax candles, chanting as they go. The coach is preceded by a man who rings a small bell to announce the approach of the Host; when every one who happens to be in the street is expected to uncover himself and kneel, and the inmates of all the houses on the street do the same thing. Nothing is more common than to hear them exclaim, whenever they hear the bell, "Dios viene, Dios viene," God is coming, God is coming; when whatever they may be doing, they instanlty fall on their knees. What I have described is the visit of the Host to some common person. The procession is more or less numerous, and the person in the coach of more or less dignity, from an humble priest to the archbishop of Mexico, according to the dignity and station of the person visited. Sometimes the procession is accompanied by a large band of music. The visit of the Host to the Senora Santa Anna, of which I have heretofore spoken, was attended by a procession of twenty thousand people, headed by the archbishop. Until very recently, every one was required to kneel, and a very few years since an American shoemaker was murdered in his shop for refusing to do it. But now they are satisfied if you pull off your hat and stop until the Host passes.

"LOVEST THOU ME?"

"Lovest thou me?" the Saviour asked
  Of one who oft had shown,
That he would bear his Master's cross
  And make His griefs his own;
"Lovest thou me?" both hope and fear
  Might draw thee to my side;
And that thy love is deep, sincere,
  I ask a proof beside.

"Lovest thou me?" Thus to appeal
  To my omniscent light,
Will prove thy life does not reveal
  Its power in human sight.
I ask a love which cannot stay
  Within one narrow heart,
But, spreading like the light of day,
  Shall form of all a part.

"Lovest thou me?"—then prove thy love,
  By loving those for whom
I left my glorious throne above,
  And met the cross—the tomb.
I gave my life to save "my sheep,"—
  I leave them to thy care,
And bid thee here thy vigil keep,
  While I your homes prepare.

"Lovest thou me?" still, still he asks
  Of thee and me the same;
And still will this last greatest proof
  Of true affection claim;
"Go gather my wandering, dying lambs;
  Seek them where'er they dwell;
Lead them to clear and living streams,
  And prove thou lovest me well." [N. Y. Obs.

SWALLOWS.

There are different theories on the subject of instinct. Some consider it a special revelation to each creature; others believe it is handed down among animals, from generation to generation, and is therefore a matter of education. My own observation, two years ago, tends to confirm the latter theory. Two barn swallows came into our woodshed in the spring-time. Their busy, earnest twitterings, led me at once to suspect they were looking out a building spot; but as the carpenter's bench was under the window, and frequently hammering, sawing and planing were going on, I had little hope that they would choose a location under our roof. To my surprise, however, they soon began to build in a crotch of a beam over the open door way. I was delighted, and spent more time watching them, than "penny-wise" people would have approved. It was, in fact, a beautiful little drama of domestic love. The mother bird was so busy, and so important; and her mate so attentive! Never did any newly-married couple take more satisfaction with their first nicely-arranged draw of baby clothes, than they did in fashioning their little woven cradle.

The father bird scarcely ever left the side of the nest. There he was all day long, twittering in tones that were most obviously the outpourings of love. Sometimes he would bring in a straw, or hair, to be interwoven in the precions little fabric. One day my attention was arrested by a very unusual twittering, and I saw him circling round with a large downy feather in his bill. He bent over the unfinished nest and offered it to his mate with the most graceful and loving air imaginable; and when she put up her mouth to take it, he poured forth such a gust of gladsome sound! It seemed as if pride and affection had swelled his heart till it was almost too big for his little bosom. The whole transaction was the prettiest piece of coquetry, on both sides, that it was ever my good luck to witness.

It was evident that the bird had formed correct opinions on "the woman question," for during the process of incubation he volunteered to perform his share of the household duty. Three or four times a day would he, with coaxing twitterings, persuade his patient mate to fly abroad for food; and the moment she left the eggs, he would take the maternal station, and give a loud alarm whenever a cat or dog came about the premises. He certainly performed the office with far less ease and grace than she did; it was something in the style of an old bachelor tending a babe; but nevertheless it showed that his heart was kind, and his principles correct concerning division of labor. When the young ones came forth, he pursued the same equalizing policy, and brought at least half the food for his greedy little family.

But when they became old enough to fly, the veriest misanthrope would have laughed to watch their manœuvres! Such a chipping and twittering! Such diving down from the nest and flying up again! Such wheeling round in circles, talking to the young ones all the while! Such clinging to the sides of the shed with their sharp claws, to show the timid little fledglings that there was no need of falling!

For three days all this was carried on with increasing activity. It was obviously an infant flying school.

But all their talking and fussing was of no avail. The little downy things looked down, then looked up, but alarmed at the infinity of space, sunk down into the nest again. At length the parents grew impatient, and summoned their neighbors. As I was picking up chips one day, I found my head encircled with a swarm of swallows. They flew up to the nest, and jabbered away to the young ones; they clung to the walls, looking back to tell how the thing was done; then dived, and wheeled, and balanced, and floated in a manner perfectly beautiful to behold.

The pupils were evidently much excited. They jumped on the edge of the nest, and twittered, and shook their feathers, and waved their wings, and then hopped back again, saying, "Its pretty sport, but we can't do it."

Three times the neighbors came and repeated their graceful lesson. The third time, two of the young birds gave a sudden plunge downward, and then fluttered and hopped till they lighted on a small upright log. And oh, such praises as were warbled by the whole troop! The air was filled with their joy! Some were flying round, swift as a ray of light; others were perched on the hoe handle, and the teeth of the rake; multitudes clung to the wall, after the fashion of their pretty kind, and two were swinging, in a most graceful style, on a pendant hoop. Never, while memory lasts, shall I forget the swallow party! I have frolicked with blessed Nature much and often; but this above all her gambols, spoke into my inmost heart, like the glad voices of little children. The beautiful family continued to be our playmates until the falling leaves gave token of approaching winter. For some time, the little ones came home regularly to their nest at night. I was ever on the watch to welcome them, and count that none were missing. A sculptor might have taken a lesson in his art from those little creatures, perched so gracefully on the edge of their clay-built cradle, fast asleep, with heads hidden under their folded wings. Their familiarity was wonderful. If I hung a gown on a nail, I found a little swallow perched on the sleeve. If I took a nap in the afternoon, my waking eyes were greeted by a swallow on the bed post; in the summer twilight they flew about the sitting-room in search of flies, and sometimes alighted on chairs and on tables. I almost thought they knew how much I loved them. But at last they flew away to more genial skies, with a whole troop of relations and neighbors. It was a deep pain to me, that I should never know them from other swallows, and they would have no recollection of me. [Mrs. Child.

"I FORGIVE YOU ANY HOW."

A Christian merchant residing in Ohio, was severely injured in business by a worldly acquaintance. Meeting him soon after, he held out his hand and thus accosted him. "I have been waiting for you to ask my forgiveness in regard to the recent transactions, but since you will not do so, I forgive you any how." It need scarcely be added, that this person was entirely won by this Christian remark, and became a friend. Now this I judge to be the right course in all cases of injurious treatment, and if thus the western Christians act, it is to be wished that those in the North, South and East would take pattern. How often in this respect we fall short of our duty and below the standard of our Master! Who forgives as he hopes to be forgiven, fully, readily, forever? We wait until the offender repents, and then we wait for the first word of reconciliation, and often he or ourselves are suddenly summoned away and no forgiving word spoken! Do not wait for first advances; do not trouble yourself how your injurer feels, or how he may receive you; leave that to him; it is emphatically his business; and upon him rests the responsibility. Your part do in kindness, in the freedom of the "Spirit of Love," and with our western friend, say and say it frankly, heartily, "I forgive you any how!"

THE CHARACTER OF WHITEFIELD.

The following graphic portrait of this extraordinary man is taken from Dr. Southey's prose selections:—

He was something above the middle stature, well proportioned, though at that time slender, and remarkable for native gracefulness of manner. His complexion was very fair, his features regular, his eyes small and lively, of a dark blue color; in recovering from the measles he had contracted a squint with one of them; but this peculiarity, rather rendered the expression of his countenance more remarkable, than in any degree lessened the effect of its uncommon sweetness. His voice excelled both in melody and compass, and its fine modulations were happily accompanied by that grace of action which he possessed in an eminent degree, and which is said to have been the chief requisite of an orator. An ignorant man described his eloquence oddly but strikingly, when he said that Mr. Whitefield preached like a lion. So strange a comparison conveyed no unapt notion of the force, and vehemence, and passion, of that oratory which awed the hearers, and made them tremble like Felix before the apostle. For believing himself to be the messenger of God, commissioned to call sinners to repentance, he spoke as one conscious of his high credentials, with authority and power; yet in all his discourses there was a fervent and melting charity, an earnestness of persuasion, an outpouring of redundant love, partaking the virtue of that faith from which it flowed, inasmuch as it seemed to enter the heart which it pierced, and to heal as with balm.

The theatrical talent which he displayed in boyhood manifested itself strongly in his oratory. When he was about to preach, whether it was from a pulpit, or a table in the streets, or a rising ground, he appeared with a solemnity of manner and an anxious expression of countenance, that seemed to show how deeply he was impressed with a sense of the importance of what he was about to say. His elocution was perfect. They who heard him most frequently could not remember that he ever stumbled at a word, or hesitated for want of one. He never faltered, unless the feelings to which he had wrought himself overcame him, and then his speech was interrupted by a flow of tears. Sometimes he would appear to lose all self-command, and weep exceedingly, and stamp loudly and passionately; and sometimes the emotion of his mind exhausted him, and the beholders felt a momentary apprehension even for his life. And, indeed, it is said, that the effect of his vehemence upon his bodily frame was tremendous; that he usually vomited after he had preached, and sometimes discharged in this manner a considerable quantity of blood. But this was when the effort was over, and nature was left at leisure to relieve herself. While he was on duty, he controlled all sense of infirmty or pain, and made his advantage of the passion to which he had given away. "You blame me for weeping," he would say, "but how can I help it, when you will not weep for yourselves, though your immortal souls are upon the verge of destruction, and, for aught I know, you are heariug your last sermon, and may never more have an opportunity to have Christ offered to you!"

MISSIONS.

The editor of the Boston Daily Whig, in announcing the departure of Dr. Judson, with a company of missionaries for Burmah, uses the following language:—

The idea of filling the whole world with the light and blessings of Christianity, is certainly ennobling to the man who cherishes it. And whatever some may think of the practicability of the thing, the attempt must be regarded as one of the most stupendous enterprises of modern times.

Nor can this enterprise be considered visionary, when it is recollected that it rests upon a divine commission, "Go teach all nations," accompanied by a divine promise, "Lo, I am with you always;" and when it is recollected that experience, too, has given its sanction to the value and practicability of the missionary work.

Thirty-four years ago, when this same Judson embarked at Salem, on the first Christian mission from this country, how different the aspect of affairs from what is now beheld! He went forth all alone upon what was regarded an experiment, with only a very few interested in his success. For many years he toiled on, amid afflictions and persecutions, and others from time to time have been sent forth, till the gathering rills of benevolence, have become rivers, and the results golden harvests. Wild, savage tribes have been reduced to comparative civilization, industry and happiness are taking the place of stupidity and lust, and thousands of immortal beings have been raised from the level of brutes to the proper dignity of the sons of God, and heirs of immortality.

The time-worn pioneer has visited his native land to behold, not the few friends whom he left behind, but hosts from every quarter ready to cheer him on. But true to the objects of life, he hastens back. As he stood upon the shore, and felt that a Christian nation was now commending him to Heaven, and then looked back to the similar scene of 1812, with its wavering hopes and his doubtful prospects—well might he be filled with devout wonder and gratitude at the change, and well might he cherish high anticipations of the far greater changes which another thirty years might witness.

ROBERT HALL'S MARRIAGE.

The history of Robert Hall's marriage was a singular one. One day, whilst alighting at a friend's door for the purpose of dining with him, he was joked on his bachelorhood. He said nothing, but, whilst at table, he was observed to take particular notice of the servant girl, who came in to replenish the fire. After dinner, as he was sitting alone in the study, the young woman again entered it with the coalscuttle, when Mr. Hall, whom she had supposed scarcely less than a king, said to her, 'Betty, do you love the Lord Jesus Christ?' The girl replied that she hoped she did, taking the question merely as an accustomed one from a minister. To her utter surprise and consternation, however, Mr. Hall immediately followed it up by falling on his knees, and exclaming, 'Then, Betty, you must love me,' and asked her to marry him. In her astonishment she ran away, and said she believed Mr. Hall was mad again—(he had been once deranged.) Her master, like herself, was surprised; and on his speaking with Mr. Hall on the subject, the latter declared his intention of marrying the girl, who he said had taken his fancy by the manner in which she put the coals on. They were married and lived happily! His widow survived him.

GENEROSITY OF A JEW.—A wealthy Jew of Bordeaux, France, commonly known as 'Father Gradis,' was the late head of a very influential mercantile house in that city. A few days before his death he called his children around him; and, after giving them a full statement of the condition in which the affairs of the house were to be left by him, he showed them a small box. He then said, 'This box contains promisory notes to the amount of one hundred thousand dollars; they were given by parties to whom I have had the pleasure of rendering services in critical moments. I have never demanded payment; nor did I intend to do so during my lifetime. Your disposition in this respect may be different after my death. Allow me, therefore, to dispose of this box according to my own taste, and to feel in death the sweet assurance that my departure will not disturb the repose of those who owe to me some tranquil moments.' Having uttered these words, he opened the box and threw its contents into the fire; while his children fell on their knees and praised the action. [Archives Israelites.

A GOOD RULE.—Lord Erskine was distinguished through life for independence of principle, for his scrupulous adherence to the truth. He once explained the rules of his conduct, which ought to be deeply engraven on every heart. He said, "It was a first command and counsel of my early youth, always to do what my conscience told me to be my duty, and leave the consequence with God. I shall carry with me the memory, and I trust the practice, of this paternal lesson to the grave. I have hitherto followed it, and have no reason to complain that my obedience to it has been a temporal sacrifice. I have found it, on the contrary, the road to prosperity and wealth, and shall point out the same path to my children for their support.

What we are afraid to do before men, we should be afraid to think before God.—Gibbs.

We never do evil so thoroughly and cordially as when we are led to it by a false principle of conscience.—Pascal.

Give me the eye that can see God in all; the hand that can serve him with all; and the heart that can bless him for all.—Secker.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, July 30, 1846.

THE RIGHT OF LEGISLATURES TO ENFORCE SABBATHS.

From a very early period, it has been the almost uniform practice of civil rulers in Christian countries to enact laws in favor of what is popularly called the Christian Sabbath. The antiquity and extent of this practice has given it a sort sacredness in the eyes of many good men, so that to express a doubt of its propiety excites suspicion and exposes one to the shafts of persecution. And yet, after turning the matter over, and looking at it in every shape, with all the light which we can obtain, it is our deliberate conviction, that human legislatures have no right whatever to enforce the religious observance of Sabbath days. They have a right, undoubtedly, to pass laws for the protection of individuals and classes of men in the enjoyment of such religious exercises as their consciences approve; and of this nature are the laws which excuse them from attending to civil duties on the days which they regard as sacred. But for the legislature to say that they shall desist from their labors on those days in which their consciences dictate that they shall be at work, is to transcend the powers which have been delegated to it either by God or man. Indeed, if we mistake not, this principle, much as it is dreaded in its application to the Sabbath, is most strenuously insisted upon by all Protestants in its application to other religious duties.

It is a doctrine of every intelligent Protestant, that no man has a right to act against his conscience in matters of religion, and that religious duties, in order to be acceptable and profitable, must proceed from conscientious motives. Apply this doctrine to the observance of the Sabbath. Where there exists no conscientious regard for the Sabbath, it is not in the power of statute laws to create such regard; and where there is a conscientious regard for it, there is certainly no need of statute laws to require its observance. If then such laws are needed at all, they must be needed to compel men to do either what their consciences do not dictate, or what their consciences dictate them not to do. But no man has a right to depute others to compel him to act against his conscience, or to do what his conscience does not dictate. Hence the legislature can have no right, either moral or political, to dictate what days, or whether any, shall be observed as religious Sabbath days. To do so, is to transcend its powers, and hence is an act of usurpation.

Suppose we allow that the legislature has a right to pass laws in favor of observing the first day of the week as the Sabbath; in acknowledging this, we allow that it has a right to dictate to us in one point of religious faith. But if it has a right to dictate to us in one point, it has a right to dictate to us in any and every other point; and then it follows, that the legislature has a right to regulate the duties of men toward God, and their whole intercourse and communion with him—a doctrine so absurd and monstrous, when presented in its naked deformity, that few persons will be found sufficiently reckless to defend it.

Here we are told, perhaps, that the legislature, in passing Sunday laws, is faithfully carrying out the private opinions of a vast majority of the people by whom it it is chosen, and hence it is not transcending the powers committed to it. But we deny that a majority of numbers, or physical power, or dominant influence, gives the legislature any right to "discriminate" between the religious tenets of different members of the same community, and thus show a "preference" for one to the disparagement of another. Suppose, for the purpose of illustrating our position, that the Roman Catholics should hereafter have on their side a majority of numbers, should possess the physical power, and should attempt to wield it, as they have done in other countries, by the enactment of civil laws to compel Protestants to observe all the holy days of their church —who would acknowledge their moral and political right to carry out such a measure? And yet they certainly would have such a right, if the principle be sound, that the majority must rule in religious matters, and that the legislature does not transcend its powers when it attempts to legalize and enforce the religious opinions of the majority. Upon no other principle than that which we advocate, could the moral rectitude or political right of their measures be condemned. This rule of deciding religious differences by "show of hands" has been made the occasion of great abuses. It has made the same system of religious doctrines orthodox today and heterodox to-morrow, according as this or that sect prevailed in the public councils. Such a rule, therefore, must be unsound in principle, and dangerous in its practical applications.

If we concede to civil rulers, or to the dominant sect, the right to appoint days of religious worship, and enforce their observance, what reason can we urge against their possessing an equal right to prescribe the place and manner of their observance? And if we grant both of these, why may we not commit to their hands the whole business of directing our worship of God? Nay more, if we acknowledge their right to prescribe such things, why not give them the right to proscribe whatever they deem objectionable in our religious tenets, and so let them consummate the adulterous union of Church and State? To our mind there seems but one safe and Christian course, which is to sever entirely the connection of religious duties with civil laws, and leave those duties to been forced simply by the Word of God and the dictates of conscience. When once man oversteps the line of distinction between civil and religious duties, and begins to legislate upon the subject, he is certain to wander in the widening field of error wherever his interest or power may lead him. All history shows that his efforts in this direction have served to retard rather than promote the cause of vital godliness.

"REMEMBER THE SABBATH DAY."

Such is the heading under which a correspondent of the Christian Observer has arranged three "interesting facts" to prove "that all lawful business can be prosecuted to better advantage without Sabbath labor than with it—that is, in such a manner as secures in a higher degree the well being of man in this life." If the writer thinks that an opponent could not pick up three "interesting facts" which would serve his purpose equally well, he is greatly mistaken. For our part, we are heartily sick of this species of special pleading in favor of obeying God from one-sided views of facts upon which an opponent could with equal propriety place an entirely different interpretation. No doubt our readers remember the Harrisburgh Bridge; and we trust they have common-sense enough, before drawing their conclusions, to "put that and that together, and see how it comes out." Here are the interesting facts:

> "Notwithstanding the heavy repairs necessary on the Delaware division of the Pennsylvania State Canal, after the heavy freshets last spring, required much expedition, yet not a stroke of work was done on the Sabbath, although during the six working days they were employed night and day; while on the other divisions no intermission was made on the Sabbath; yet on the Delaware division these repairs were accomplished 'much more expeditiously, and with less expense to the State, in proportion to the repairs needed, than either of the other divisions.'
>
> "Again, while nearly every other canal within the State of Pennsylvania suffered severely by the freshet, the Lehigh, the Delaware and Hudson, and the Conestega, the only ones closed by the companies on the Sabbath, escaped with comparatively little or no injury.
>
> "On the other hand, an individual who has rendered himself notorious by his opposition to the Sabbath, and the efforts making for its better observance, and who has boasted of working on that day whenever it suited him, for a long series of years, without meeting any reverses in fortune, has been overtaken by the same destructive freshet, and is the heaviest individual sufferer on the entire line of the Susquehanna river."

EASTERN AFRICA.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

According to encouragement given, I proceed to lay before your readers a brief account of that part of Eastern Africa which lies between the line and seventh degree of south latitude.

A very important qnestion is that which concerns the climate. It is admitted on all hands, so far as I know, that the climate of Eastern Africa generally, is healthier than that of the western coast. But as to the particular portion of the eastern coast under consideration, there is some discrepancy in the accounts. Capt. Owen, who has published a good description of this part of Africa, describes the climate as insalubrious. Others, as Mr. Richard P. Waters, who has been a resident at Zanzibar for ten years, and Dr. Krapf, now a missionary at Mombas, describe it as sufficiently salubrious for foreigners who use proper caution. Dr. Krapf attributes Owen's opinion of the climate to the unfavorable effect it had upon his crew, and remarks, that sailors, from their exposure to various changes, and their irregularity when they touch land, must experience consequences to which others are less liable. Zanzibar is said to be healthier than Bombay. Mombas is described as salubrious. On the main land, from twenty to forty miles from the coast, the mountains rise gradually in some places to the height of four or five thousand feet above the level of the sea. These are inhabited, and here must be a fine climate.

The people on the coast, from the line down to Mozambique, including Zanzibar and the Comoro Islands, are Mahommedans, speak the Sooahelee language, and number nearly five thousand. Their territory extends but a few miles beyond the sea coast, and they are to a considerable extent subject to the Imaum of Muscat. They do not appear to be much bigoted, owing probably to their imperfect knowledge of the Koran, to their commercial intercourse with other countries, to the good example of the Imaum, in giving free toleration to all religious opinions, and to the national character of the Sooahelees, which inclines them to merriment and worldly pursuits. If not bigoted, they are said to be an inconstant, lying, and greedy people. Their intercourse and trade with other countries, not excepting America, are said to be increasing; and there is talk of a steamer at Mombas.

Of the pagan tribes, situated beyond the territory of the Sooahelees, but little is known. Most of the tribes are friendly to the Arab merchants. The country of the Wonicas is "perfectly safe and quiet." The pagan Gallas, a very interesting people, are situated near the coast. These are said to resemble Europeans in their features, and to possess national characteristics that invite missionary labor.

The Island Zanzibar is about six degrees south latitude, is level and fertile, and is about twenty miles from the main land. The city Zanzibar contains about fifty thousand inhabitants, consisting of Arabs, Banians, Negroes, and a variety of others. The Imaum resides here, at least a part of the time.

Mombas is a smaller island, nearer the main land, situated about four degrees south latitude, at the mouth of the Tuaca river. The people are civil towards Europeans. The Island is salubrious. There are various inlets into the interior, and one of these caravan routes is from Mombas. The Wonica people are near Mombas, and can be visited daily on the coast from the Island. The towns Mombas and Lamo contain each about ten thousand inhabitants. The best town houses on this whole coast are to be found in Zanzibar, Mombas, and Lamo. There are numerous villages on the main land, close to the beach.

The two largest rivers in this part of Africa are the Jub and the Ouze, and both are too shallow at their mouths for large vessels.

This is nearly the amount of what I am at present able to communicate in relation to this neglected portion of the world. After a few months, if God prosper our way, I may be able to give some further particulars.

S. CARPENTER.

INTERESTING CIRCUMSTANCE.

From the Report of the American Sabbath Tract Society.

I held a meeting at ——, by the request of the Baptist minister. After invoking the Divine blessing, I presented the claims of God's Holy Sabbath to a very respectable assembly. The house (a large school-house) was well filled, and with one exception good attention appeared to be given. This one seemed to be irritated, and frequently left the house. After the meeting, I went home with Eld. C., and found that in principle he was already a Seventh-day Baptist. In answer to an inquiry, he told me that he had been measurably convinced for some time that his practice was wrong, but had succeeded in finding something upon which to rest until he got hold of the Address to the Baptists. That, he said, had taken away his last prop, and since that time he had been floating, and could rest on nothing. He had mostly kept his feelings to himself, but had seen that his family were also in doubt on the subject. At length, however, it came up at the breakfast table one Sabbath morning and after some conversation he thought he would know how extensive this feeling was, and therefore proposed to take an expression by show of hands. To his surprise, he found that all his children had raised their hands, and his wife had raised both of hers. He was still, however, a nominal observer of Sunday. He admitted that it was wrong. I asked him why he trampled upon God's law, and kept "the tradition of the elders." He said it was hard to fix on a time, and say that he would change. Oh, said he, that flood of talk—that tide of persecution—I dread it. I altered my sentiments once on the subject of baptism, and I know the consequences. But, said I, they who would talk unkindly are not governed by the spirit of Christ. All true Christians will respect you for your honesty, and approve of your course; and the applause of those only should be respected, and even this is of little consequence when compared with that of Christ. Paul says, "It is a small matter to be judged of man's judgment." He said that their covenant meeting was to take place on the next "Sabbath," and he would then ask letters for himself and famliy, for they were all ready for it, and that a woman in the neighborhood wished the same asked for her, as she could not attend.

I had some conversation also with one of his old neighbors, who said he had felt it to be his duty for some time to keep the Lord's Sabbath, but had not done it. On being asked the reason, he said it was because he had not religion enough —that he had no better reason. I tried to advise him, and he said he would try and take up the cross in this matter. I also learned that there were quite a number more in the vicinity who were not satisfied with Sunday keeping. The reformation seems to be going on well here, and our first-day friends seem anxious to stop the work, but seem to be at a loss to know how. To keep still they do not feel safe, and to agitate the matter they know would be worse.

The work here is attributable to the Sabbath Tract operations. Eld. C. was brought to see the truth by a copy of the Address to the Baptists. And here let me say, that, in my opinion, we have no publication better calculated to take hold of our Baptist brethren than that. It meets them on their own ground. A Baptist minister said to me, that its style and spirit were calculated to do harm, for it was difficult to evade it. Other admissions of like import have been made frequently. In this circumstance we see the fallacy of that too common opinion among our brethren, that nothing can be done where the people are acquainted with the subject, and are prejudiced against the truth. Eld. C. says that he has struggled against the truth for twenty years, and now yields, and wonders that he did not yield before.

Voluntary Divorce.—It is reported that Mr. and Mrs. Newman have mutually agreed to free themselves a vinculo mattrimonii, in order that Mr. Newman may take priesthood, preparatory to his being appointed President of Oscott College. There are many precedents of such mutual separations between man and wife. In such cases the wife generally enters a convent, and although the parties are permitted to visit each other, their interviews must take place in the presence of a third person.

Economizing.—The rarest specimen of economizing which we have heard of in a long time, occurred at Grace Church in this City a few Sundays ago. It seems that in consequence of the heat of the weather and a slight shower, there were only about sixty persons in attendance at the afternoon service; the sermon was therefore omitted, and only prayers were read. We knew that fashionable churches had their own ways of doing things; but we did not know before that their preachers regarded sixty persons as too few to lose a sermon upon. The Great Teacher once said, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there will I be in the midst of them." But some of his successors appear to have learned, that the presence of twenty times that number will not pay them for performing their duties.

Massachusetts and Missions.—It is a fact worthy of record, that of the 380 missionaries and male assistants sent out by the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, upwards of one-fifth have gone from Massachusetts; and of the $4,042,436 contributed to the Board, more than one-quarter, or above a million of dollars, has been given by the same State. Of the 257 foreign missionaries and assistants sent out by the American Baptist Board, more than one-quarter have also gone from Massachusetts; and of the contributions to this Board, the same State has given about one-fifth. Yet who believes that the people of Massachusetts are any poorer for their heavy contributions to the cause of missions?

The English Wesleyan Missionary Society.—This Society held its Annual Meeting in Exeter Hall, London. The report gave a flattering account of the Society's financial condition. Its income for the year 1845 was about $550,000, being an advance upon the previous year of some $35,000. Of the whole sum received, over $50,000 was from the various foreign stations. This sum was in addition to the much larger sum which those stations had severally raised for their own local expenses, in order to diminish their claims upon the General Fund at home for the support of their missionary pastors.

The First Temperance Editor.—The Boston Journal says that Wm. Lloyd Garrison was the first editor of the first newspaper established in the world on the principle of total abstinance from all intoxicating drinks. Its name was the Journal of the Times, printed in Bennington, Vt., about the year 1827. The N. Y. Tribune corrects this statement, by saying that the first temperance paper on the principle of total abstinance ever established in the world, was published in Boston in 1826–7, just twenty years ago, by Rev. Wm. Collier, a Baptist clergyman. Of this paper Mr. Garrison was for a considerable time the editor, in which capacity he evinced great ability as a writer, strong attachment to principle, and rare moral courage. Mr. Garrison started the first immediate emancipation paper in America.

Doctorates.—The period of College Commencements has returned, and the honorary titles of D. D. and LLD. are falling thick as autumn leaves upon the favorites of College Presidents and Professors. At the commencement of Union College, which occurred on the fourth day of last week, the degree of LLD. was conferred upon Bishop Potter of Philadelphia, and Col. Young; the degree of D. D. was conferred at the same time upon four clergymen. At the commencement of Delaware College, which occurred on the same day, two gentlemen were made honorary Masters of Arts, and three Doctors of Divinity. These are only the first fruits of the season, but they indicate that an abundant crop of doctorates may be expected this year.

English Estimate of American Doctorates.—A correspondent of the New York Obrerver recommends American Colleges to be a little more circumspect about conferring their degrees upon Englishmen. In one instance, he says, he was asked whether degrees were sold in the shops in New York. In other instances he was asked questions which showed equally well that they regard our doctorates as a sort of marketable commodity. The following is a good example:—

> "An amusing anecdote is related of the venerable William Jay. A reverend gentleman rather eminent for his vanity and pomposity, and who was in the habit of walking to his chapel in a silk gown with a gold-headed cane, called one day upon Mr. Jay in unusually buoyant spirits, and said to him, rubbing his hands with great self-complacency, 'Well, Mr. Jay, I have the pleasure to inform you, that I am Doctor so and so.' 'Indeed,' said Mr. Jay, 'and whence have you got your degree?' 'O from America, Sir.' 'And pray, may I ask how much it cost you?' 'O nothing worth naming.' 'But it did cost you something.' 'A mere trifle; only e few pounds.' 'Ah, indeed; I'm very sorry I had not known that you wanted one, for I hava one here (opening a drawer and taking out a parchment) which I would have sold you for ten shillings!'"

New School Presbyterians.—From the minutes of the late Triennial Meeting just published, it appears that the number of ministers belonging to this branch of the Presbyterian Church in the United States is 1647, licentiates 218, candidates 339, churches 2,297, communicants 174,714. Admitted during the past year by profession 7,793, by letter 5,733. Funds contributed for domestic missions $39,368, foreign do. $51,809, Education $25,829, for Theological Seminaries $26,054, for various other benevolent objects $111,797.

New Motive Power.—Mr. Stewart Perry, of Herkimer Co., N. Y., is exhibiting in this city a new machine designed as a substitute for or improvement upon the steam engine. He calls it the "Gas-Engine," because the power is created by the combustion within a cylinder of a mixture of inflammable vapor or gas and atmospheric air, the expansive action of which in the state of inflammation, is made to bear directly and alternately upon the opposite sides of the piston in the same manner as steam in the Reciprocating Steam Engine. The editor of the N. Y. Tribune has seen the machine, and speaks of it as follows:—

> "Some of the advantages which this power has over steam are—first, economy in cost of fuel, the expense not being one-quarter of that of steam; second, economy in weight of fuel in a still greater ratio, which, with the far less weight and bulk of the engine itself, makes it a desideratum for locomotive purposes, particularly for ocean and canal navigation; third, cheapness of original construction, with equal if not superior durability of parts; fourth, increased safety, as, with an engine properly built, no explosion jeoparding life or even damaging machinery, however careless the engineer, can possibly take place—while the surrounding of every part exposed to heat with unconfined water, renders it free from all danger arising from fire; fifth, less manual labor and attention in the management of the engine."

Indians in Oregon.—The St. Louis Era says that the Nes Perces Indians, in Oregon, are making considerable progresss in civilization. They inhabit a desirable country, are paying attention to agriculture, and have a large number of horses and cattle. They are more neat in their dress and more industrious in their habits than other tribes of Indians. Some missionaries have established schools among them. Mr. Spalding has translated a portion of the Scriptures into their language; it is written with English letters, but Indian words. A traveler from Oregon exhibited to us a manuscript book neatly written in that language by a native Nes Perces Indian. It was a copy of the translation of the New Testament, by Mr. Spalding, and was well executed. The education and civilization of these aboriginal tribes should be encouraged.

Wholesale Conversion on the Hungarian Frontiers.—Between twenty-five and thirty districts, with a population of two thousand five hundred, or three thousand souls, of the (united) Greek religion, have gone over to the non-united (the Russian) religion, thereby causing a great sensation throughout the country.

◆

Conversion of Papists.—A London correspondent of the Boston Traveler states, that "in one hundred parishes in France, the Popish churches had been forsaken, and the people were calling for the Bible. In Ireland, over forty Romish priests and 4,000 laymen had come over to the Protestant churches."

◆

Slavery and Humanity.—The following paragraph, which we copy from the Christian Citizen, tells a sad tale of the influence of slavery to lower common estimates of the worth of humanity. Who can read it and not blush for his race?

> "A person informs the Christian people of St. Louis, that he will sell a superior Maltese Jack, and receive in payment goods or NEGROES! Said Jack is said to be 14 hands high, and, therefore, in the estimation of his owner, equivalent to several of God's living images! O humanity! Give this proposition one sober thought. 'How much better is a man than a sheep?' asked he who lived and died for man. How much better is an ass than a man? asks the owner of the other, in the market of a Christian city."

Wearing Ornaments.—Dr. Judson tells the following circumstance as illustrating the natural effects of Christianity among the Karens:—

> "A Karen woman offered herself for baptism. After the usual examination, I inquired whether she could give up her ornaments for Christ. It was an unexpected blow. I explained the spirit of the gospel. I appealed to her own consciousness of vanity. I read her the Apostle's prohibition, 1 Tim. 2: 9. She looked again and again at her handsome necklace, then with an air of modest decision that would adorn, beyond all ornaments, any of my sisters whom I have the honor of addressing, she took it off, saying, 'I love Christ more than this.'"

Ceylon Mission.—A Missionary of the American Board, in a recent letter, says: "The cholera is still raging in places around us, and carrying off many. The people, in their fear, run to their idols, but get no help. They shut themselves up in their compounds to keep out the evil spirits, but the pestilence rages still. It is not uncommon for the leaders in the ceremonies performed to appease the anger of the evil spirits, to be cut down in the midst of their work. The only medicine given, is a little sacred water from the temple; and thus they are often left to die alone; and, as soon as they are dead, they are buried with as little ceremony as we should bury a dog."

Ripley Presbytery, Ohio.—This body declined sending a Delegate to the New School General Assembly, on account of its relations to Slavery, and at a meeting convened at Ripley since the meeting of the Assembly, it finds no cause to change its policy. That Presbytery objects to the Assembly, that while their Confession of Faith clearly condems Slaveholding, they continue to tolerate Slaveholding ministers and members, and also that in order to secure unity in the Church, Truth has been stricken down, and the Assembly has attempted to serve God and mammon. The Presbytery, being unwilling in any way to sanction Slavery, resolved to consult with sister Presbyteries on the propriety of forming an Anti-Slavery Presbyterian Church.

DOINGS IN CONGRESS.

In the SENATE, last week, the principal and almost exclusive subject under consideration was the Tariff Bill. Several able speeches were made by leading members, among whom Mr. Webster was prominent. He had the floor when the Senate adjourned on Saturday evening. A large number of petitions were received from different sections of the country against any change in the Tariff of 1842. The Post Office Committee reported to the Senate a bill for the conveyance of the mail to Oregon.

In the HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES much time was spent in considering the Report on Printing and a Bill to Reduce the Price. Several bills were passed for the relief of private individuals, among whom were Amos Kendall, the widow of General Pike, the heirs of Thomas Murry, &c.

—On Monday, July 27th, by a vote of 28 to 27, the Tariff Bill was sent to the Committee of Finance with instructions so to amend it that the duty on no raw material imported shall be higher than that charged on the fabric manufactured therefrom; and also as to provide additional revenue for the support of the Government. This is regarded by many as equivalent to a defeat of the Bill, although it is possible that some bill of the sort may yet be passed at the present session.

NEWS FROM THE ARMY.

Advices from New Orleans to the evening of the 15th have been received at Washington, with letters from Matamoros of July 3d and 5th.

Gen. Taylor announced to two of the regiments on the 4th, that in a few days he would have boats to transport them to Camargo, whence he would put them directly in motion for Monterey, and if they got no fight before the summer closed, it would not be his fault.

The papers of Texas and Matamoros are full of details of the celebration of the 4th. The rains were holding up. Some sickness prevailed, mostly bowel complaints. The measles had appeared in Mark's regiment, and several men were down with the complaint.

Mr. D. E. Gray had arrived in Reynosa from the upper country, by way of Monterey, and reported the Mexicans very apathetic in regard to the war.

Five hundred Mexican volunteers at Monclova had refused to serve on hearing of Taylor's victories.

Some disaffection among the Louisiana Volunteers had appeared, but it would be settled, having been referred to Gen. Smith. The wounded and sick were doing well at Fort Polk.

LATER.—By the steamship Jas. L. Day news has been received at New Orleans four days later and of considerable interest, and especially as the announcement that a deputation from the British Navy arrived at Fort Polk upon business with Gen. Taylor, calculated to excite curiosity and speculation. The troops were being sent forward as fast as the means of transportation and the high water would allow.

A COMPARISON.—A cotemporary makes the following interesting calculations, which every man should ponder upon. ' Congress, he says, has now been in session more than seven months—some 220 days—at $8 per diem; making over and above the compensation for mileage, some $1760 for each member; which, before they adjourn, will be increased to $2000. The soldier who, during the same period, has been upholding the honor of our arms upon the Rio Grande, and amid peril, privation and suffering, with death constantly looking in upon him, and nothing, so far as Congress is concerned, but their barren vote of gratitude to cheer him in the performance of duty—received, during the same period, $64.

DREADFUL ACCIDENT ON THE ERIE RAILROAD!—At 8 o'clock last Friday morning, as the early train from Middletown was on its way to this City, near Seamansville, Orange Co., one of the forward wheels of the forward car broke and let down the car just as it was approaching a small bridge. The train was a long and heavy one, with over 200 passegers; the forward car plowed into the timbers of the bridge, while the next car ran into it, and the two were jammed up together, and nearly all on board injured. The whole train was badly shivered and broken up, but the passengers in the rear cars (among whom were the pupils of a young lady's school at Middletown on their way to a picknick at Hoboken) escaped with slight injuries. In the foremost cars, however, two persons were killed out-right, and about fifty injured, several of them seriously, but we hope none fatally. The two killed were a son of Dr. Crane of Goshen, and Charles Stevens, grocer, of this City.

THE NEW LICENSE LAW.—An indictment found against Samuel Parkhust, for selling liquor, was tried at Buffalo on Wednesday last. After a hearing, the fact of his selling being clearly proved, the jury found a verdict of guilty, and the defendant's counsel moved an arrest of sentence for the purpose of carrying the cause to the Supreme Court, 1st, because the law did not pass the Legislature by a two-third vote, and consequently could take no power away from the Common Council; 2d, because the law was in contravention of the revenue laws of the United States. The final decision of this suit will be regarded as settling the question as to the power of cities to grant licenses in opposition to the new law.

TAXES IN MEXICO.—Everything is taxed in Mexico, from the splendid palaces, coaches, and plate of the wealthy, to the dozen eggs which the poor Indian brings to market. In no city in the world are houses taxed at so high a rate, or the rents so enormous. A decent house cannot be had for less than twenty-five hundred dollars, and from that price to four and five thousand per annum. The government, says Mr. Thompson, seems to have been engaged in the experiment of how much taxation the people can bear, and they have really achieved a miracle almost as great as that of extracting blood from a turnip!

FRANCE.—The Rev. Dr. Bushnel, of Hartford, Ct., who is now traveling in Europe, speaks thus of the present condition and prospects of France:—

"No country in Europe is advancing as rapidly as France. I doubt whether there is any, where there is more of general happiness. You will see more of filth and wretchedness in London in one day, and will be accosted by more beggars, than in Paris during a week; indeed I have scarcely been saluted by a beggar since I have been here. Even New York is far worse than Paris in this respect. Such a nation, rely upon it, is destined to be as free as it desires, whether nominally republican or not."

FEMALE HEROISM.—On the 10th inst. about forty ladies of the village of Utica, Mich., secretly assembled, armed themselves with axes, hammers, hatchets, &c. and proceeded to demolish a Bowling Alley, which they accomplished with great energy and perseverance. They went at it with much spirit—hacked the bed of the alley—tore down the walls—razed the roof to the ground, and finished with trampling upon and breaking to pieces the roof. The building was 80 feet long, and this work of destruction was accomplished in a little less than an hour!

The Copper Speculation is fast bringing into notice the country around Lake Superior, which from its sterile nature and high Northern latitude, has been heretofore more neglected than any other portion of the country. Recently, however, visions of untold and immeasurable wealth in this region, have floated through the imaginations of a fast increasing corps of speculators. Very lately a check has been put upon these exuberant fancies, by a quantity of ore sent to Boston, and supposed by the enthusiastic miners and speculators to contain about 70 per cent. of copper and nearly 20 of silver, having been found, on analysis at the laboratory, to contain no silver, and only about 28 per cent. of copper. All copper stocks have fallen greatly since this discovery, some of them from 300 per cent. advance and upward to below par. Doubtless some fortunes may ultimately be realized from judicious investments in this great mining region, but quite likely nearly as many may be lost. In these bold and hazardous speculations, even in the broadest field, wealth is not attained by more than one in a hundred of the adventurers, while the ninety-nine are stripped of the capital with which they commenced the enterprise. Mr. Anderton lost no time in making his arrangements to visit England.

NAUVOO.—This metropolis of fanaticism is pretty much deserted by its strange inhabitants. All the Mormons who could raise sufficient means, have already started for California, and those who remain, are intending to follow as soon as they can dispose of their property. All improved lots and houses are sold at a great loss. But the place will not become a desolation. The "Temple" has been purchased, we believe by a Methodist body for a college, and the site of the city is so eligible in many respects that there is quite a tide of emigration into it, and it bids fair to become one of the prominent cities of the west.

THE HALLS OF THE MONTEZUMAS.

Montezuma II, ascended the Mexican throne A. D. 1602, at the age of 24, before Mexico had been discovered by Europeans. He died 24th June, 1620, in the 42d year of his age, of wounds inflicted by the Spanish discoverers whom he had invited to his royal presence. Historians agree in admiring his character.

On ascending the throne, not content with the spacious residence of his father, he erected another, much more magnificent, fronting on the plaxa mayor of the present city of Mexico. So vast was this great structure, that, as one of the historians informs us, the space covered by its terraced roof might have afforded room for thirty knights to run their course in a regular tournay. His father's palace, although not as high, was so extensive, that the visitors were too much fatigued in wandering through the apartments ever to see the whole of it.

The palaces were built of red stone, ornamented with marble, the arms of the Montezuma family (an eagle bearing a tiger in his talons) being sculptured over the main entrance. Chrystal fountains, fed by great reservoirs on the neighboring hills, played in the vast halls and gardens, and supplied water to hundreds of marble baths in the interior of the palaces. Crowds of nobles and tributary chieftains were continually sauntering through the halls, or loitering away their hours in attendance on the court. Rich carvings in wood adorned the ceilings, beautiful mats of palm leaf covered the floors. The walls were hung with cotton richly stained, the skins of wild animals, or gorgeous draperies of feather work wrought in imitation of birds, insects and flowers, in glowing radiance of colors. Clouds of incense from golden censers diffused intoxicating odors through splendid apartments, occupied by the nine hundred and eighty wives and 5000 slaves of Montezuma.

He encouraged science and learning, and public schools were established throughout the greater part of his empire. The city of Mexico in his day, numbered twice as many inhabitants as at present, and one thousand men were daily employed in watering and sweeping its streets,—keeping them so clean that a man could traverse the whole city with as little danger of soiling his feet as his hands. A careful police guarded the city. Extensive arsenals, granaries, warehouses, and an aviary for the most beautiful birds, menageries, houses for reptiles and serpents, a collection of human monsters, fishponds, built of marble, and museums and public libraries, all on the most extensive scale, added their attractions to the great city of the Aztecs.

Gorgeous temples—in which human victims were sacrificed, and their blood baked in bread, or their bodies dressed for food, to be devoured by the people at religious festivals—reared their pyramidical altars far above the highest edifices. Thousands of their brother men were thus sacrificed annually. The temple of Maxtili, their war god, was so constructed, that its great alarm gong, sounding to battle, roused the valley for three leagues around, and called three hundred thousand armed Aztecs to the immediate relief of their monarch.

So vast was the collection of birds of prey, in a building devoted to them, that 500 turkeys, the cheapest meat in Mexico, were allowed for their daily consumption. Such were the "Halls of the Montezumas!" The summer residence of the monarch, on the hill of Chapoltepec, overlooking the city, was surrounded by gardens of several miles in extent, and here were preservd until the middle of the last century, two statues of the Emperor and his father. The great cypress trees, under which the Aztec sovereign and his associates once held their moonlight revels, still shade the royal gardens. Some of them, fifty feet in circumference, are several thousand years old, but are yet as green as in the days of Montezuma, whose ashes, or those of his ancestors, render sacred, in the eyes of the native Mexicans, the hill of Chapoltepec. Natural decay, and a waning population now mark the seat of power of the great Montezuma.

THE BRAVE LITTLE YANKEE.

It happened in 1776, that the garden of a widow, which lay between the American and British camps in the neighborhood of New York, was frequently robbed at night. Her son, a mere boy, and small for his age, having obtained his mother's permission to find out and secure the thief, in case he should return, concealed himself with a gun among the weeds. A strapping Highlander, belonging to the British grenadiers, came, and having filled a large bag, threw it over his shoulder; the boy then left his covert, went softly behind him, cocked his gun, and called out to the fellow, "You are my prisoner; if you attempt to put your bag down, I will shoot you dead; go forward in that road."

The boy kept close behind him, threatened, and was constantly prepared to execute his threats. Thus the boy drove him into the American camp, where he was secured. When the grenadier was at liberty to throw down his bag, and saw who had made him prisoner, he was extremely mortified, and exclaimed, "A British grenadier made prisoner by such a brat!" The American officers were highly entertained with the adventure, made a collection for the boy, and gave him several pounds. He returned fully satisfied for the losses his mother had sustained. The soldier had side arms, but they were of no use, as he could not get rid of his bag.

RAILWAY RACE—RIVAL SYSTEMS.

A London writer gives a vivid account of a trial of speed between a steam locomotive and a train propelled upon the atmospheric pressure principle.

"A race between a pair of well matched locomotives would be sufficiently exciting; but between a new system, like the atmospheric, and its rival, the locomotive, the character and reputation of both systems for speed depending on the issue, a well matched contest would be of no common interest. We were standing at the Forest Hall station, preparing to start, when it was announced that the Dover express train was in sight! Immediately we (the atmospheric train) made preparations to start, and were just in the act of starting from rest, when the locomotive train "whisked" past us at probably some 35 miles an hour. We started, but before we got into motion at any velocity, the Dover train was a mile ahead of us, and was evidently gaining rapidly in speed. However, on we went like a whirlwind, and it soon became evident that we were gaining on our rival. Three or four minutes decided the race. We passed the express train at a rat exceeding her own by 15 or 20 miles an hour. Our velocity could not have been less than 60 miles an hour. It was easily mantained, and we were over Brighton vaiduct and considerably beyond it before the Dover train reached it."

A Fearful Alternative.—The inhabitants of some of the rocky islets on the northern coast of Scotland, from the peculiar nature of their pursuits, are liable to frightful accidents. The following from Stanley's History of Birds, presents not only a startling incident, but exhibits in a vivid light the self-devotion of a husband and father under terrible circumstances.

A father and two sons were out together, and having firmly attached their ropes at the summit of a precipice, they descended to their usual occupation. Having collected as many birds and eggs as they could carry, they were all three ascending by the rope—the eldest of the sons first, his brother a fathom or two below him, and the father of the two following last.

They had made considerable progress, when the elder son, looking upward, perceived the strands of the rope grinding against a sharp edge of the rock, and gradually giving away. He immdeiately reported the alarming fact. "Will it hold together till we gain the summit?" asked the father. "It will not hold another minute," was the reply; "our tripple weight is lessening it rapidly." "Will it hold one?" said the father. "It is as much as it can do," replied the son; "even that is but doubtful." "There is then a possibility at least of one being saved; draw your knife instantly, and cut away below!" was the cool and intrepid order of the parent. "My son, exert yourself, and you may yet escape and live to comfort your poor mother!" There was no time for discussion or further hesitation. The son looked up once more, but the edge of the rock was cutting its way, and the rope was nearly severed. The knife was drawn, the rope was divided, and the father and brother were launched into eternity!

The Markham Band of Robbers.—Quite a romantic account has been published in the Toronto Colonist of the discovery of a band of robbers in Canada, whose operations extended all over the Provinces to the State of Michigan in the west, with branches in the states of Vermont, New York, Illinois, and Iowa. The association was formed of persons in good circumstances, owners of farms, sons of freeholders, strong, able-bodied young men, tavern keepers, owners and leasees of saw-mills, &c. The gang is divided into two parts—the cavalry and infantry. The former, who are generally mounted on the best horses in the country, figure only in the higher branches of roguery, such as burglary, horse-stealing, and in the wholesale dissemination of "boodle," which is the flash term of the gang for counterfeit money. To the infantry is designated the lower order of thievery. The system of the gang is as perfect as can be conceived. We have not space to enter into detail, but must allude to that part of its force called avant couriers. These gentry consist of tailors, who go about to farm-houses to work at their trade, for a certain sum per day, and their board and lodging; of pedlars, who visit farm-houses under pretext of selling small articles of finery to women and children; and, in one instance, of a rascal who professes to have the gift of prayer and "psalmody," which he dispenses liberally in exchange for provender and lodging. These rascals, respectively, avail themselves of the opportunities which these visits afford them, to ascertain who has money, where it is kept, and at what point of the premises an entry may be most effectually made.

Such was their power that they stalked about openly; magistrates were, in some instances, afraid to issue warrants for their apprehension, and constables, in others, afraid to serve them. They felt confident in their strength, and defied the law. Some of them are, however, arrested and imprisoned, and it is expected that the gang will be broken up.

Cutting Grain.—There are several advantages in favor of cutting grain before it becomes dead ripe. 1. It has been ascertained that wheat cut while it is so soft that it may be mashed between the fingers, will make flour containing more gluten, will absorb more water in kneading, and make more and better bread than the same quantity of grain perfectly ripened while standing. 2. The straw of all grain is much better if cut while it is a little green, and this on many farms is an item of no small importance, as it constitutes a large proportion of the winter food of stock. 3. Cutting early is often the means of saving a crop from rust. At all events, it has been well proved that whenever grain is struck with rust it is best to be cut. If it stands it does not improve after the rust comes on, but often grows worse rapidly. If it is cut and well cured in the shock, it sometimes makes a very fair kernel. Farmers are too often careless about the manner in which their grain is shocked or "stocked." It should be bound in small bundles, and the shocks carefully put so that they will stand the weather. Wet spoils both the grain and straw. Good, bright, early cut straw, especially that of barley and oats, is better than hay made according to the practice of some farmers. [Cultivator for July.

Hilling Potatoes.—Most persons make hills around potatoes, yet few have made exact experiments in order to determine whether this laborious operation is beneficial. The largest yield of potatoes that we ever had was on a piece of hard, strong land without hilling, and we have raised excellent potatoes both in quality and quantity, on burned land, as it is called, where the potatoes were planted by raising the turf with a corner of the hoe, and putting in a potatoe. On new land where it was difficult to make the holes for, and cover the potatoes, it might well be supposed that no hills were made.

Where the land is too wet, there is doubtless an advantage in hilling potatoes, as the water will run down into the hollows made for the purpose of getting earth for the hills, after which it will settle away without coming in contact with the potatoes, excepting in powerful rains, and then the surplus water will run off between the rows which serves as a drain. Moderate showers and light rains will mostly run from the hill, as from the roof of a building.

To Wine-drinkers.—It is not generally known that wine baths are quite common in France—nevertheless, such is the case. The Duke of Clarence is not the only gentleman who has enjoyed an immersion in malmsey. Punch has tried it with the very best sherry. Only imagine! Punch—the veritable English Punch—swimming in French wine, and kicking, and plunging, and laughing, until the tears ran down his cheeks, and never thinking of the expense—a five franc piece!

"What! a five franc piece for a tub full of wine? Hurrah! Viva la France!"

"Gently—gently. At least fifty others bathed in the same wine—after Punch. The keeper of the bagne had a preference for Punch, and gave Punch the first dip. After him came fifty others—making in all fifty five-franc pieces. A good price for the tub."

"The wine was then thrown out?"

"Not at all. Not so, by any means."

"What then?"

"Bottled! Bottled, of course."

"Bottled? And for what purpose?"

"Why, for drink, to be sure."

"Drink! Who would drink such stuff?"

"Why, the English do—the Yankees do! The latter import it in large quantities. It is a great favorite in Yankeeland."

Now, dear wine-drinking friends, anti-temperance friends, when you next smack your lips over a glass of champagne or burgundy, reflect that a Lyonese alderman may possibly have bathed in it, and see if the reflection will assist you in appreciating its flavor. [Sunday Times.

The United States.—The territory of the United States is equal to that of the whole of Europe, with the exception of Russia. It is ten times as large as England, Scotland and Ireland united. The most rigid calculation assures us that in 25 years the population of this country will be 40 millions; in 75 years, more than 150 millions; in 100 years, nearly 300 millions will be clustered along the rivers and spread over the valleys and the hills of these United States; and many of our grand children will see nearly 600 millions of inhabitants crowding the cities and cultivating the fields of this vast territory, whitening every sea with their fleets, and penetrating in a thousand nameless ways every island and every continent. All causes now tend to national consolidation. Speed is conquering, nay, absolutely annihilating space. When the locomotive leaps the remote tributaries of the Missouri, and rushes down the western declivities of the Rocky mountains, a journey from the Atlantic to the Pacific will be less arduous than in the days of the Revolution was one from the Penobscot to the Hudson. Don't be Cruel.—See that man beating his horse unmercifully. Friend, is it in this manner you treat God's creatures, given for your special service? Could this animal speak what would be the message? More fearful than that of Balaam's ass, striking terror to your soul! A merciful man is merciful to his beast. Do you say, he will not pull your load? No wonder; you load too heavily. Your horse is poor, his bones stick out; you well nigh starve him; shameful! Feed your horse, give him a plenty, curry him, water him, be gentle, kind, and our word for it, he will pull your load. See yonder steed in good trim stepping off gallantly, his ears pricked, head erect, as much as to say, Good master, take care of me, and I'll take care of you. Feed me well, be kind and merciful, and I'll plough your fields and whirl your buggies in good style.

"The Bread Act."—A stranger secently stopping in this city, says the N. Y. Sun, relates the following case of youthful vagrancy. While wending his way through one of the by-streets, he was accosted by a tatterdemalion boy, who piteously begged for a sixpence to buy a loaf of bread for his dying mother. The stranger's heart was moved; the urchin grasped the sixpence given, with a look which spoke volumes of gratitude, and darted away around the next corner to fulfill his mission of filial love. The stranger walked around the next corner also, with a swelling heart, when he was surprised to see in a neighboring alley, a half score of young urchins pitching coppers. In their midst stood our young vagabond, exhibiting his sixpence, and exclaiming in great glee, "I've got the brads." "How did you raise 'em," inquired one of the group. "Oh, I cum de bread act on a green un," was the reply.

Silence of the Prairies.—One of the most striking things is the silence of the prairies. It is absolutely awful. At night, when the moon has gone down, and the stars are all out, to stand in the centre of one of these mammoth plains, and mark the deep unbroken silence that surrounds you, is sublimely impressive. I never witnessed any effect like it. Not a solitary sound can be heard—no insect, no bird, no beast, no human voice or step—but all is one space of grand fearful silence. Such a spot, far from the haunts of congregated multitudes, becomes to the good man like the glorious Bethel where the journeying patriarch slept.

The Ocean.—Ah! could they speak to us, those unresting waves—not of all the hoarded treasures hidden beneath them—let such be theirs!—but of all they daily see of human suffering, all they know of human destiny, what spirit-thrilling histories would they tell, of what is now forever veiled from many a despairing soul! Never did I gaze upon the ceaseless waves, without a pitying thought for those, who, perhaps, are looking still for friends that may come no more, and expecting vessels, homeward bound years ago, whose blanching spars are far down beneath those careless and careering billows. God be with them, those watchers in vain for missing ships!

A man's rank was formerly known by the size of his shoes. Those of a prince measured two feet and a half; a plain citizen was allowed only twelve inches; hence the French proverb, Etre sur un grand pied dans le monde—"To be on a great foot (or footing) in the world."

The editor of the Chronotype lets off his feelings thus: "A very pious Presbyterian divine used always to say, when he met the General Assembly of his church, "Now, dear brethren, how near can we come to doing what is right, and keep together?" A poor editor may as well say every day when he sits down to his task, "Now my dear skin and bones, how much truth can we say and live?"

Gen. Thompson, in his work on Mexico, estimates the debt of that Republic at a little less than $100,000,000. Of this amount something more than $60,000,000 is due to foreigners, including a debt of $36,000,000 to the Viceroyal Government, which was assumed by Mexico after her independence, and $25,000,000 more to Mexican citizens.

"As I was going," said an Irishman, "over Westminster bridge the other day, I met Pat Hewins; says I, How are you? Pretty well, I thank you, Dolley, says he; says I, that's not my name. Faith no more is mine Hewins says he. So we looked at each other, and faith, it turned out to be neither of us!"

In the republic of Hayti, a man was tried for stealing some articles of food while being cooked in a pot over the fire. It was urged in his defence, that the larceny was committed under the influence of hunger; and the court decided that it was not unlawful for a man to steal when he was hungry. To this it was replied that he had stolen the pot also. But in this dilemma the court decided that as the victuals could not be taken away without the pot, it was allowable that the pot should accompany its contents.

A lady in Indiana states that after churning three hours to no purpose, she recollected that cream was sometimes said to be too sour. She then dissolved a large teaspoonful of soda in a pint of warm water, poured in, churning at the same time, and the mass changed, gradually turning into a lump of solid, sweet butter.

On the southern part of this continent, as on our western prairies, millions of cattle are killed for their hides alone; while their carcases are left to be devoured by the wild beasts and birds of prey. This has been the case, until lately, in Australia, but the plan of boiling down the meat into a portable soup has there been put in successful operation. This is cut into cakes, and sold for about fifty cents a pound, and one pound is equal to twenty-four pounds of the best beef.

The Pennsylvania Reporter says: In all our acquaintance with journeyman printers, we scarcely ever saw one that was either a fool or a coward. Wherever there is fun they are there—where danger is most imminent they are sure to be found. At the call of their country, none respond more heartily, or in its service display more zeal and ability; and in the present crisis of our affairs, these latter qualities are developing themselves in all quarters.

Dr. Franklin used to say that the most disinterested and useful friend a man could possibly procure was a French woman of a certain age, who had no design upon his person. A wealthy citizen of Athens complained that Aristippus, the philosopher, in requiring five hundred pieces of money for the instruction of his son, had demanded as much as would purchase a slave. "Purchase one, then, with the money," said the philosopher, "and you will be master of two."

A gentleman residing in London and writing home, states that official data may be found for the fact that within the past fifteen years, no less than 48,000 houses have been built in London; and at the present there is going on a single negotiation for the erection of four thousand dwelling houses on an estate at the extreme west end of the city.

To his utter astonishment, when the boy was called up and Sol had responded as his Attorney, it was the identical fellow he had prosecuted for the row at his theatre! There was no chance for a back-out, however, and Sol went on, defended and cleared his client.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant andeconomical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institntion, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

LAW AND GOSPEL.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

The following is taken from a copy of Tindal's Bible, printed in the year 1549, the orthography being corrected that the sense may be more readily apprehended by the common reader. A single example will suffice to show the style of the original words:—"And now Christe, to preache repentaunce, is rysen yet ones agayne oute of hys sepulchre in whiche the Pope had buried him, and kept him downe wyth hys pylars and polaxes, and al dysgysynges ypocrysyes, wyth gyle, wylles and folshed, and wyth the swerde of al prynces which he had blynded wyth hys false marchaundice." The article below is about one-fifth of the prologue to the Book of Jonas, the whole of which would no doubt interest the readers of the Recorder, as applicable to the Pharisees and hypocrites of the present day, were it prudent to occupy so much room with one article. It will be remembered, that William Tindal was the first to publish the New Testament in the English language, and that he was burned at the stake for the sake of the Gospel and the Reformation. T. B. S.

W. T. unto the Christian Reader.

As the envious Philistines stopped the wells of Abraham, and filled them up with earth, to put the memorial out of mind, to the intent that they might challenge [appropriate or keep for themselves] the ground, even so the fleshly-minded hypocrites stop up the veins of life which are in the Scriptures with the earth of their traditions, false similitudes, and lying allegories, and of like zeal to make the Scriptures their own possession and merchandize, and so shut up the kingdom of heaven, which is God's word, neither entering in themselves, nor suffering them that would.

The Scripture hath a body without; and within a soul, spirit and life. It hath without a bark, a shell, and as it were a hard bone for the fleshly-minded to gnaw upon; and within it hath pith, kernel, marrow, and all sweetness for God's elect, which he hath chosen, to give them his spirit, and to unite his law and the faith of his Son in their hearts.

The Scripture containeth three things in it—First, The Law, to condemn all flesh; Secondly, The Gospel, that is, promises of mercy for all that repent and acknowledge their sins at the preaching of the law, and consent in their hearts that the law is good, and submit themselves to be scholars and learn to keep the law and to believe the mercy that is promised them; and, thirdly, the history and lives of those scholars, both what chances befel them, and also by what means their school-master taught them and made them perfect, and how he tried the true from the false.

When the hypocrites come to the law, they put glosses to it, and make no more of it than of a worldly law, which is satisfied with the outward work, and which a Turk might also fulfil; when yet God's law never ceaseth to condemn a man until it be written in his heart, and until he keep it naturally, without compulsion, save only of pure love to God and to his neighbor, as he naturally eateth when he is hungry.

And when they come to the Gospel, they mingle their leaven and say, "God now receiveth us no more to mercy, but of mercy receiveth us to penance"—that is, to wit, holy deeds, which make them fat bellies, and us their captives both in soul and body; and yet they feign their idol, the Pope, so merciful that if thou makest a little money glisten in his Baalam's eyes there is neither penance nor purgatory nor fasting at all (required), but to fly to heaven as swift as a thought, and as the twinkling of an eye.

And the lives and stories and gifts of men, which are contained in the Bible, they read as things no more pertaining unto them than a cake of Robin Hood, and as things they wot not whereto they serve, save for false descant and jingling allegories to establish their kingdom withal. And one of the chiefest and fleshliest studies they have, is to magnify the saints above measure and above the truth, and with their poetry to make them greater than even God made them. And if they find any infirmity or sin ascribed unto the saints, this they excuse with all diligence, diminishing the glory of the mercy of God, and robbing wretched sinners of all their comfort; and they think thereby to flatter the saints and obtain their favor and make special advocates of them, even as a man would obtain the favor of worldly tyrants; as they also feign the saints more cruel than ever was any heathen man, and more wreakful and vengeable [angry and revengeful] than the poets feign their gods or their furies that torment the souls in hell, if their evens be not fasted* and their images be not visited and saluted with a pater noster, which prater our lips only are acquainted with, our hearts understanding not at all, and worship with a candle and the offering of our devotions in the place which they have chosen to hear supplication and make petitition of their clients therein.

But thou, reader, think of the law of God, how that it is altogether spiritual, so that it is never fulfilled with deeds or works until they flow out of thine heart with as great love toward thy neighbor for no deserving of his, yea, though he be thine enemy, as Christ loved thee and died for thee for no deserving of thine, but even when thou wast his enemy. And in the meantime, throughout all our infancy and childhood in Christ, till we be grown up into perfect men in the full knowledge and love of Christ, and of our neighbor for his sake, remember that the fulfilling of the law is a fast of faith in Christ's blood, coupled with our profession and submitting ourselves to learn to do better.

And of the Gospel or promises which thou meetest in the Scripture, believe fast that God will fulfill them unto thee, and that unto the uttermost jot, at the repentance of thine heart, when thou turnest to him and forsakest evil, even of his goodness and fatherly mercy unto thee, and not for thy flattering of him with hypocritish works of thine own feigning. So that a fast [firm] faith only, without respect of works, is the forgiveness both of the sin which we did in time of ignorance with lust and consent to sin, and also of all the sin which we do by chance and frailty after we have come to knowledge, and have professed the law out of our hearts. And all deeds serve only to help our neighbor and to tame our flesh, that we fall not into sin again, and to exercise ourselves in virtue, and not to make satisfaction to God-ward for the sin that is once past. And all other stories of the Bible, without exception, are the practicing of the Law and of the Gospel, and are true and faithful ensamples and sure earnest that God will even so deal with us as he did with them, in all infirmaties, in all temptations, and in all like cases and circumstances; wherein ye see, on the one side, how fatherly and tenderly and with all compassion God entreateth his elect which submit themselves as scholars to learn to walk in the ways of his laws and to keep them of love. If they were forgetful of themselves at a time and went away, he called them with mercy. If they fell and hurt themselves, he healed them again with all compassion and tenderness of heart. He hath oft brought great tribulation and adversity upon his elect, but all of fatherly love only, to teach them, and to make them see their own hearts, and the sin that there lay hid, that they might afterward feel his mercy, for his mercy waited upon them, to rid them out again as soon as they were learned and come to the knowledge of their own hearts; so that he never cast man away how deepsoever he had sinned, save them only which had first cast the yoke of his laws from their necks with utter defiance and malice of heart. Which ensamples, how comfortable are they for us when we be fallen into sin, and God is come upon us with a scourge, that we despair not, but repent with full hope of mercy, after the ensamples of mercy are gone before. And therefore they were written for our learning, as testifieth Paul, (Rom. 6: 5,) to comfort us, that we might the better put our hope and trust in God, when we see how merciful he hath been in times past unto our weak brethren that are gone before, in all their adversities, need, temptations, yea, and horrible sins, into which they now and then fell.

And, on the other side, ye see how they that hardened their hearts, and sinned of malice, and refused mercy that was offered them, and had no disposition to repent, perished at the latter end, with all confusion and shame, without mercy; which ensamples are very good and necessary so keep us in fear and dread in time of prosperity, as thou mayest see by Paul, (1 Cor. 10,) that we abide in the fear of God and wax not wild and fall to vanities and so sin and provoke God and bring wrath upon us.

And, thirdly, ye see in the practice how as God is merciful and long suffering, even so were all his true prophets and preachers, bearing the infirmities of their weak brethren, and their own wrongs and injuries, with all patience and long-suffering, never casting any of them off their backs, until they sinned against the Holy Ghost maliciously, persecuting the open and manifest truth, according to the example of the Pope, who, in sinning against God and quenching the truth of his Holy Spirit, is ever chief captain and trumpet-blower, to set others at work, seeking only his own freedom, privilege, profit, pleasure, pastime, honor, and glory, with the bondage, misery, wretchedness, and vile subjection of his brethren; and in his own cause is so fervent, so stiff and cruel, that he will not suffer one word spoken against his false majesty, wily inventions, and juggling hypocrisy, to be unavenged, though all christendom should be set by the ears, and should cost he cared not how many hundred thousand lives.

Early Tract Effort.—Mr Henry Homes may be justly regarded as one of the principal founders of the American Tract Society. Some forty years ago his attention was awakened to the importance of personal religion, by reading one of the Tracts of Miss Hannah More, placed in his hands by the late Dr. Tappan, Professor of Divinity in Harvard College. The means which God was thus pleased to bless to his own conversion to Christ, assumed an interest and importance in his mind which he retained to the close of his life. Tracts were the favorite means which Mr. Homes constantly employed for the spiritual welfare of others. These he always kept by him, and used liberally and judiciously, whether at home or on journeys. At the time of his conversion he had just entered into commercial business. He soon associated himself with a few Christian friends who sympathised with him in his views and feelings. In connection with these friends, in their seasons of Christian communion, though belonging to different religious denominations, he devised ways and means for printing cheap religious books and tracts for circulation. This soon led to the formation of a small association for this purpose, and which proved to be one of the incipient steps to the organization of the Society whose thirty-second anniversary we are now met to celebrate. For the Recorder.

"THE CLOUDS RETURN AFTER THE RAIN."

They return, they return, and I welcome them back,
Like covenant angels from mercy's bright track;
Their errand of mercy is accomplished, and now,
With rapture, I gaze on each tranquilized brow.

I looked, when the parched earth with languishing soil,
Besought the rich blessing; they sped to the toil
With many tears, traversed heath, valley, and hill,
Unmindful, so God's hand but guided them still.

They return, and the might of their vigor is gone;
But their price is well paid by that radiant crown,
And the restless ambition of action gives place
To the staid mien of age, with its eloquent face.

Ah, eloquent even as angels they seem,
With an eye on two worlds, from whose portals between,
A glory sweeps through the ethereal plain,
O'er the clouds that return to us after the rain.

Thanks, thanks for the lesson my spirit has caught,
With patient endurance and truthfulness fraught,
In the hand that leads safely, though silently on,
Through the conflicts of life to its close and its crown.

From the Boston Recorder.

A SOUR DISCIPLE.

I am very sorry to put these two words together, for the idea of a disciple seems to beget associations of cheerfulness, and sweetness and joy, and so on. But I should not put the words together if I had not seen the thing which they describe, and I think it is fair game for a short chase.

Divers things made him sour.

1. Petty vexations. A lost article could not be found; his neighbor's children, geese, or dog, were noisy; this man failed in an appointment, and that vexed him by his parsimony. There are plenty of small matters in such a world as ours, to uproot the beautiful plants that spring from good nature, unless those plants have shot their roots very deep, and have taken strong hold; and said disciple did not seem to have the required depth of earth.

2. Reproof soured him. He had to take it now and then, for he had some conscience, and there was a faithful man in the pulpit, and some faithful disciples about him, and he could not run the gauntlet of all this without being "hit of the archers." And he was wounded; but instead of humbling, it too often soured him. It ought to have sweetened him, by improving him as reproof did one of old, who could thus write of himself: "Let the righteous smite me, it shall be a kindness; and let him reprove me, it shall be an excellent oil which shall not break my head."

3. But I think certain mental conflicts tended as much as anything to sour him. He had a conscience, and he might have kept it smiling upon him like a cloudless May morning; but divers wicked passions would now and then seize the reins and drive off. And when he saw his folly, he saw anything but an angel's face upon conscience, and he was dissatisfied with himself, and was oftener sour than penitent, which was a great mistake.

For such reasons, and more like them, he was certainly a sour disciple. He had a sour look, and he said sour things, and some of his deeds were very vinegar-like. And take the whole case together, there was not, to be honest about the matter, much sweetness in that disciple. And I venture the following reasons for saying it was a great pity.

1. Because his sourness very much marred his beauty. Sour things are capital in their place. They are wholesome and comfortable. But I never yet could find that the human countenance was the place for sourness, and least of all a disciple's face; nor find that such a person's character was the place for the same article. Such an one should be "fair as the moon, clear as the sun." He should shine in the beauty of holiness. But shining and sourness, who ever put them together? But if any one contends that one may be beautiful and yet be sour, I will not contend, but try a

2d topic. It was a pity that he was sour, because it hindered his usefulness. He could not "adorn" the doctrine of God his Saviour, nor make a fair and winning representation of the excellence of the gospel. Would people think that "whatsoever things were lovely and of good report" belonged to religion, when they saw such a character? Would they not rather be repelled, than won to religion? His sourness was enough to sour a whole flock of young people against the gospel, and make them think that becoming Christians would make them sour too.

3. That he was a sour disciple was the greater pity, inasmnch as so much had been done to make him sweet. Think of what an example of loveliness there was before him, in him who was "chief of ten thousands and altogether lovely." And then such a sweet balm, even that of Gilead, had been sent to heal all the wounds and soften the asperities of this spirit. And then what promises of surpassing sweetness and preciousness had been made to him! And then such positive injunctions, do but think of them, to sweetness of spirit, implied in being courteous, and kind, and gentle, and long-suffering, and thinking no evil, and always rejoicing. And, as crowning all, what a sweet and happy home in heaven was offered him! Nothing sour there, not the shadow of a shade. Now that he could possibly be sour amid all these agencies to make him sweet, was a wonder, and a pity as big as the wonder.

4. And I cannot conclude without expressing my anxiety concerning what disposal will finally be made of him, if he keeps on being sour. Sour things are apt to grow sourer; and if this disciple gets any more so, and like and like are put together, it is well towards being certain that where a good many good people are, he will not be found. There are no sour people in the company of the patriarchs, and prophets, and apostles. There is nothing to make people look sour or feel sour in that world; and it is pretty likely that if said disciple does not get sweetened in due time, he will be found totally unfit for the company of those who are "altogether lovely."

THE END OF FOUR GREAT MEN.

Cast your eyes upon a printed page of miniature portraits, and it will be perceived that the four personages who occupy the most conspicuous places, were Alexander, Hannibal, Cæsar and Bonaparte.

Alexander, after having climbed the dizzy heights of his ambition, and with his temples bound with chaplets dipped in the blood of countless millions, looked down upon a conquered world, and wept that there was not another world for him to conquer, set a city on fire, and died in a scene of debauch.

Hannibal, after having, to the astonishment and consternation of Rome, passed the Alps, and having put to flight the armies of the mistress of the world, and stripped "three bushels of rings from the fingers of her slaughtered knights," and made her foundations quake, fled from his country, being hated by those who once exultingly united his name to that of their god, and called him Hani Baal, and died at last by poison administered with his own hand, unlamented and unwept, in a foreign land.

Cæsar, after having conquered eight hundred cities, and dyed his garments in the blood of one million of his foes, after having pursued to death the only rival he had on earth, was miserably assassinated by those he considered his nearest friends; and in that very place, the attainment of which had been his greatest ambition.

Bonaparte, whose mandates kings and popes obeyed, after having filled the earth with the terror of his name—after having deluged Europe with tears and blood, and clothed the world in sackcloth, closed his days in lonely banishment, almost literally exiled from the world, yet where he could sometimes see his country's banner waving over the deep, but which did not nor would not bring him aid.

Thus these four men, who for the peculiar situation of their portraits, seem to stand the representatives of all those whom the world call great—these four men, who each in turn made the earth tremble to its very center, by their simple tread, severally died—one by intoxication, or as was supposed, by poison mingled in his wine—one a suicide—one murdered by his friends—and one a lonely exile. "How are the mighty fallen!"

TRANSLATION OF THE SCRIPTURES.

When Queen Elizabeth opened the prisons at her coming to the crown, one piously told her, that there were yet some good men left in prison undelivered, and desired that they might also partake of her princely favor; meaning the four Evangelists, and Paul, who had been denied to walk abroad in the English tongue, when her sister Mary swayed the sceptre. To this she answered, "They should be asked, whether they were willing to have their liberty;" which soon after appearing, they had, says an old divine, "their gaol delivery; and have ever since had their liberty to speak to us in our own tongue at the assemblies of our public worship; yea, and to visit us in our private houses also."

Our English translation of the Bible was made in the time and by the appointment of James the First. According to Fuller, the number of translators amounted to forty-seven. Every one of the company was to translate the whole parcel, and compare all together. These good and learned men entered on their work in the spring, 1607, and three years elapsed before the translation was finished.

Bugenhagius assisted Luther in the translation of the Bible into German, and kept the day on which it was finished annually a festival with his friends, calling it "The Feast of the Translation of the Bible;" and it certainly deserves a red letter more than half the saints in the calendar.

Soon after Tindale's New Testament was published, a royal proclamation was issued to prohibit the buying and reading of such translation or translations. But this served to increase the public curiosity, and to occasion a more careful reading of what was deemed so obnoxious. One step taken by the Bishop of London afforded some merriment to the Protestants. His Lordship thought that the best way to prevent these English New Testaments from circulation would be to buy up the whole impressions, and therefore employed a Mr. Packington, who secretly favored the reformation, then at Antwerp, for this purpose; assuring him, at the same time, that cost what they would, he would have them, and burn them at Paul's cross. Upon this, Packington applied himself to Tindale, (who was then at Antwerp,) and upon agreement the Bishop had the books, Packington great thanks, and Tindale all the money. This enabled Tindale instantly to publish a new and more correct edition; so that they came over thick and three-fold into England; which occasioned great rage in the disappointed Bishop and his popish friends. One Constantine being soon after apprehended by Sir Thomas Moore, and being asked how Tindale and others subsisted abroad, readily answered, "that it was the Bishop of London who had been their chief supporter, for he bestowed a great deal of money upon them in the purchase of New Testaments, to burn them; and that upon that cash they had subsisted till the sale of the second edition was received."

The following incident respecting the Venerable Bede is worthy of remembrance. One of the last things he did was the translating of St. John's Gospel into English. When death seized on him, one of his devout scholars, whom he used for his secretary or amanuensis, said to him, "My beloved master, there remains yet one sentence unwritten." "Write it then quickly," replied Bede; and, summoning all his spirits together, (like the last blaze of a candle going out,) indited it, and expired.

MARTIN LUTHER.

He was a most wonderful man—gifted with a nature so broad and expansive, that while it touched the severe, almost the harsh, on one side, it mingled with all that was tender and affectionate on the other. Hear, for instance, his remarks after the death of his daughter, Madeline. When they placed her on the bier, he exclaimed—

"My poor, dear little Madeline, you are at rest now." Then looking long and fixedly at her, he said, "Yes, dear child, thou shalt rise again, shalt shine like a star! Yes, like the sun! * * * * * *

I am joyful in the spirit, but oh, how sad in the flesh! It is a strange feeling this, to know that she is so certainly at rest, that she is happy, and yet be so sad!"

It is recorded that when his little daughter was in the agony of death, Luther threw himself on his knees by her bed-side, and weeping bitterly, prayed to God that he would spare her. She breathed her last in his arms. In one of his letters a short time afterwards he says, after speaking of the death of Madeline, that he knew he ought to be thankful for her happy deliverance from the many troubles of this world: "Nevertheless the force of instinct is so great, that I cannot forbear from tears, sighs and groans, say rather my heart dies within me. I feel engraven on my inmost soul her features, her words and actions; all that she was to me in life and health, and on her sick bed, my dear, my dutiful child. * * * She was, as you know, so sweet, so amiable, so full of tenderness."

How beautifully the softness and tenderness of the stern Reformer's character comes out in these extracts. And could anything be finer than this of woman:—"When Eve was brought before Adam, he was filled with the Holy Ghost, and gave her the most beautiful and glorious of names, he called her Eva, that is, mother of all living. He did not call her his wife, but mother, mother of all living. This is woman's glory and most precious ornament." Or this: One evening, noticing a little bird perched on a tree as if to take up its rest for the night, he said, "This little thing has chosen its shelter, and is going peacefully to sleep; it does not disturb itself with thoughts of where it shall rest to-morrow, but composes itself tranquilly on its little branch, and leaves God to think for it."

The Jesuits.—It is probable that even our youngest readers may have seen or heard something of the Jesuits. It is an order of men who compose what is called the Society of Jesus. The order was founded three centuries ago by a Spanish imposter, whose name was Ignatius Loyola. He pretended that he had received the constitution and laws of the order from heaven; but his pretensions were despised, until he appealed to the pope, and promised that if he could go on with his plans, he and all his followers should bind themselves to go wherever the pope directed, and do whatever he should bid! This plan seemed to promise much aid to the cause of popery, and was at once approved; and in less than fifty years the Society of Jesus became one of the most powerful and dangerous bodies of men that the world has ever known.

They have been expelled from some countries, and their order has been broken up in others. And wherever they have had influence, they have done evil, and that continually. They are now coming very fast into our country. Almost every ship that crosses the Atlantic brings to our shores some of them, and they are creeping into our schools and colleges all over our new States. [Youth's Penny Gazette.

The Massacre of St. Bartholomew.—The Protestants in France, three hundred years ago, were dreadfully oppressed and persecuted by the governors of that country, who were papists. At length the king and his friends pretended to make peace with them, and to allow them all the privileges they asked. Their leading men were invited to visit Paris and see the king, and feel that they were all on good terms. With all this show of kind feeling, they were the whole time laying their plans to butcher them. When the time came for the largest number of Protestants to be in Paris, the dreadful blow was struck. In the dead of night, on the 23d of August, 1572, at the appointed signal, the murderers sallied out upon their innocent, slumbering victims; and before the dawn of day, the dead and dying were piled in heaps in the streets of the city, and the river was red with blood!

We must not expect too much at once.—We often think of a saying of Archbishop Bramhall. When, upon the cessation of the great rebellion he was appointed to the primacy of the Irish Church, he found the province of Armagh teeming with disorder, and filled with opposers both of his own person, and of the discipline and doctrine of the church. And how did he eventually succeed in stemming the torrent of evil? Not by making sudden and violent changes; but by patient, quiet firmness, and by steadily continuing his own uncompromising course of argument, persuasion, and long-suffering, through good report and bad report. For "men," said he, "must needs have some time allowed them to return to their senses who had so long been out of them."

Foreigners in Canton.—A new proclamation has been issued by Keying in Canton, insisting that all foreigners shall be undisturbed, that the Chinese dwell with them "in mutual peace and cordial friendship," and that "hereafter absolutely each one must mind his own business." "Let there not be again a making of words (posting of placards) under a false pretext of righteousness and justness, causing disturbance."

ANTI-SUNDAY-COERCION CONVENTION.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

As an individual, an isolated Seventh-day Baptist, I respond most heartily to the suggestion of Elder Davison on the propriety of holding an Anti-Sunday-Coercion Convention, and have written to the Societies at Ephrata and Snowhill, apprising them of the project, and recommending to them to send on delegations to Shiloh the day before the meeting of the General Conference in September next. Let the ball roll on. Let the friends in New York, and Rhode Island, and Connecticut, speak out and rally to the rescue.

I have for a long time regarded that stand as the proper position to assume. I feel degraded, as an American Citizen, that there should be any ban upon any sect or denomination in this land of vaunted "liberty and independence"—"the asylum for the oppressed of all nations." Since Sunday laws have been enacted and enforced, I have been constrained, painfully constrained, to regard our "freedom" but a name; and have felt the surprise, the utter amazement, expressed by foreigners, on becoming acquainted with such invidious legislation amongst us, to be the severest taunt on our republican institutions. Not any thing so much surprises a foreigner, and excites his derision against our republican government, as to hear of any religious test or the least impediment to the free exercise of religious liberty and religious privileges imposed by any of our legislatures. I have always questioned that authority, and sometime since urged and re-urged upon our friends in Pennsylvania, to test the constitutionality of the law under which they have suffered so much persecution. They have, at last, when forbearance is no longer a virtue, and the assertion of their undeniable rights has become a duty—a duty toward God and toward man—determined to try the issue in the highest tribunals of the country. They are able of themselves to test it in the Courts of their own commonwealth; but should it become necessary to remove it to the last resort, the Supreme Court of the United States, where it may eventually have to be determined, then it will become an affair of the whole denomination, and of all the friends of religious liberty throughout the land, and it will be proper and needful for all to join in the issue, and lend their aid to secure the most eminent and efficient counsel.

Approving most cordially of the object of the proposed Convention, and yielding to no one in devotion to the cause of religious rights, being ever ready to maintain these rights to the fullest extent, I take advantage of this occasion to make a remark on the position in which many of our friends, as well as myself, found ourselves last winter, in reference to the proposed "exemption" feature in the revised Act on Vice and Immorality, before the Legislature of this State (New Jersey,) which, under the circumstances, was an important one in more respects than one; as that Act contained a provision exonerating the seventh-day people from grievous burdens. It secured us from any process of law, of serving on juries, and of performing militia duty, on the seventh-day. Had the law been repealed, we would now be subject to these annoyances. But another consideration could not be overlooked, and that was, on being solicited to co-operate with our friends, to have the present law "so modified as to exempt"—(for such was the language of the petitions prepared for us to send to the Legislature,)—I succeeded in procuring the signatures of many of the most distinguished and influential citizens of different parts of the State, and of different political parties—gentlemen distinguished for their moral qualities, their talents and political standing, and among them three clergymen of the first-day order, asking that justice be extended to us. The Bill reported by the committee, called the Bill of Equal Rights, took many persons by surprise who sympathized with us, and excited the suspicions of many, very many others. It looked trickey. It was not what we had petitioned for, and was considered capable of a construction which might be made oppressive to the large majority of the community. Many were honestly alarmed at it, while others who wished to defeat it, dishonestly asserted sinister aims and ends, and stigmatized it with a design to retaliate on the observers of the first-day. It was difficult to justify the report of such an Act upon the petitions presented, and more difficult to convince the public, that it might not be construed to enforce them to observe the seventh-day, as the existing law enforces the seventh-day people to keep the first-day. Still it had my best wishes and aid to make it palatable. It received too little attention from its projectors and friends, and less favor from its inveterate enemies; so it failed. While there was a prospect, and a much better prospect, of getting the "exemption" feature fully recognized, I held on to it; but both aside, I am tired of begging any longer for what is an indisputable right. I now go for repeal—the repeal of all coercive laws, restraining or abridging religious rights and religious privileges; and confidently believe, that we shall have the sympathy and support of a large portion of the community, if we distinctly avow hostility to any legislation upon the Sabbath, leaving it entirely to the consciences of men to obey the laws of God, and disclaim all right in any political power to legislate on any matters relating to religious faith or practice.

Regarding the whole design of human government to be, to protect the people, individually and severally, in their respective rights, and to afford security to their persons and property, the only law which any legislature should ever enact relative to religious matters, is a general law, to secure all persons from molestation, at all times, when they assemble to worship Almighty God. Beyond this, it is a usurpation of the fundamental law of the land—the charter of our rights—the palladium of our liberties—the glorious Constitution. Let it be premitted in one point, and where can any limit be interposed? We are therefore called upon to take our stand, as Christians and as Republicans, to protest against every usurpation or infringement on our religious rights; and as we have been denied redress at the halls of our Legislatures, we must appeal to the Judiciary to revise the doings of our law-makers, and have all unconstitutional enactments, which conflict with our religious rights, stricken from the statute book. This is the ground we must now take. We go begging no longer at legislative halls. We now demand our constitutional rights at the judicial bench.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST WESTERN ASSOCIATION.

The Seventh-day Baptist Western Association met with the Church in Clarence, Erie Co., N. Y., on the 24th, 25th, and 26th days of June, 1846. From a copy of the printed Minutes, we compile the following account of its proceedings.

The Introductory Discourse was preached by Eld. N. V. Hull, from the 133d Psalm; after which the Association was organized by the appointment of Eld. Leman Andrus, Moderator; Erastus A. Green and Nathan Wardner, Clerks.

From the letters of the churches, it appears that revivals have been enjoyed by two or three, and a good degree of harmony exists in all. There is, however, much complaint of a general want of fervor and deep devotion. In view of this, a resolution was passed by the Association, recommending the observance of the sixth-day of the week before the first Sabbath in August—(last sixth-day)—as a day of fasting and prayer to God for the revival of his work. We are glad to notice among the letters, one from the church in Pendleton, requesting to be admitted into the Association. This church, it will be remembered, was formed exclusively of converts to the Sabbath, including the pastor, Eld. Leman Andrus. The request for admission to the Association was granted.

The subject of securing legal protection for Seventh-day Baptists in the State of New York, was introduced at an early stage of the proceedings. Eld. Eli S. Bailey was present as a delegate from the Central Association, and stated that the body which he represented had appointed individuals to open a correspondence with influential members of the Convention now in session to revise the Constitution of the State, for the purpose of inducing them to use their influence to secure such an amendment of the Constitution as will fully protect our rights; but that in case of failure, an agent had been appointed to attend at Albany during the next session of the Legislature, and endeavor to secure the passage of a law which shall protect us. To carry out this measure, he solicited the co-operation of the Western Association. A resolution was passed heartily concurring in the steps which had been taken, and pledging the co-operation of the Western with the Central Association to accomplish the proposed and most desirable object. From the spirit of the resolutions passed upon the subject, we judge that our brethren in Western New York are awake to the protection of their civil and religious rights.

The subject of Education came before the Association in connection with the following resolution, which was presented by the Committee on Resolutions, and adopted:—

Resolved, That this Association witnesses with pleasure the increasing interest manifested in the denomination upon the subject of Education, and rejoices in the success of the efforts of the friends of the DeRuyter Institute, to redeem it from its embarrassments, and to establish it upon a basis such as to render it permanently useful. We also rejoice in the increasing prosperity of the Alfred Academy, and trust that its success will be equal to the most sanguine expectations of its friends; and we hereby express our confidence in its Faculty, and recommend it to the confidence and support of the friends in general.

In regard to Missionary Operations, the report of a special committee on the subject was adopted, recommending, 1st. That the Association recognize itself as a Missionary Society; 2d. That the Association elect annually an Executive Board, whose duty it shall be, with the advice of the Association when it may be obtained, to designate fields for missionary labor, and appoint missionaries to occupy them; 3d. That the churches be requested to take collections, in money or property, quarterly or oftener, for said purpose; 4th. That all money or property contributed by the churches or private individuals for said purpose, be deposited in the hands of the Executive Board or Treasurer previous to the session of the Association; 5th. That the Executive Board, at the direction of the Association, shall apportion a reasonable compensation among the laborers appointed by said Board, yet that compensation is never to exceed the amount in the treasury at the session of the Association; 6th. That the ministers of the Association be requested to perform any labor assigned them, with the expectation of receiving only such remuneration. Besides this arrangement for domestic missions, a resolution was passed hailing with pleasure the prospect of soon having a foreign missionary in the field, and pledging prayers and support for that object.

The following resolutions were passed:—

Resolved, That we hail with joy the triumph of temperance principles at the recent election in this State.

Whereas, Slavery is a crying sin against every principle of justice and humanity, therefore, Resolved, That we deem it our duty to enter our solemn protest against it.

A resolution was passed to circulate petitions among all classes, to be presented to the next Legislature, asking for full protection in the enjoyment of our religious rights. Also to hold a Semi-Annual Meeting with the first church in Alfred, on the fourth-day of the week before the first Sabbath in January, 1847, for the purpose of taking any farther action which may be necessary towards securing civil protection, and to consider missionary operations.

The next session of the Association is to be held with the church in Independence, N. Y., on the fourth-day of the week before the last Sabbath in June, 1847.

THE CENTRAL ASSOCIATION AND THE AMERICAN AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

In the communication from "A Member of the Central Association," there is but little which requires any particular notice. The object of my article was to elicit information in regard to the arguments by which it was maintained that "the American and Foreign Bible Society is based upon principles which tacitly acknowledge the righteousness of American Slavery." Whether the reply of your correspondent is to be considered as meeting the case, I hardly know. So much of it, however, as is taken up in proving that brother Leonard as an individual received very courteous treatment from the Association, is quite irrelevant. I do not know that I called it in question, and it is therefore quite unnecessary to discuss it.

Your correspondent says:—

> "We object to the organization of the Society, and the manner of compassing its object. God has forbidden the bringing into his treasury the wages of a harlot. See Deut. 33: 18. He likewise declares that he hates robbery for a burnt-offering. See Isaiah 61: 8. Would brother Brown receive the wages of licentiousness to aid in sending the Scriptures to the heathen? I presume he would not. But slavery compels its victims to live in a state of concubinage, and strips the female of all protection to her chastity. Slavery robs its victim of his wages, and himself in the bargain, and then offers the one and the price of the other to send the Bible to the heathen of other lands, while it makes it a crime to teach a colored man to read in this."

I have no wish to defend the system of American Slavery. On the contrary, I regard it as a sin, and rather than write one single sentence in justification of it, I would recant every word of my former communication. Slavery is a sin, not because it "compels its victims to live in a state of concubinage, and strips the female of all protection to her chastity." For that may not be a necessary element of the system, but only one of its abuses. But it is a sin, because it converts a man into a thing—a being made in the image of God into a mere article of merchandize. This is its damning character.

But I do not suppose that the American and Foreign Bible Society, by receiving the contributions of slaveholders, countenances the sin of slavery. An organization for the sole purpose of circulating the Scriptures cannot erect itself into a tribunal to judge of the righteousness or unrighteousness of the private business transactions of its supporters, without making itself something more than a mere Bible Society. Such a society is necessarily different from a church. The latter has a just cognizance of the business of its members, so far as to see that they manage all according to the principles of justice and truth. Nor has it any business to tolerate in its communion those who profit by the wages of licentiousness or the gains of robbery. Upon all points of righteousness, the church is the "light of the world." From her, instruction is to go forth, and it is therefore a breach of that faith which she owes to her Lord, when she puts the "price of a whore" into her treasury, or accepts the wages of robbery for the purpose of promoting her ends. The reference of your correspondent therefore to Deut. 33: 18, Isaiah 61: 8, would be quite to the point, if it were the action of a church that was under consideration. He is quite at liberty to apply such passages to southern churches, which wink at all the iniquity of slavery, and to find them all "sinners before the Lord exceedingly." But I do protest against the application of such reasoning to the Bible Society as an outrage upon all just principles of logic.

It is perfectly right to take a decided stand in reproving the works of darkness, and to show by our actions that we will not be partakers with them. But there must be some limit to our rigidness, otherwise we must needs go out of the world. In this sin-cursed world, every thing is more or less contaminated. Your correspondent may take the money in his own pocket, and however honestly he may have earned it, yet if he trace it back through all the channels by which it has come to him, no doubt that it will be found to be in many cases the wages of unrighteousness. The gold and the silver from which it was coined, were dug from the mines by slaves under the spur of the lash. It has passed through the hands of robbers and dishonest men, until it is at length in the honest pocket of "A Member of the Central Association." Now although he would not receive it from a person who says to him, "I obtained it by robbing a man on the highway," yet he would not feel himself bound by any principle of morality to trace out the history of it, until he could satisfy himself that in every case it was honestly gotten. So in regard to the money of slaveholders. The proper tribunal to take cognizance of the moral character of the act by which it was earned, is the church. But if it is to be examined and inquired into by every organization with which church members may be connected, there would be no limits to our rigidness. If the churches have failed to do their duty in rebuking the sin of slavery, be the sin upon them. And if I, in my individual capacity, should fail to do my duty in speaking out against it, be the sin upon me. But to use the Bible Society as a medium through which to extend my reproof, is about as inconsistent as to use civil government as a medium to promote the observance of the Sabbath, to which I am sure your correspondent would himself demur.

Absence from home is my apology for not noticing the communication of "A Member of the Central Association" sooner; and a present press of other duties must excuse the brevity of this notice. Should there be any occasion for it, I will go into the matter more fully in some future communication.

THOS. B. BROWN.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

It will be remembered, that the General Conference will convene this year at Shiloh, West New Jersey, on the 9th day of September, five weeks hence. There are several reasons for desiring a full attendance at this Conference.

1st. The necessity of concerting plans of operation in reference to State Legislation to enforce the observance of Sunday. There are three States in which this question is already agitated, and measures are contemplated to obtain the repeal of Sunday laws by their respective Legislatures. Too much depends upon right action for success, to jeopardize the question by disconcerted measures. We want all our wisdom concentrated on this question, and no other time will be so favorable for this purpose as the ensuing Conference.

2d. The question of the continuance of the Conference is to be settled at the approaching session. If it is to be continued, it must be decided what shape it shall take in future. It seems to be already pretty well settled, that its continuance in its present form is not needed nor much desired. The several Associations are now doing nearly all that the Conference was established for, and to much better advantage than that ever did. They have the effect, however, to separate us in feeling and action into Eastern, Western, Central, and South-western parties, which are becoming every year less and less acquainted with each other, and less prepared to join in any concerted operation. As widely scattered as our denomination now is, it must be a very great tax to keep up both organizations—much more than we can afford to do very frequently. Under these circumstances, cannot some plan be devised which shall possess interest sufficient to bring a representation from all sections once in a while? The Eastern Association, at its last anniversary, recommended a triennial, or once-in-three-year session, instead of the yearly Conference, and that it should partake more of the nature of a missionary or benevolent operation Convention. It cannot be doubted that a good representation could be got together once in a great while—once in three or five years—while an annual one can never more be hoped for. If the present Conference is not well represented, it will be improbable that any thing can be done for which its friends could have much hope of success, and therefore at a period when concerted action is more than ever before needed, all medium of such concert might be abandoned.

3d. It is probable that the judgment of the Conference will be asked in reference to the adoption of a new Hymn Book for the use of the Seventh-day Baptist Churches in public worship. This may appear to some a matter so small as to be safely left to individual action. It is, however, a matter of very much importance, not only to the denomination but to the publisher. Such a thing ought never to be published for the use of the denomination, until the denomination have in some way examined and approved of it; and the publisher, before he makes an outlay of $1000, ought to feel assured that the book will give satisfaction when completed.

4th. It is probable that it will be an interesting session. The questions which will most surely be under consideration, if there is any attendance, are of the greatest importance, and their discussion cannot but be interesting. It is also probable that brother and sister Carpenter will then be set apart to the important and responsible work to which they have been called. It will do them good to see their brethren together before they leave. They need the consolation and assurance, in leaving their country, that they have the hearts and confidence of their brethren. Is it too much to ask that they shall have it? It is several years since we have had a General Conference, and since our south-western brethren have met us; and as for the extreme western, some of them we have never seen. Our brethren in faith and tribulation at Ephrata and Snowhill, Pa., also, we have never met. May we not hope to meet you, one and all, on this occasion? Our brethren and friends at Shiloh will be happy to see and entertain you all. It is to be hoped that our friends will not forget the approaching Conference while at the throne of grace—yea, more, that they will make it an occasion for approaching and importuning the Giver of every good thing, that he would bless all that attend with wisdom, grace and truth.

P. S.

Jewish Freemasons in Prussia.—For some time past the Jewish periodicals have had much to say about the exclusion of Jews from the masonic lodges of Prussia. The subject has at length assumed such an importance as to attract the attention of the Freemasons of England and lead to decisive action. It seems that at a quarterly meeting of the Grand Lodge in London, a correspondence was read which had taken place between the lodges of England and Prussia. This correspondence showed, that a person professing the Jewish religion, and holding a certificate of the Grand Lodge of England, could not be admitted to any of the masonic meetings in Prussia; and should an Israelite gain admittance without his religion being known, if the fact should be ascertained, he would be ordered to withdraw, and failing to do so the meeting would be dissolved instanter. Upon learning this, the Grandmaster stated that as Freemasonry was universal in its brotherhood, knowing no distinction of faith, he considered that he should not be doing his duty if he did not withdraw the representative of the Grand Lodge of England from the Grand Lodge of Prussia. A resolution was passed in accordance with this opinion. A severer rebuke could hardly be given to the unreasonable and wicked prejudice against the Jews.

Sir Moses Montefiore in Russia.—We gave notice some months ago, that Sir Moses Montefiore had undertaken a mission to Russia to intercede for the Jews in that Empire. In April last he was honored with an audience by the Emperor, who received him graciously, listened to his statements, and gave his assurance, and the assurance of his ministers, that he was most desirous for the improvement of the Israelites in the Empire, and was earnestly engaged in promoting that object. His majesty also intimated a desire that Sir Moses should visit his brethren in those towns in which they were most numerous, which he did. In many places he was received by his brethren, not only with cordiality, but with demonstrations of deep joy. He succeeded in convincing them that the measures proposed by the government were not intended to interfere with their religion, but to improve their outward condition by making them more of an agricultural people. He visited the principal schools and benevolent institutions, distributed many gifts to the poor, and did much undoubtedly to allay excitement, and promote the general interests of his persecuted brethren. Their thanks and gratitude will follow him to his home in England.

The Randolph Negroes.—The course pursued by certain citizens of Ohio toward these unfortunate creatures, is disgraceful in the extreme. It will be remembered, that the owner of these negroes, at his death, gave them their freedom, and also appropriated money for the purchase of land on which they might settle. They selected and purchased lands in Mercer county, Ohio, but were driven from them by threats of violence. Afterward an attempt was made, which at one time promised to be successful, to settle them in Shelby county; but this attempt proved unsuccessful, in consequence of the unreasonable and cruel prejudices against colored men. At the last accounts they had determined to give up the idea of settling together, and scatter about wherever they could find places. We are sometimes asked, What has the North to do with slavery? Read these facts, and then answer for yourself.

Return of the Jews to Spain.—The Les Archives Israelites says that Prince Henrique of Spain lately attended the Friday evening worship at the Synagogue of Bayonne. In reply to some remarks from the Rabbi upon the subject of rendering justice to the Jews in Spain, he said that he hoped yet to hear the same service he had witnessed that evening performed in his own country. Such a result would be a proud triumph in the country where they have suffered so much for their faith.

Grand Rabbi of France.—On the 17th of June a new Grand Rabbi of France was elected. Mr. Merchand Ennery, present rabbi of Paris, was the successful candidate. He is a conservative, and his election shows that the reform party is not yet the strongest in that country.

Revival in Wisconsin.—A letter from Eld. Stillman Coon informs us of an interesting revival some months ago at a settlement on Big-Foot Prairie, W. T., where he labors part of the time. Nine persons were baptized, and joined the church in Milton.

The Baptist Memorial and Monthly Record for August is published, containing much valuable matter in relation to the history, biography, and statistics of the Baptist denomination. Edited by R. Babcock, J. O. Choules, and J. M. Peck. Published by J. R. Bigelow, No. 9 Spruce-street, New-York.

The Christian Parlor Magazine for August contains, besides its usual variety of reading matter, a beautiful plate of a Landing Place in a small Harbor at Rhodes. Published by D. Mead, 141 Nassau-street.

The Youth's Cabinet for August contains a great amount of interesting matter for the young, together with several well-executed engravings. Rev. F. C. Woodworth, Editor; D. A. Woodworth, Publisher, 135 Nassau-st., N. Y.

General Intelligence.

DOINGS IN CONGRESS.

In our last week's report of Congressional proceedings, we stated that on Monday, July 27th, the Senate referred the Tariff Bill to the Committee on Finance for important amendments. On the following day, to the surprise of every body, the Bill was brought up again, somewhat altered, and passed, the Vice President giving the casting vote in its favor. On Wednesday, July 29, it also passed the House of Representatives, and so has become the law of the land.

In the SENATE, last week, the bill was passed to sell the mineral lands on Lake Superior, including Isle Royal and several other islands. But the principal subject under consideration was what is called the Sub-Treasury Bill. It was before the Senate several days, and was finally passed by a vote of 28 to 24.

In the HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, the Post Office and Warehousing Bills occupied considerable time, but no action was taken upon them. Several bills were passed for the relief of private individuals.

FOREIGN NEWS—TWELVE DAYS LATER.

The steamship Hibernia reached Boston on Monday morning, August 3d. Her arrival was announced in that city at half past six o'clcok, and placed on the bulletin of the Tribune in this city, at twenty minutes past six. The difference in time between the two cities is about fifteen minutes. So much for the magnetic telegraph. We give below the principal items of news.

The Hibernia brings the Oregon Treaty ratified by the British Government under the seal of the new Foreign Minister, Lord Palmerston. This important document was signed by his Lordship and Mr. McLane on the 17th of July, at the Foreign Office, and afterward conveyed to Liverpool for dispatch by the Hibernia by Mr. McLane, who, before leaving that city, would pass a few days as the visitor of William Brown, Esq., of Richmond-hill.

The season continues all that the most fastidious could desire. The crops are in splendid condition, and one of the earliest and most productive harvests on record is nearly ripe for the sickle in every part of the country.

The American Provision market as regards beef has been in a quiescent state, with drooping prices. The demand for pork has been limited, and the price has receded a trifle. The market is bare of fine cheese, which would secure a good return; inferior qualities go off heavily at lower rates.

Rumors prevail that the potato disease of last year is doing the work of destruction on the growing crops. The same reports from Ireland.

The new ministry has got fairly into work, and the business of the country is again in a state of progression.

An effort is being made to raise a splendid monument to Sir Robert Peel by means of a penny subscription throughout the British empire, as an expression of the nation's gratitude. Sir Robert is confined to his room by an accident. He lacerated his foot on a piece of China, while dressing a day or two back, and his absence from the House of Commons for some days to come will be the result.

It is stated that measures are about to be taken in Spain for securing to the Jews the same rights, privileges, and liberties, that are enjoyed by other classes of the people.

It is announced that the Emperor of Russia intends to abolish Slavery in some provinces in which it still exists. When he was last at Warsaw, he created some surprise by walking in the streets without being accompanied, and without protection. He created still more surprise, also, by entering a public coffee-house, frequented by disaffected persons, and partaking of refreshments. The persons present uncovered before him, and he returned their politeness. Every one of those persons would have been glad to have caused his death; but as he was alone and undefended, they disdained to touch him. This speaks volumes in favor of the Polish character.

The monument to Sir Walter Scott, at Edinburgh, is to be inaugurated on the 15th of August.

The Grand Duke of Tuscany has ordered the establishment of Electric Telegraphs in his States.

Fom a Parliamentary return it appears that the commission to inquire into the Potato Disease cost 95,000 dollars!

The sum paid by the Society of Friends this year, under distraint, and in obedience to ecclesiastical demands, amounts to £9,000, which they as usual protest against.

It is stated that Morrison expended, between the years 1830 and 1844, the enomous sum of £108,000 sterling in advertising his pills.

His Holiness, the Pope, is winning golden opinions from the people of Rome. On the 2nd instant he proceeded on foot through the streets, a condescension not witnessed since the days of Ganganelli.

In 1835, 1505 slaves were emancipated in the French Colonies, making the total number set free since 1030, 45,237. Slavery is detested in France as an atrocious abomination. It is in course of abolition in its colonies, and, in the course of a few years, France will be able to make the same glorious boast as England, that her flag floats over none but freemen, and that every slave placing his foot upon her soil instantly becomes free.

Numerous persons are preparing to emigrate from Sweden to North America, under the guidance of Erich Janson, a fanatic, who has set himself up as a prophet, and who has thousands of followers.

A great Congress of Temperance Societies is now holding in the Swedish capital. One hundred and thirty-two national and foreign associations are there represented; and the King, as President of the Stockholm Society, with his Queen, was present at the opening meeting.

MEXICO AND THE WAR.

The New Orleans papers of July 23d announce the arrival at Pensacola on the 20th, of the steamship Princeton, from Vera Cruz. The following intelligence brought by her may be regarded as semi-official:—

A few days before the departure of the Princeton, she, with the Cumberland and Potomac, proceeded twelve miles up the coast from Vera Cruz to take in supplies. While there the enemy concentrated a force of 300 Mexicans, who fired on our boats and wounded one man. The Princeton, lying close by, opened her fire upon the chapparel and concealed breastworks, and soon silenced the battery.

The Mexican account of the affair is, that they had three men killed and several wounded, and that we lost one officer and some men. Our account is, that the Mexicans had eight or nine wounded and three killed, and on our side only one man wounded.

Arista had issued a proclamation to the troops of the division, declaring that his and their honor was affected by the disastrous action of the 9th May, and states that he has demanded an investigation, which the Government had granted.

General Paredes had not left Mexico for the army of the North.

The proposed movement of Gen. Taylor upon Monterey, was well known in all parts of Mexico. The people of Monterey were getting much alarmed. The army formerly under Arista was at Linares, under Mejia, about 4,000 strong.

LATER.—The steamboat Fashion arrived at New Orleans on the 25th of July. She reports that there was a general movement of the troops up the Rio Grande, General Taylor remaining at Matamoros, sending the troops forward as fast as the means of transportation would permit.

The troops possessed themselves of Camargo without the slightest resistance on the part of the inhabitants, Carrabajal being on the opposite side of the river St. Juan at the time.

General Taylor had recently received advices by scouts that there are only about 300 Mexican soldiers at Monterey, and the general impression was that there would be no resistance offered to the U. S. troops this side of that place.

DREADEUL DISASTER—STEAMER SUNK ON THE ST. LAWRENCE.—The following extracts from a letter written by Rev. John S. C. Abbott to the editor of the N. Y. Tribune, gives a graphic picture of this awful calamity:—

"Last Wednesday evening, July 29th, we left Quebec at 7 o'clock, in the steamboat Quebec, for Montreal. At 12 o'clock at night, as we were approaching the wharf at Three Rivers, the Rowland Hill, a steamer coming down from Montreal, and racing most furiously with another boat, was brought into collision with the Quebec. I was aroused from a sound sleep, in my state-room, by the crash of the two boats, and, looking out of the window, saw the Rowland Hill, with her wheel-house and wheel entirely carried away, lying nearly upon her side, and drifting on the current by us. The violence of the collision may be inferred from the fact that a solid iron shaft, eighteen inches in diameter, was broken off, and the fragment of the shaft, with the wheel attached, was left upon the bow of our boat. The water was covered with fragments of the wreck, and here and there could be seen struggling in the stream, the heads and arms of those who, by the shock, had been thrown from the boat, or in their terror had leaped overboard. The air was filled with confused outcries in French and English; and most appalling shrieks were uttered by those who were striving to extricate themselves from the sinking boat." * * * *

After some necessary delay, the Quebec went to the relief of the Rowland Hill, and the letter continues:—

"We found her lying upon her side, sunk in about ten feet of water, upon a bar upon which she had providentially drifted. Had she sunk a few moments sooner or a few moments later, she would have gone down in ten fathoms water and few could have been saved. The part out of the water was covered with the passengers and crew. There were, in addition to many cabin passengers, a large number of French Canadians and some Indian families, and as immense volumes of smoke began to roll from the wreck, and the terrible cry of 'fire' rang through the air, there ensued a scene of terror and of uproar which is indescribable and unimaginable. 'For the love of God, throw us some axes;' 'come with your buckets;' 'we are all on fire,' were exclamations which were heard rising above the clamor and the vociferations of the multitude of Canadians. * * *

"To our infinite relief we soon saw the fire subdued. The passengers were in the meantime removed from the wreck. Here was a mother, frantic in search of her children, from whom she was separated. Here was a husband, rushing in every direction to find his wife. Here was a sister, absolutely insane, and with a maniacal stare and a whisper, inquiring for her brother, and whom no one dared to inform, that when last seen he was struggling with the waves. Here was a sailor with an infant in his arms, searching for its mother. Here a beautiful little girl, richly dressed, about five years of age, crying out, 'Mamma! mamma! where is my mamma?' And here comes a grey-haired old gentleman with the blood streaming down his cheeks from a gash in his head. Such were some of the pictures in this scene of confusion.

"The steamboat Lord Sydenham, with which the Rowland Hill was racing, soon came along side, and assisted in the rescue. We remained by the wreck until morning; and then went on our way to Montreal, taking with us many of those who had been saved. The Lord Sydenham took others to Quebec, and many remained at the village called Three Rivers. Two were crushed to death by the collision, and it is supposed that many were drowned, but it is not known how many. Five only were rescued by the boats from the water. Most of the baggage was saved, though several lost every thing, escaping only with their night dresses."

The ship Gentoo was wrecked on the 29th of April near Capetown. She had on board twenty-five persons, all of whom perished, except the Captain and five men.

SUMMARY.

There is a general expression among our Michigan exchanges of the increase of the wheat crop over 1845, large as it was. Last year it was placed by many competent judges at 8,000,000 bushels, and this season they claim a farther increase of 20 per cent. or ten millions bushels —indeed, some figure up even higher than this.

The son of a gentleman whose name occupies a conspicuous place in the earlier history of the United States, made a bet that he would for five years eat nothing but gingerbread and drink nothing but water from a pump in Barclay-st. The time expired a few months ago, and he won his bet.

The citizens of New London, Ct. have seriously set about the construction of a railroad from that place to Norwich, to connect with the Norwich and Worcester Railroad at Norwich, and passing down the west bank of the Thames. The distance is but 12 miles, and the cost of construction something like three hundred thousand dollars.

The family of Michael Haney, consisting of four persons, residing in Rochester, were poisoned Wednesday morning by eating henbane, boiled as greens, for their breakfast. An emetic was immediately administered, profuse vomiting induced, with a prospect that all will recover, although the symptoms at first were very unfavorable.

A bill is now pending in the Legislature of Maine, providing that after the 1st of December next, the seat of Government shall be removed from Augusta to Portland, provided the City of Portland shall furnish the State with public buildings more suitable than the present State House.

Mr. John Pothecary, of Northampton, an Englishman, aged about 48, committed suicide on the 24th ult. by hanging. He was addicted to intemperance, and was frequently melancholy after a debauch. The night before his death he was highly excited with liquor.

The income of the Maine State prison was last year $2522 60 more than the expenses, exclusive of the salaries of the officers, which amounts to nearly $6,000.

Laziness grows on people; it begins in cobwebs, and ends in iron chains. The more business a man has, the more he is able to accomplish; for he learns to economize his time.

The late advices from England, show an accumulation of coin in the Bank, amounting to eighty millions of dollars, and this increase has been steadily gaining ground.

Govenor Yell of Arkansas, has enrolled himself as a volunteer in Capt. Borland's company of mounted men, raised in that State.

The Sheriff has sold the great cotton press at New Orleans, together with the buildings, machinery, &c. which cost a million, for $270,000.

The Steamboats between Montreal and Quebec have reduced their rates of fare. They charge but one dollar for the cabin, including meals. Much cheaper than in the States.

It is stated that flour was selling at St. Louis, two weeks ago, at two dollars sixty-two and a half cents a barrel. We never knew the article to be so low.

The collections in this City for the relief of the sufferers by the great fire at Nantucket, amount to about $8000, and will be increased probably to $9000 or $10,000.

The New Orleans Picayune, commenting on the views of its correspondents relative to the war, says: "We do not concur with the opinion that the fighting is done. The news from Mexico leads us to a different conclusion. The Mexican Departments had in a measure returned to their allegiance, and Paredes was fast making friends in all directions. The Government party were growing stronger, and the people were laying aside their party feelings and combining in favor of active and stern resistance to the United States."

Col. Stevenson's Regiment went to Govenor's Island Saturday morning, preparatory to embarking for California. They are at once to be mustered into the United States service, and will leave for California about the 14th of August. Their equipments are now nearly completed. They will be provided with Indiarubber knapsacks and haversacks, and their whole uniform will be plain, neat and serviceable. They will probably go to Rio, there take in water and proceed to Valparaiso and thence to California. The voyage will probably occupy five or six months. Another regiment, as rumored, is to be raised for California, to leave the United States in November.

The original papers found on the person of Major Andre, in the hand-writing of Arnold, the passports of John Anderson and his boatmen, plan of forts at West-Point, their armament, and number of troops, &c. may be seen at 186 Fulton-st. They belong to the De Witt Clinton family. They have been carefully preserved, and are but little worn. Each word is as distinct as when first traced by the traitor.

By a recent law of New Hampshire, Bank stockholders are liable in their individual capacity for the debts of the Bank, to the amount of their stock. This individual liability does not extend to other corporations.

Several families at Albany were poisoned a day or two since, by eating of a poisoned cheese. Although most of them suffered severely, they were all, by the last accounts, considered out of danger.

George, a Euchee Indian, convicted of the murder of Mr. Reynolds near fort Gibson, is to be hung at Little Rock (Ark.) on the 14th of September.

The New York Tribune says, "We are favored by A. R. Lawrence, Esq. with some specimens of Potato Stalks from his farm on Long Island where the potato blight is very severe this season. Opening the diseased stalks, a worm nearly an inch long is found in the center of each, of which he has completely destroyed the vitality, causing the entire plant to sicken and die; whereupon the Tubers or Potatoes, arrested while yet immature, decay and perish. Such is the nature of the Potato Disease, as any one may verify for himself. We have now to ascertain how and whence the worm is propagated, and how he may best be destroyed. His time is short."

A law has passed the New Hampshire Legislature intended to secure to married women their rights in property, real and personal, which they hold in their own right; protecting them from the debts of their husbands. The property of the wife is held liable for her own debts contracted before or after marriage. It also grants to females the right of disposing of their own property.

Mr. Haggerston, who obtained a few years ago, a premium from the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, for the discovery of a mode of destroying the rose-slug, says that a weak solution of whale oil-soap, in the proportion of two pounds of soap to about fifteen gallons of water, or weaker, will check and entirely destroy the mildew on the gooseberry, peach, grape vine, &c.

The Eufaula (Ala.) Shield gives a horrid account of the willful starvation of four children in Macon county, by a brutal step-mother. The youngest was found lying on the floor in a corner of the room, in a dying condition—so completely emaciated that it was but a skeleton, its eye-balls having left their sockets—one lying on its cheek, and the other on the floor. Another has died since being removed, and the restoration of either of the other two is extremely doubtful. It is stated that the children of the fiendish mother were fat and hearty—proving that the family was not destitute of provisions.

A large portion of the wood carving for the New House of Parliament, is effected by machinery. As many as half a dozen figures, in alto relief, may be carved with the nicest exactitude, at the same time. Stone capitals, of a complicated description and entanglement of foliage, are likewise cut with rapidity and precision.

The late Pope Gregory XVI. left 400,000 francs in ready money, which is to be increased by the sale of all the valuable gifts made to him during his pontificate by the Kings and Princes of Europe. From the sum total the legacies made to pious institutions will be first paid, and the remainder is left to the parents of the Pope, on condition that they do not come to live at Rome. The Pope desires to be buried on Mount Celien in the Church of St. Gregory.

The number of deaths in the city during the week ending the 22d ult. reported at the Inspector's Office, is four hundred and twenty-five, or considerable over one to every thousand of the entire population. Of these thirty-one were caused by apoplexy, twenty-one by coup de soleil, and fifty two by cholera infantum. Of the whole number, one hundred and sixty-nine were under one year, and two were upwards of ninety years.

The Commercial Advertiser announces the receipt of the Oregon Spectator, a new semi-monthly paper, of Feb. 5th, 19th, and March 5th. This is the first paper ever published west of the Rocky Mountains. The Commercial says it is made up neatly, is of the medium size, and will bear comparison with any journal printed in the United States. It contains a goodly number of advertisements.

Mr. Oliver Lee of Buffalo died suddenly on Tuesday. Mr. Lee has, for many years, been favorably known as an energetic and successful man of business in Western New York. He was the President of the Attica and Buffalo Railroad Company, and President and manager of "Oliver Lee & Co.'s Bank of Buffalo."

The Clerk of Cayuga County says, the amount of county checks issued to judges, jury, constables, and crier, for their services at the special term of the Court of Oyer and Terminer, holden for the trial of Wyatt and Freeman in that county, was $3,669,53, to which sum is to be added the fees of the Sheriff and County Clerk—together with constable fees for the service of subpœnas, &c. which will probably swell the amount to about $4,000.

The Canadians have just adopted a new system of Common School Education, strongly resembling that of the State of New York. The country is to be divided into districts, and the system of superintendance with annual reports is adopted throughout. A Board of Education has been established at the seat of government, somewhat resembling our Regents of the University.

It is mentioned as a remarkable coincidence, that one vote carried the Tariff of 1824; one vote the Tariff of 1828; one vote in each House carried the Tariff of 1842; and by one vote in the Senate the Tariff of 1846 has become a law.

MY EARLY HOME.

My home, my home, my early home!
  I long once more to see
Its pleasant scenes, its childhood haunts,
  That yet are dear to me;
The shady grove, and meadows green,
  The glen, the forest hill,
And every dear familiar spot,
  Are on my memory still.

The rose-bush by the garden hedge,
  Oft watched with anxious care,
For the first opening buds of spring,
  To twine around my hair;
The music of the crystal stream,
  Still sounding in my ear,
Where I have wandered with the friends
  Remembrance yet holds dear.

And oft I hear the joyous laugh
  Come floating back to me,
Of merry mates, in life's young morn,
  O'er memory's distant sea.
Oh, I do love to pause and think
  Of other years gone by—
Of happier days, and dearer friends,
  Though not without a sigh.

HELP THE POOR TO HELP THEMSELVES:

Fifty Cents Better than a Dollar.

Some ten years ago, a merchant in New York came home on Saturday evening to his family. He had worked his way up from indigence to a competency, and sat after supper thinking of the way in which a good Providence had led and prospered him. "Here I am with my healthy and happy family; our present wants are all supplied, and my increasing business promises a future abundance. How many who started in life with me are either in the grave, or worse off than I am. What reason for gratitude!"

Thus his mind was running, but now he thought aloud: "My dear, I believe I'll go and see that family in H—— street. I hear they are very poor. May be, they are suffering." He put on his hat, and a quick step soon brought him to the humble dwelling of a Welch family, consisting of a father and mother, with six or seven children. It was a basement. As he descended the steps, he listened, and heard them singing their evening song. "No distress here," thought he; "but I'll go in." He found the tenement neat as wax, and every face brightened up even to see a stranger. He hoped he had not spoiled their song, and was glad to find them happy.

"Yes," replied the father, "we ought to be happy, but—" and the tears choked his utterance—"but I could get no work this week. O, if I could get anything to do, these poor babes should not go to bed without their suppers."

"But have you nothing to eat?"

"Not a mouthful in the house, sir; but we couldn't do without our evening song."

"Can't get any work!"

"We are all willing, and these larger ones are able to do a little, and we had rather live on fifty cents a week earned, than have a dollar in charity."

By this time the merchant's eyes moistened. He went home quicker than he came, and soon returned with a well-filled basket. Shortly he found a place for the father in a mechanic's shop, where he did well for about twelve months, when he died. He also procured employment for the mother and the oldest daughters in making shot-bags. The compensation was small; but so many hands engaged brought not only their daily bread, and a good appetite, but self-respect, industrious habits, and a conscious independence. Moreover, in this way the girls were prepared essentially to aid their mother in the support of the family after the death of their father. The eldest son for a while became wayward, but the good merchant looked after him, found him employment, and he is now an excellent man.

The daughters,—one of them is the wife of a worthy mechanic in Pennsylvania; another is the wife of a young minister, who is just commencing the work of preaching the Gospel to his countrymen in the Welch language; another with her needle is earning an average of seventy-five cents a day through the year, for the support of her mother and the younger children at school; while all the members of this interesting family are worthy members of the Welch church.

Thus was a deserving family saved from suffering and despair; and perhaps some of them from a life of infamy and ruin. Thus were they made useful members of society, and ornaments in a Christian church.

That merchant is daily receiving compound interest on all the capital he invested in this good work. Never will he forget that Saturday evening visit and song, and never is he weary of telling how to encourage the poor to help themselves. [Youth's Cabinet.

THE SIMOON OF THE DESERT.

From Eatala Sayegher's Travels among the Arabs.

We took the road to Heggies, resting every night with one of the tribes which overspread the desert. The fifth day, after passing the night under the tent of El Henadi, we rose with the sun, and went to saddle our dromedaries, but found them, to our great amazement, with their heads plunged deeply into the sand, from which it was impossible to disengage them. Calling to our aid the Bedouins of the tribe, they informed us that the circumstance presaged the simoon, which would not long defer its devastating course, and that we could not proceed without facing certain death. Providence has endowed the camel with an instinctive presentment for its preservation. It is sensible, two or three hours beforehand, of the approach of this terrific scourge of the desert, and turns its face away from the wind, buries itself in the sand, and neither force nor want can move it from its position, neither to eat nor to drink, while the tempest lasts. Learning the danger which threatened us, we shared the general terror, and hastened to adopt all the precautions enjoined upon us. Horses must not only be placed under shelter, but have their ears stopped: they would otherwise be suffocated by the whirlwinds of fine little sand which the wind sweeps furiously before it. Men assemble under their tents, stopping up every crevice with extreme caution, and having provided themselves with whatever is placed within their reach, throw themselves upon the ground, covering their faces with a mantle, and stir no more till the hurricane is passed. That morning it was tumult in the camp; every one endeavoring to provide for the safety of his beast, and then precipitately retiring under the protection of his tent.

We had scarcely time to secure our beautiful Nedgde mares before the storm began. Furious gusts of wind preceded the clouds of red burning sand, whirling around with fierce impetuosity, and overwhelming or burying under their drifting mountains whatever they encountered. If any part of the body is by accident exposed to its touch, the flesh swells as if a hot pan had passed over it. The water intended to refresh us with its coolness was boiling, and the temperature of the tent exceeded that of a Turkish bath. The tempest lasted ten hours in its greatest fury, and then gradually abated for the following six; another hour, and we must have suffocated. When, at length, we ventured to issue form our tents, a dreadful spectacle awaited us; five children, two women, and a man, lay extended on the still burning sand, and several Bedouins had their faces blackened, as if by action of an ardent furnace. When any one is struck on the head by the simoon, the blood flows in torrents from his mouth and nostrils, his face swells and turns black, and he soon dies of suffocation. In 1813, a caravan of two thousand persons was buried in the sand, between Muscat and Aleppo, and only twenty escaped.

EASTER AT CONSTANTINOPLE.

A correspondent of the London Daily News, concludes a description of the Easter services, in a church at Constantinople, with the following singular picture:

"The throng was great; yet there was room to move about. I was struck by the picturesque confusion which prevailed among the crowd, the variety of costumes, and the expressions of the wearers. I saw nothing in their deportment which reminded me that I was in a church, except the reverent bearing of the poorer and simpler sort, the rustic pilgrims who had poured from their wild villages, to be present at the solemnities. The city people talked about in groups, swaggered up and down, climbed up into pulpits, crowded the pulpit stairs, sat swinging their legs, sheathed in embroidered greaves in the window-benches, lounged, and stared, and fluttered their fusunels, twirled their mustachios, and fired their pistols. I was prepared for this singular custom; but I cannot describe the strange effect which these profane reports had in the midst of all those sacred and solemn symbols of devotion, leaving behind them a heathenish smell of gunpowder. Now a fire-arm would crack off at your ear, now at a distant corner of the church. An order had been issued to prohibit this strange custom. However indecent the practice appears to our notions, it is extremely ancient, perhaps coeval with the use of gunpowder among the Greeks. They paid accordingly but little attention to the prohibition. A kavass, however, had introduced himself into the church in disguise, and marked with a piece of chalk the jackets of all he found discharging, or armed with pistols. This unfortunate being was detected in making his chalk signs. A dreadful row instantly ensued. He was beaten on the head with pistols, and after getting half killed was kicked out of the church. The doors were closed, and no one was permitted to enter who did not answer to the salutation from within, 'Christ is risen.' Neither, indeed, was any force used on the part of the body of kavashes placed outside; but, at the end of the ceremony, they made prisoners of the ringleaders of the tumult, when they came forth, without any difficulty, and led them off to prison, taking care to pay them off on the way for their rough treatment of the spy."

FACTS RESPECTING THE POTATO ROT.—It is stated in a New York paper, that Mr. T. C. Peters, lost, by rot, something like 1,000 bushels potatoes, the last season; and he observed the important fact, that a field of potatoes, whose stems and leaves were evidently affected with the blight, had its tubers preserved from all injury by the action of the frost that killed the potato tops dead. The crop grew on a low piece of ground, subject to frost, and most of the potatoes rotted in the hill. His early potatoes all escaped the malady.

Another fact—Mr. Pearce, of Hamburg, Erie Co., N. Y., who is an excellent and observing farmer, saw that his potato vines were affected, and pulled several hills to examine the roots. They were sound, and left separated from the stems or tops. By this separation, three hills escaped the rot, while the potatoes in all the adjoining hills were rotten at the time of harvest.

These facts strengthen the opinion that the disease commences in the tops, and descends from thence to the roots; and, also, that when the disease is apprehended, mowing off tops may prevent its spread to the roots.

* * *

KEEPING POTATOES SOUND.—We have had occasion to commend the practice of keeping potatoes through the winter in heaps, out of doors, by using abundance of straw and but a moderate quantity of earth as a covering. We have repeatedly known heaps of 60 or 70 bushels covered with a compact layer of straw one foot thick, and only a few inches of earth outside, to endure winter and early spring without the loss of a peck. In a late experiment of the writer, a heap thus covered wintered through with the loss of not half a peck, although a large portion of the same crop which was removed to the cellar was lost by the rot, and at the same time that many neighbors lost three-quarters of their potatoes buried in the usual way, that is with only a few inches of straw under a foot of earth. It will be perceived at a glance that the mode here proposed secures in an eminent degree, sufficient protection from frost, dryness, and ventilation. All potatoes in heaps, when buried early in autumn, should be kept constantly well ventilated by a hole and wisp of straw at the top. The mass of rotten potatoes, so usually attributed to freezing, is more frequently the result of foul, confined air rising to the top.

HEAVES IN HORSES.—A correspondent of the Cultivator, says, after trying various modes, he has found the following the best treatment for horses having the heaves, viz:—To feed no hay, but plenty of bright, whole (or uncut) straw, with all the oats they would eat, (the latter soaked in cold water three or four hours,) with a pint of oil meal [flax seed] daily. On this feed they have worked well, and were troubled but little with the disease.

CURE FOR SCALDS.—Augustus Wattles, of Ohio, publishes an account in the Regenerator, of a wonderful cure performed by cold water, which ought to be generally known for the benefit of the suffering. Mr. McTurnham, a tanner, his two sons, and an apprentice, were severely scalded in December, 1845, by the bursting of steam works in a tannery, near Piqua, Ohio. Mr. M'T. stood in such a position as to take the strongest current of heated water and steam, and this is the only evidence which he had that he was much scalded. He immediately leaped into a pool of water near by, slightly frozen over, and called upon the boys to follow. His oldest son stepped in half way up to his knees, then turned, and went into the house—the youngest, who was only scalded on his legs, followed the direction of his father, and the apprentice did not go into the water at all. The result was, that the father, after staying in the water a short time, came out, and feeling the pain of the burn, returned to the pool, remaining in the water in all about five minutes. The skin pealed off a little from his arms and breast, but he experienced no soreness of any consequence, and was not hindered at all from his work. The oldest son, who was doctored in the usual manner, was not able to go to work again for six months, but so far as he went into the water, there was no mark of the scald upon him. The youngest son, who followed the example of his father, was free from any mark of the accident, except a small sore upon one of his heels. The apprentice, who did not go into the water, was disabled for four months.

NAPOLEON'S HEART.—After the death of Napoleon, his heart was taken out by his English physician, to be embalmed. This physician laid the heart in a silver dish, and poured cold water over it. He then placed a burning wax taper on each side of the dish, which was in the middle of a table, and went to bed in the same room; but having, of course, become excited by his singular employment, he had no sound sleep. While lying in a half dreaming state, he was completely aroused by a splashing in the silver dish. A shudder passed over him—he knew not what to think of the singular occurrence, and remained perfectly still; but in a moment more he heard a fall, and starting up, discovered the cause of his alarm or surprise. A monstrous rat had drawn the heart from the dish to the floor, and when the doctor reached the spot, he was in the very act of dragging it to his hole. In another moment that heart, for which half the globe was too narrow, would have become the supper of a common rat.

* * *

CROTON WATER.—This water is now taken and paid for by about 13,000 families and establishments in the city of New York, for which $164,532 was paid in the year ending in May, being an increase upon the previous year of $44,949. During the past year four miles of pipes have been laid down, making the enormous total of one hundred and sixty-three miles of pipe now in use in this city.

The sum of money expended by the city of New York in the construction of her Water Works was $12,000,000; but immense as the amount is, her enterprising and far-seeing citizens will never have cause to regret it. A more judicious expenditure could not have been made. In a few years the Works, instead of being a tax on the people, will yield an income more than sufficient to pay the interest on the debt incurred by this gigantic and enlightened undertaking.

MISSIONARIES OVER-WORKED.—The Rev. Mr. Johnston, Church missionary in Ceylon, after mentioning several of the American missionaries whose health was feeble, adds:—"I will only say that I believe the cause of all to be an overpressure of duties. The mind is not only continually at work, but it is actually racked while at work. The multitude of engagements, the depressing effects of climate, conviction of multitudes daily perishing, and neither strength nor time to do any thing for their rescue, added to the difficulty of selecting the most pressing and important occupations from a multitude equally pressing and important, are cares enough to weigh down the spirit and injure the health of the most robust."

VARIETY.

It is said that the first time the Declaration of Independence was publicly read in Massachusetts, was in the town of Worcester. The express, on his way to Boston, furnished Isaac Thomas, Esq., with a copy for publication in the Massachusetts Spy, of which paper he was the publisher. The news of its reception soon spread throughout the town, and a large concourse of people collected, all anxious to hear so extraordinary a document. To gratify their curiosity, Mr. Thomas ascended the portico of the South meeting-house—then the only one in town—and read it to those who had assembled. More than half a century had passed away, and the country had increased in wealth, population, and power, beyond all precedent. Mr. Thomas joined in the celebration of independence, in the same edifice from which he read the Declaration in 1776!

The Concord Patriot gives a letter from a friend traveling abroad, who says, speaking of Rouen, France, "There is a baker's boy coming along the street with a basket of bread and a large bundle of notched sticks on his shoulder. He rings at the door of a regular customer. Stop a moment and see how he keeps his account. The servant girl brings a notched stick with her. The boy has searched his bundle till he has found one which belongs to that house. He hands out a loaf, puts the sticks both together, and cuts a notch across with his knife. Here is a very simple mode of book-keeping by double entry."

Mr. Benjamin F. Butler, late Attorney General of the United States, has computed that the loss to the United States from the use of intoxicating drinks, is one hundred and fifty millions of dollars annually; portion of the State of New York, eighteen millions. Mr. Everett, late minister to Great Britain, computes that the use of alcoholic beverages has cost the United States, directly, in ten years, $1,200,000,000; has burned or otherwise destroyed $5,000,000 more of property; has destroyed 300,000 lives; sent 150,000 person to our prisons, and 100,000 children to the poor-house; has caused 1,500 murders; 2,000 suicides; and has bequeathed to the country one million of orphan children.

Grand Cairo has a population of 300,000 or 400,000, and there is but one book-store in the whole city. The Arabs have a great aversion to printed books, and prefer to give $100 for a manuscript copy of the Koran, rather than use a printed one which might be purchased for $2. The bookseller was commanded by goverment to keep his store open, but regarded it rather as a losing concern.

Among the articles for which the Clerk of the House of Representatives has issued proposals, to supply the members of that honorable body at next session, are "800 English pen knives, four blades, best pearl, or stag or buck handles," and 240 with two blades, of the same quality—making 1,040 pen knives, for the use of 228 gentlemen, for the period of three months—four apiece, and a small surplus.

The difference in time between Buffalo and Albany is about fifteen minutes. That is, the sun rises at Albany fifteen minutes before it rises at Buffalo, and events transpiring in Albany at ten o'clock in the morning are announced in Buffalo, by means of Morse's Telegraph, at a quarter before ten! The distance is 325 miles. This is annihilating both space and time.

If Prince Albert were drunk, he would be called elated; if Lord Tristam were, he would be called elevated; if Mr. Plum, the rich merchant, were drunk, he would be called inebriated; if a respectable tradesman were drunk, he would be called intoxicated; but if a workman be in liquor, it would be said that the nasty beast was as drunk as a hog.

"If a civil word or two will render a man happy," said a French king, "he must be a wretch indeed who will not give them to him. Such a disposition is like lighting another man's candle by one's own, which loses none of its brilliancy by what the other gains." If all mankind possessed this feeling, how much happier would the world be than it now is.

Board of Instruction.

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

MORAL AND POSITIVE.

Religious institutions are commonly distinguished as being either moral or positive. Perhaps there is not a distinction more generally received in the schools of dogmatic theology, than the one just named. "It has been made by the ablest writers, of various denominations, and must be made if we would understand the Scriptures;" so says Andrew Fuller. But we protest there is not a more arbitrary distinction made in all the scholastic divinity we have read, nor one which has been more fruitful of confusion and error in the Christian world. So far as we know its history, it was an invention of the schoolmen of the middle ages, and was employed by such men as Bonaventure, Thomas Aquinas, and Duns Scotus, to justify the papal changes of the times and laws which God ordained, for such as were suited to their notions of things. Protestant divines have used it, from the times of the Reformation to the present, to account for the changes which God is supposed to have made in the laws of former and present dispensations of his will. Thus Mr. Andrew Fuller says, "Without it, we should confound the eternal standard of right and wrong given to Israel at Sinai, (the sum of which is love to God and our neighbor,) with the body of carnal ordinances, imposed on them until the time of reformation. We should also confound those precepts and examples of the New Testament which arise from the relation we stand in to God and to one another, with positive institutions which arise merely from the sovereign will of the Lawgiver, and could never have been known had he not expressly enjoined them." From our youth up we have been taught to receive this as a just and necessary distinction, and have never known it disputed. It appears to us now as one of the most unfounded and mischievous subtleties of scholastic divinity that retains a standing in the usages of modern schools.

That this distinction is unfounded, may be shown from the etymological and conventional meanings of the words. Etymologically, the word moral signifies that consideration by which we determine the manners or conduct of mankind to be right, good, or virtuous. Conventionally, when applied to the law of God, it means nearly the same as the word holy. "The moral law" and "the holy law of God," are expressions used interchangeably by the most acute logicians. The theological use of the word, is to designate those duties the reasons of which we are supposed to be able to see antecedent to the divine command, and which are supposed to arise from the nature of the case. The word positive, etymologically signifies absolute, certain, known; conventionally and theologically, it is applied to a class of duties, the reasons of which it is supposed we cannot discern without direct revelation, and which we observe merely because a supreme power has enjoined them.

Allowing the correctness of these definitions—(and we have taken them nearly verbatim from some of the best writers)—and we affirm that there is not a precept of all the divine institutions but is both moral and positive—the theological or scholastic use of the word moral excepted. Every precept of Jehovah with which we are acquainted, was designed to affect the manners or conduct of mankind, and was given to determine what in their manners would be right, good, virtuous. One expression of sacred Scripture, from many of a like character, may show that ALL God's commandments are holy in themselves. It is Psalm 119: 128—"I esteem all thy precepts concerning all things to be right;" i. e. right in themselves. Another may suffice to show that they are all positive in the etymological sense of the word—"All thy commandments are truth. Concerning thy testimonies, I have known of old that THOU hast established them forever." Nothing can be spoken of as more absolute and certain than is the positive character of all God's laws by the sacred writers. As to the conventional use of the word positive by theological writers, it is as true of all God's laws as it is of that particular class to which the term is applied. Even an apostle said of the tenth commandment of the decalogue, "I had not known lust, except the law had said, Thou shall not covet." Again he affirms that "by the law is the knowledge of sin." The universal practice of mankind while destitute of the knowledge of divine law, is likewise proof that without the law there is no knowledge of sin in those things which the law pronounces to be sin. In the fifth and sixth chapters of his "Gospel its own Witness," Andrew Fuller has shown that so far are mankind who have not the light of revelation, from seeing that the precepts of the decalogue are right in themselves, that violations of every precept of it were legalized in the most polished states of Greece and Rome. The same is true of pagan nations at the present day; and we have been assured by those who have been among them, that our laws which enforce the morality of the seventh commandment appear to them exceedingly arbitrary and unnatural. It is on this great and awful fact that other writers have based their strongest arguments for the necessity of divine revelation.

If it should be alledged, that although fallen man does not discover that they are originally right in themselves without the aid of revelation, yet when we become acquainted with them we can discover that they are so; we reply, that the same is true of every positive law which God has given. There never was one given without a moral, a holy design. For example, the Lord's Supper is called a positive institution. We should not have known that it was our duty to celebrate the death of Christ in that way, had we not been instructed to do so by the Saviour. Yet every Christian can see that there is a holy design in the institution and celebration of that ordinance. It is alledged, we know, that if Christ had not died in the manner he did, the reasons for its institution would never have existed. Very true; and so if the constitution of man had been of some other nature, the reasons for each of the precepts of the decalogue would never have existed. Indeed, there are discernible in revelation as wise and holy reasons for each positive institution of Jehovah as for the moral laws. But Mr. Fuller says of positive institutions, "Had it pleased God, he might in various instances have enjoined the opposites." But of the moral laws he says, "It were inconsistent with the perfections of God not to have required us to love him and one another, or to have allowed the contrary." The Pharisees, however, said that God did allow them to "hate their enemies." But he who spoke as never any other man spoke, said that the law required us to love even our enemies; and we can see, that if it were inconsistent with the perfections of God to have allowed the contrary, it must have been because of the natural relation of man to man, which God himself made. And so of all the positive institutions which he has given; God could not have enjoined the opposites in the same relations, and to answer the same ends. Take circumcision, for example. Circumcision was a cutting off a certain piece of flesh. The opposite would have been to put a piece on. Could it have been done? Or take the Lord's Supper, and the opposite of breaking and distributing bread would be to gather pieces of bread and make them into one. Would that have been a showing forth of the Lord's death—of his body broken for us?

The distinction of the commandments of God into moral and positive is altogether a fictitious one, and has no foundation in the word of God. Our first parents brought death, and all their woes and ours, by eating of the forbidden tree, which they could not have known to be wrong if it had not been divinely prohibited; for Eve saw "that the tree was good for food, and that it was pleasant to the eyes, and a tree to be desired to make one wise." Uzzah was smitten with death for taking hold of the sacred ark to keep it from falling. The only way he could have known it to be wrong to do so, was by knowing that he was not a Levite, to whom alone the care of the ark pertained by divine appointment. In the Mosaic code, offences against the ceremonial law were punishable with death as certainly and peremptorily as offences against the decalogue. For example, the stranger, or one not of the tribe of Levi, who should interfere with the erection of the tabernacle, was punishable with death as the blasphemer of Jehovah's name or the murderer of his neighbor. The distinction being unfounded in nature and fact, ought to be abandoned. It is one of the doctrines of men invented and perpetuated to justify departures from God's law. S. D.

PRIVATE PRAYER.

No Christian can live without prayer. It is the breath of the new-born soul, and he seeks opportunity for its exercise. The Saviour has given us a beautiful example, by often retiring to some secret place to commune with his Father. Patriarchs and Prophets pursued the same course. Isaac went out at eventide to meditate and pray. Jacob wrestled with the angel all night, and to the dawning of the day. The men most eminent for piety have been exemplary for devotion in the closet. Private devotion tends to elevate, sanctify, and comfort. Forsake the closet, that sacred spot on earthly ground, and the man becomes groveling, corrupt, and wretched. Where does declension begin, but at the point where the closet is neglected? How did that young female professor lose her virtue?—that young man his honesty or sobriety?—that member of a Christian church his love for the prayer circle, the sanctuary of God, the communion service, and all the active duties of religion? How else than by remissness in private exercises? If we intend to maintain a Christian life, it can only be effected by drawing supplies from the fountain of life. A person must be a poor dwindling professor, who does not go to God for daily supplies. It is painful to hear how professors oppose the regular observance of this interesting duty. Some cannot find time—others, opportunity. Some think regularity tends to formality. There are individuals who say that they can maintain a spirit of prayer without retirement. Some are ashamed that others should know, or even think, that they retire to pray. Let the mind be imbued with the love of Christ, and the duty of prayer becomes a privilege. Indeed, all excuses for its neglect vanish, and the returning season for its exercise will be hailed with delight. These know something of true happiness. They ascend the ladder let down from heaven, commune with the glorified, and feel the warm beamings of the divine countenance. They feel the golden chain in their hand, which is fastened to the divine throne.

> "Prayer is the Christian's vital breath
> The Christian's native air,
> His watchword at the gate of death,
> He enters heaven with prayer."

FOURIERISM, ETC.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

I cut the following from the New York Tribune, and ask for it a place in your paper, in justice to the visionary but very badly-treated scheme of FOURIER for improving the social condition of man, and in justice to the motives of those who assume the business of its advocacy. The scheme itself may be altogether impracticable, but the motives there set forth are worthy of all commendation.

It is common to stigmatize "Fourierism," "Odd-Fellowship," and their kindred, as measures originating in the perverted desires of men, and as assuming an attitude hostile to Christianity. Not so do I view them; but rather, as the manifestations of that impulse towards equality which now moves the spirit of man the world over. And if their relation to Christianity is antagonistic, may it not be because the church, in a degenerate state, does not secure to man that social elevation to which he is entitled? Just look this matter in the face for a moment. Think you that universal love and unity will be promoted, where the distinctions of wealth or birth are allowed to fix their seals upon brothers of the same church?—where one may, in perfect conformity to the usage of the world, add to his useless store from the ill-paid toil of a brother?—and where a man may give his $25 for a choice of seats in the house of God, while a poor sister in yonder corner is compelled, from her scanty support and utter destitution of sympathy, to apply to your "Poor Associations" for relief? How long would it take such a church as this, to convince a degenerate world of the adaptation of Christianity to its needs?

Perhaps I have unjustly placed certain evils in the relation of "cause and effect;" but if you will look about, my word for it, you will discover that such churches and odd-fellows' lodges are almost invariably neighbors.

It seems to me that the doctrines of Christianity, as exemplified in the primitive church, are all-sufficient to secure to man the full enjoyment of his rights, and that no association of unsanctified hearts ever will effect that object. If this be true, how does it become Christians to labor to bring the church back to that simple, blessed condition, in which there will be no distinctions of person, no poverty unshared by all;

> "Where each can feel a brother's sigh,
> And with him bear a part."

Until then, do let us look charitably upon the "isms" which are springing up around us, and bear their rebuke with patience, and with much prayer that the great Head of Church will animate his children to a more entire conformity to the teachings of his Word.

I have marked in italics a portion of this "ism," which, though it appears like the gropings of an infidel heart, demands of every Christian the inquiry whether these things are so. F.

1. We who are Associationists maintain that the right to labor ought to be secured to every human being, so that none should be dependent for a livelihood on the accident of another's wanting to hire and feeling sure of making a profit on his or her labor. Is this unreasonable?

2. We contend that labor should be elevated and dignified, not in the vapid froth of some fourth-of-July oration, but in very deed and truth; so that the sober, honest man who earns his living over a workbench shall be as much esteemed and regarded in society as his cousin the bank president or shipping merchant, if his intrinsic merits are equal. Is this absurd?

3. We contend that it is the duty of the human family so to adjust their relations that every child born into the world shall surely receive a good physical, mental and moral development or training—shall enjoy a full and thorough education adapted to his natural capacities and requirements, so as to be, so far as Providence permits, the brother and equal of all other human beings.

4. We believe that every human being owes to the race the duty of performing a fair share of the useful labor required by our common needs, and that paying this debt is essential to the healthful and happy existence of each and all.

5. We believe that when these truths are fully understood and accepted, labor will no longer be acounted drudgery or remitted to hirelings, but will be performed under circumstances which will render it agreeable and joyfully welcome—in other words, that industry generally may and yet will be rendered truly attractive, whereby slavery, serfdom, rapacity and oppression, will be banished from the face of the earth.

6. We believe that these reforms can only be effected in an order of society based not on necessity but on radical justice; not on the depression of any, but the upraising of all—in which personal interests shall not diverge from, but converge to each other—wherein the ignorance, needless toil, waste and want of our petty, isolated households, shall be superseded by the vast economies of a combined household, which shall immensely diminish the cost of rent, fuel, cooking, &c., &c., while increasing at the same time the comforts derived therefrom. In such a household, education of all kinds may be brought within the reach and means of the humblest, while opportunity to labor, with the just and sure reward thereof, shall be ever secured to all.

—Such is a rude sketch of the ideal of association. Do you say that human nature is too depraved to permit its realization? Then let regenerated Christian nature teach it how. Do you object to our means for effecting the desired renovation? Then devise better and commend them to general adoption as early and earnestly as possible. Do not stand quarreling with us about our way, but propound your own better way and push it forward. It must by this time be evident to all, that new instrumentalities, new ideas, are essential to the realization of that equal right to life, liberty, and happiness, proclaimed in our Declaration of Independence, and aspired to by the benevolent all over the world. Still the dark dens of ignorance and the foul haunts of sin cluster in the shadow of our moss-covered churches; still crime and pauperism are advancing in this favored land of light and liberty; still millions toil for the most meagre subsistence, constantly haunted by the fear that the opportunity to toil will be withdrawn, and all means of earning a livelihood denied them; still we see that radical injustice and strong temptations to crime are interwoven in the whole framework of society. Men, who say you love God and your neighbor, stay not to differ with us, but grapple with this mountain of abuses, resolving that it shall be destroyed!

—Alas! appeals more moving though not more earnest than ours have fallen but on faithless and stony hearts! From the spectacle of this wounded, bleeding body of humanity, the priest and the Levite pass coldly on the other side, muttering that man was born to suffer, and that wrong and woe must continue to the end of the world. They leave to despised Samaritans and sinners the task of binding up these ghastly wounds and striving in their best way to heal them. Heaven grant that these may be found worthy to endure obloquy and calumny, loss of friends and of wealth, so that theirs may be the true honor of having done or suffered something to promote the great cause of man's universal well-being!

POVERTY IN LONDON.

From an article by J. T. Headley, in the Ch. Parlor Mag.

I was constantly meeting in London evidences of the miserable condition of the poor. Though there is a law forbidding street begging, it cannot prevent the poor wretches from asking for bread. I was struck with the character of many of the beggars that accosted me, so unlike those I had been accustomed to meet. I had just come from Italy, where the whining tone, pitiful look, and drawling "me miserabile!" "fame!" "per carita!" and the ostentatious display of deformed limbs, had rendered me somewhat hardened to all such appeals. But here it was quite different. Men of stout frames, upright bearing, and manly voices, would tell me in a few plain words that they were out of work, and that their families were starving!

One pleasant afternoon, as I was strolling up Ludgate Hill, filled with the multitude, I saw a sight I shall never forget; it even arrested the Londoners, accustomed as they are to all kinds of misery, and a group was collected on the walk. Two children, a boy and a girl, the latter I should judge about eight, and the former five or six years of age, sat on the flagging, pressed closed against the wall, wholly unconscious of the passing multitude. In their dress, appearance, and all, they seemed to have been just taken from some damp, dark cellar, where they had been for months deprived of light, and almost of sustenance. Their clothes were in rags, black, damp, and ready to drop from their crouching bodies; their cheeks were perfectly colorless, as if bleached for a long time in the dews of a dungeon, and the little boy was evidently dying. How they came there, no one could tell; but there sat the sister struggling feebly to sustain her sinking brother. The poor little fellow sat with his head waving to and fro, and his eyes closed, while his sister, to whom some one had given a morsel of bread, was crowding the food into his mouth, conscious that famine was the cause of his illness. The spectators, moved by the touching spectacle, rained money into her lap; but she did not even deign to pick it up, or thank them, but, with her pale face bent in the deepest anxiety on her brother, kept forcing the bread into his mouth. The tears came unbidden to my eyes, and I also threw my mite of charity into her lap and hastened away. Oh! how strange it is that men will roll in wealth, and every day throw away what would make hundreds happy, and yet feel no reproaches of conscience for their acts! We hear much now-a-days of the horrors of war; but there is no battle-field which exhibits such woe, and suffering, and mortality, as the streets, and lanes, and cellars of London. Even our preachers are on the wrong track in their efforts to ameliorate the condition of our race. It is not war, nor ambition, nor intemperance, nor any of the great vices so openly condemned, that lies at the bottom of human misery. It is covetousness—the thirst for gold, which fills the church too much, as it does the world—aye, so much that it cannot be touched by the hand of discipline—that makes our earth a place of tears. Those very vices, against which such anathemas are hurled, grow out of this very covetousness, that is treated as an imperfection rather than a crime. The place that Christ gave it no one dare now give it, and man is left to mourn in poverty and want, and all the hateful passions of the wretched left to rise up in rebellion and scorn against the heartless religion that condemns their vices and urges them to repentance, while it leaves them and their children to starve. "The church," par excellence, of England may treble her prelates and her incomes, build countless cathedrals, and pray for the salvation of the world till doomsday; but so long as she robs the poor and neglects the physical condition of the suffering, she will pray to a deaf God. "To visit the widow and the fatherless in their distress," is one of the chief duties of religion, and yet the Church of England never does it; on the contrary, she sends the tithe collector in her place.

THE ENVIRONS OF JERUSALEM.

The general aspect of the environs of Jerusalem may be described in a few words. Mountains without shade, and valleys without water, the earth without verdure, rocks without grandeur. Here and there a few blocks of gray stone start up out of the dry and fissured earth, between which, beneath the shade of an old fig tree, a gazelle or a hyena are occasionally seen to emerge from the fissures of the rock. A few plants or vines creep over the surface of that gray and parched soil; in the distance is occasionally seen a grove of olive trees, casting a shade over the arid side of the mountain, the mouldering walls and towers of the city appearing from afar on the summit of Mount Sion. Such is the general character of the country. The sky is ever pure, bright and cloudless; never does even the slightest film of mist obscure the purple tint of evening and morning. On the side of Arabia a wide gulf opens amidst the black ridges, and presents a vista of the shining surface of the Dead Sea, and the violet summits of the mountains of Moab. Rarely is a breath of air heard to murmur in the fissures of the rocks, or among the branches of the aged olives; not a bird sings, nor an insect chirps in the waterless furrows. Silence reigns universally in the city, in the roads, in the fields.

Such was Jerusalem during all the time that we spent within its walls. Not a sound ever met our ears but the neighing of the horses, who grew impatient under the burning rays of the sun, or who furrowed the earth with their feet as they stood picketed round our camp, mingled occasionally with the crying of the hour from the minarets, or the mournful cadences of the Turks, as they accompanied the dead to their cemeteries. Jerusalem, to which the world hastens to visit a sepulchre, is itself a vast tomb of a people; but it is a tomb without cypresses, without inscriptions, without monuments, of which they have broken the gravestones, and the ashes of which appear to cover the earth which surrounds it with mourning, silence, and sterility. We cast our eyes back frequently from the top of every hill which we passed in this mournful and desolate region, and at length we saw, for the last time, the crown of olives which surmounts the Mount of the same name, and which long rises above the horizon, after you have lost sight of the town itself. At length it also sunk beneath the rocky screen, and disappeared like the chaplets of flowers which we throw on a sepulchre.

HOW TO MAKE A GOOD PASTOR.

1. Give your pastor your confidence and affections. Let him always feel that he is among friends that will guard his reputation, and be willing to cover with the mantle of charity any little deficiencies.

2. Consult him freely, and show that you respect his judgment in all the important matters pertaining to the moral and spiritual interests of the parish. Remember that he is the spiritual watchman placed on the walls of Zion in your place, and feels a deep interest in all that pertains to the best good of society.

3. Speak kindly to others of your pastor, and let them see that you respect him, and value his ministrations among you in the Lord.

4. Protect the reputation and good name of your pastor. His character is his capital. Should you ever see the envenomed shafts of calumny pointed at him, let your hearts, like so many encompassing shields, receive them, and your hands extract and break them at your feet. When he is compelled to speak with plainness, and rebuke with all long suffering, or to vindicate unpopular doctrines, or inculcate unwelcome truths, and you discover in others a disposition to repel them; then stand by him; hold him up with the strength of prayer and the energy of faith—then, instead of falling discomfited before his foes, truth shall accomplish glorious victories.

5. Never interfere with the private or family arrangemeuts of your minister. He has the same rights and responsibilities in reference to his family that other men have. And the people that would pry into his domestic arrangements, or attempt to thwart him in any endeavors to render his situation in this respect more eligible, pleasant, or economical, show two grand defects at least. First—A want of good breeding. Second—A narrowness of spirit which will be apt to render uncomfortable all who have intercourse with them.

6. Be punctual with your minister, and pay him his salary without asking. If any class of men earn the scanty pittance which is generally given them, it is the minister of the gospel, and the salary should be punctually paid.

COERCIVE POWER OF MAGISTRATES IN RELIGION.

It is instructive to mark the steps by which the more pious and intelligent portion of Christians have been led from the belief that magistrates may justly exercise a coercive power in religion, to the true doctrine of universal religious liberty. Three hundred years ago, the papal hierarchy claimed to possess the right of forming and executing ecclesiastical laws exempt from secular control. But when the Reformers arose, they saw the danger of acknowledging this right, and therefore boldly denied it. Even then, however, there was no difference of opinion as to the right of some party to impose forms of belief, and to enjoin by law the profession of some religious faith. Of course the ground of conflict was narrowed down to the simple question in whom the power of making laws to bind the conscience should be vested. The adherents of the Romish Church contended stoutly, that it belonged to their ecclesiastics. The Reformers, on the other hand, denied this claim, and endeavored to transfer the disputed right from the ecclesiastic to the civil magistrate. It is surprising to see with what confidence the early Reformers looked to the secular arm for their superiority over Rome. There was scarcely a confession of faith or a creed framed by them, which did not acknowledge the right of civil rulers to exercise a coercive power in matters of religion. In the Confession of Basle, for instance, it is written, "God hath assigned to the magistrate, who is his minister, the sword and chief external power, for the defense of the good, and for the revenging and punishing of the evil." The Confession of Bohemia says, "They do govern instead of God upon earth, and are his deputies." Cranmer exhorted the sovereign, as God's vicegerent, to take care that the worship of God was under due regulations, to suppress idolatry, and remove images. Even the pious and amiable Dr. John Owen, nearly a century after the commencement of the Reformation, affirmed, that the supreme magistrate of a nation professing the religion of Jesus Christ, ought to exert his power for the support and furtherance of the faith and worship of God, and ought also to forbid, coerce, or restrain, such principles and practices as are contrary to them. Thus the Reformers recognized the supremacy of the civil magistrate in matters of faith. In doing so they committed themselves to a course fatal alike to liberty of conscience and the just prerogatives of Jesus Christ. The consequence was, that in less than a century after the Reformation was at its height, free inquiry and earnest piety were almost entirely banished from the communities in which this doctrine prevailed.

The Baptists of England were among the first—if indeed they were not the first—to deny the authority of civil or ecclesiastical rulers to impose articles of religion, and to assert the right of every man to act in accordance with the dictates of his own conscience. This principle laid at the foundation of their system, and without it they could not have justified their separation from the existing religious organizations. The adoption of it gave them something tangible around which to rally—something which they could preach with confidence that it would find a response in the bosom of every lover of mental and religious freedom—something for which it was noble to live and safe to die. There were not wanting at that time, as now, persons of high standing in the religious world to represent this doctrine as subversive of all good government, and to exert their influence to bring persecution upon those who maintained it. They were stigmatized as anabaptists, ale-house preachers, seducers and heretics; and worst of all, were subjected to anxieties, griefs, sufferings, and compelled to wander about in fear and danger to obtain a miserable subsistence. Nevertheless, the principle which they had espoused remained true, and their confidence in it supported them amid all their sufferings. They saw it gaining new adherents wherever it was proclaimed, until now the great mass of Protestants are bold in advocating it, however slow they may be to practice it.

—We have been led to these remarks by reading, in a late number of the London Baptist Magazine, a notice of a work recently published in England by the Hanserd Knollys Society—a society established something more than a year ago for the purpose of securing the re-publication of the writings of old and celebrated Baptist authors. This is the first work issued by the Society, and is a collection of "Tracts on Liberty of Conscience and Persecution," containing the substance of the early controversies on that subject. The tracts were originally published between the years 1614 and 1661, a period of fearful interest to the Dissenters of England, during which Joseph Davis was imprisoned in Oxford Castle, and John James was hung and quartered for adherence to the Sabbath of the Bible. The first tract is entitled, "Religion's Peace, or a Plea for Liberty of Conscience, long since presented to King James, and the High Court of Parliament then sitting, by Leonard Busher, citizen of London, and printed in the year 1614." The second piece is entitled, "Persecution for Religion Judged and Condemned; in a Discourse between an Anti-Christian and a Christian; proving by the Law of God and of the Land, and by King James his many testimonies, that no man ought to be persecuted for his religion," &c., 1615. Next in order comes "The Necessity of Toleration in Matters of Religion; or certain Questions propounded to the Synod, tending to prove that Corporal Punishments ought not to be inflicted upon such as hold errors in religion, and that in matters of religion men ought not to be compelled, but have liberty and freedom," &c., 1647. The fourth tract is "The humble Petition and Representation of the Sufferings of several peaceable, innocent subjects of Kent, and now prisoners in the Gaol of Maidstone, for the Testimony of a Good Conscience," &c., 1660. This is followed by, "A Plea for Toleration of Opinions and persuasions in matters of religion differing from the Church of England," &c., 1661. The concluding article is another appeal from Maidstone jail in the year 1661, bearing the signature of nine prisoners.

Such is a brief outline of the first book published by the Hanserd Knollys Society. The subject of it is certainly well chosen, and the work cannot fail to be both interesting and useful. May books of a similar stamp be multiplied a thousand-fold.

PERSECUTION IN PENNSYLVANIA.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

I have just received a note from the Society at Snowhill, informing me that *eight of the fourteen Seventh-day Baptists at that place, arraigned before 'Squire Toms, for laboring on their secluded farms on first-day, June 21st, and whose trial was delayed until the 14th of last month, have been fined (four dollars each and costs of prosecution;) and that they have taken an appeal from his decision to the August Term of the County Court. Should they fail to have their rights vindicated at that tribunal, they have determined to carry it up to the Supreme Court, and test the constitutionality of the law under which they suffer so much persecution; in which they will have the sympathy of not only all Sabbath-keepers, but of all the friends of religious freedom throughout the land.

This obscure and unostentatious people (the German Seventh-day Baptists) who have been, for more than a century, esteemed by their immediate neighbors, in all their settlements, for their Christian deportment, are now attracting much attention abroad, throughout the commonwealth, and thousands, who had never before heard any thing of their peculiar religious views, are becoming interested in their behalf as a persecuted people, and are ready to sustain them in maintaining their unalienable rights as citizens and freemen.

Without making any pretensions to any special favors, if any denomination of Christians in the Republic deserve any consideration from the Government of Pennsylvania, and indeed from the Government of the Union, it is these "harmless" German Seventh-day Baptists. Persecuted in their "vaterland," they left their homes and their kindred to seek an asylum in the wilds of America, where they might "sit under their own vine and fig-tree, and worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their consciences," there being "none to make them afraid," and arrived at Boston early in the last century; but suffering under the rigor of the Puritan dynasty, they, on assurances of perfect religious freedom, removed, in 1720, to Pennsylvania, then commonly called Quaker Valley. They settled in the interior of the Province, and were some of the first pioneers of the German population who penetrated the wilds beyond the Schuylkil. As a quiet and industrious people, they improved the country, and made "the wilderness to blossom as the rose;" and from the earliest period of their occupation of our soil, they have rendered important services to our country. Regarding conflict with arms as unbecoming the Christian profession, still they have ever advocated the cause of equal rights, and succored the struggle for "liberty and independence" to an extent no other denomination, as a denomination, can boast. During the French war, (the war of 1756,) the doors of the whole establishment at Ephrata, then their only settlement, were thrown open as a refuge to the scattered inhabitants of Paxton and Tulpehocka, the extreme frontiers, from the incursions of the hostile Indians—all of whom were received and kept without charge by the Society during all the period of danger and alarm; upon hearing of which, a company of infantry was sent by the Royal Government from Philadelphia, to protect that retreat, and the Home Government, on learning the disinterested generosity and personal sacrifices of the Society of Ephrata, through the Commissioners who were sent to visit the place, and failing to induce them to take a remuneration for their outlay, their services and sacrifices, insisted upon their accepting a pair of large glass communion goblets, which was the only recompense they would receive, but which I do not think were ever used for that purpose. One of the goblets I now possess—the other was broken, accidentally, a few years since. And after the battle of Brandywine, in the year 1777, the whole establishment was again thrown open to receive the wounded American soldiers, great numbers of whom (400 to 500) were taken to that place, a distance of 60 or 70 miles, on wagons; were nursed, fed, and comforted under their sufferings; and one hundred and fifty to two hundred, who sunk under their wounds and camp fever, had their dying eyes closed by pious hands, and were interred in Mount Zion Cemetery.

These are some of the services and sacrifices which these German Seventh-day Baptists made for the cause of civil and religious liberty. Their only reward has been persecution. They have never received, they never asked, any thing at the hands of the Government, but liberty of conscience; which they ever have believed, and still do believe, is fully secured to them by the Constitutions of the State and the Union. They ask for no exclusive privileges. They disclaim all right of human government to exercise authority over, or fetter in the least, the religious rights of any being. While, in civil affairs, they respect "the powers that be," and strive "to obey those who have rule over" them, they contend for the unalienable right of observing the laws of God, as declared in his own Word, and resist being forced, in religious service, to keep "the commandments of men." They recognize the laws of the land in secular matters, and honor the laws of God, and God alone, in religious faith and practice. These are the unalienable rights of all members of our Republic. These are rights reserved by the people to themselves in the formation of our Government; which no power can legitimately wrest from them. If usurped by our Legislatures, and sustained by the Judiciary, then has the downfall of our Republic already commenced, and we may prepare to sing the requiem of "the last Hope of Liberty."

CONTROVERSY.

What subjects afford proper topics of controversy, and what should be the object of discussion? It is evident that any subject may be profitably investigated, if entered upon, not with a desire for victory, not saying to the world that when we die all right and truth dies with us, but earnestly seeking for truth and light and knowledge, with a mind open to receive it from whatever source it may come. The only proper limit to controversy is when good results cease and evil ones follow—when enmity takes the place of good will, and discord usurps the throne of social peace—when religious zeal without knowledge, and bigotry intolerant, supplant the Christian graces of faith, hope and charity, especially this last and greatest of the sisterhood.

Judging of the future by the past, it is not hard to determine what subjects of controversy will produce good results, and what will not. For example, as often as the subject of the Sabbath, baptism, also the various benevolent movements, temperance, missionary operations, &c., have been laid before the people in the spirit of meekness, good has resulted. The eyes of the blind have been opened, men converted from the error of their ways, and God glorified. But it seems that the controversial spirit has frequently been carried into fields where it has produced contrary results. For instance, those vexed questions of Trinitarianism vs. Unitarianism, and Calvinism vs. Arminianism, upon one side or the other of which are marshaled the best talents of our denomination, and indeed scarcely a lay member can be found who has not dabbled more or less in these pits of mire and contention, thus spending in a worse than useless manner much time and talent for which our fellows have a claim upon us. Now it is evident, that if one doctrine be true, the other must be false. Yet good men on either side, who gravely pretend to understand the Bible, say that their own side is right and the other wrong. All see a discrepancy in this, and the infidel and unconverted reason well herefrom not to believe a book which its own followers, about equally divided, contend teaches two or three different doctrines. Thus I once reasoned, and should until now, had not some different influences from those exerted by the followers of these theories been thrown around me. If these discrepancies do exist, what is such a book worth upon which to hang our immortal destinies, although claimed by all to be the word of eternal life? Thus have many reasoned, and this is the rock upon which many a noble bark has stranded. But the error is not in the book, or the doctrine taught in it; it is in the reader. The devil put it into the hearts of men to differ on these points, as a most effectual way to establish his own kingdom, and as he quoted Scripture, quoted it wrong, just as he did to Christ on the pinnacle of the temple; that is, he did not quote the whole word of truth, but by dwelling on particular detached points, perverted the doctrine which, if taken as a whole, forms a most beautiful system; and the same rebuke given to him by Christ, should be ours, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." How often have we witnessed the triumphs of the adversary of all good, as he beheld, by his wiles, the peace of families destroyed, Sabbath-schools annihilated, and even churches rent as with an earthquake shock to their centre.

These are not fancy sketches. During my few short years of observation, I can revert to numerous instances of this character; and who cannot? Then the agitator in the affair, like a calmed maniac, would lay his hand on his heart, and exclaim, O the desolations of Zion! Yet ever ready to renew his blighting contentions, as soon as any one presumed to question the correctness of his views. The actions of such remind me of a fable which I am a little surprised has never been recorded. Two scientific neighbors, who had lived as friends, fell out one day, and the difficulty was this: One discovered that his blood flowed from his heart in arteries only, and thence supposed the veins of no use. The other discovered that his blood flowed to the heart in veins, and, equally wise, supposed the arteries useless. Thus a contention arose, each as a discoverer vindicating his own theory, notwithstanding their neighbors tried to show them what a beautiful theory the union of the two would make. But the contention grew warmer, and to settle the matter, each cut away what he supposed the superfluous part; consequently both died of their wounds, to the great sorrow of many friends and the total ruin of numerous dependents. What surprises me most is, that so much ado is made about a thing in itself so perfectly impracticable to prove. Have you ever known a man to be more meek, more holy, more devoted to good or benevolence, after having participated in such a contention? Who ever knew a church involved in such discussions, which did not leave on the field of contest more or less dead and wounded, and even the survivors unfitted for performing the duties of Christians, because they had been engaged in an unholy warfare?

An Inquirer after the Whole Truth.

DeRuyter, July 17, 1846.

JEWISH EMIGRANTS—RELIGIOUS FREEDOM.

The following paragraph, taken from "The Orient" of May 11, shows that the reputation of our country for religious freedom, not less than for its climate and soil, is attracting to our shores men of property and standing from the Old World. We only wish that our reputation in this respect was merited. But we cannot shut our eyes to the fact, that notwithstanding the loud boasts of Fourth-of-July orators, there are yet laws written upon the statute books of nearly every State in the Union which give the lie to our professions of religious equality. Of course we refer to the laws forbidding useful labor on the first-day of the week. Such laws necessarily make "distinctions" and show "preferences" in matters of faith totally inconsistent with our republican Constitution and the general spirit of our political institutions. These wealthy Jews will say so, when, after having taken up their abode among us, they find themselves compelled by law to desist from labor on Sunday, and thus to sacrifice one-sixth of their earnings to the domineering spirit of a religious majority. But let them come, we say, and help to swell the number of those who oppose all coercion by civil magistrates in matters of religion, and especially in respect to Sabbath days. Here is the paragraph from the Orient:

"A large and peculiar troop of emigrants to America passed here this day. The whole company consisted of Jews from the neighboring town of Oberdorf. The poverty which characterizes the appearance of German emigrants for America, was happily not perceptible in this instance. On the contrary, affluence appeared to pervade their ranks. Elegant omnibuses conveyed the parties to the place of embarkation, and all were well dressed, particularly the handsome Jewish girls, who formed no mean part of the company. The whole had a gay and cheerful appearance. The company carry with them a 'Sephor Tora,' (scroll of the law,) which they had solemnly dedicated in the synagogue of Oberdorf, previous to their departure. The emigrants follow their relations and friends who had preceded them several years, and encouraged them to seek the well-beloved land of North America, where they are not, as in most German States, deprived of their rights and privileges as citizens, on account of adhering to the faith of their ancestors."

A Converted Jew.—The Granite Freeman of July 31, publishes the following account of the visit of a converted Jew to Concord, N. H. We hope it is not common for hotel keepers in the Granite State to deny lodgings to respectable persons because their beards do not happen to be trimmed exactly according to modern notions. If it is, we should recommend them to issue a circular setting forth definitely what will suit their fastidious tastes, so that the public need not be disappointed and imposed upon:—

"A 'converted Jew,' with his deep black eye, and flowing beard, held a religious meeting in the State House Yard, on Tuesday evening of this week. He had a large and attentive audience. As we sat by our office window, his mellow and gentle tones floated to our ear on the still evening air, very pleasantly. There was something in this man's humble and quiet appearance, his gentle and confiding look and voice, his promiscuous but attentive audience—the quiet stillness of the evening, that very strongly carried our imagination back to the ministry of Jesus; we seemed to see Him, entreating with the people in the market-place, upon the mountain-side, and by the sea-shore—every where heard gladly by the poor and humble, the fishermen and the tent makers, but rejected and scorned by the proud and pharisaical.

"The stranger appointed other meetings, on succeeding evenings, and on Wednesday evening a large number of people gathered, but no meeting was had; the Jew having been denied lodging at our Hotels, on account of his long beard, (though very neat and gentlemanly in his appearance,) he had left town."

Correction.—I wish through the columns of the Recorder to correct a mistake which appears in the Minutes of the Western Association. The error to which I refer is an omission of the name of Eld. Hiram Cornwell, who is Elder in the first church of Alfred. Eld. C. united with this church a short time before the Association held its session; but in making our report, the clerk accidentally made the omission above mentioned. N. V. Hull.

The degree of D. D. has been conferred on Rev. John O. Choules, of Roxbury, by the Georgetown College in Kentucky.

A Suggestion.—A private letter inquires, "Do not some of your correspondents err in stating our civil difficulties upon the Sabbath question? They state that the law prohibits our keeping the Sabbath; but the truth is, it forbids our working upon the first-day of the week." We thank our friend for the suggestion. Only one instance now occurs to us, in which a correspondent has spoken of Sunday laws as opposed to keeping the Sabbath. In that instance, we suppose his mind was fixed upon the natural effect of such laws, rather than upon the exact language in which they are expressed. It is much better, undoubtedly, to guard against any statement with which fault may be found. The case is bad enough when presented in its true light, and no false glosses are needed to make Sunday laws abominable in the eyes of all those who oppose coercion by the civil power in matters of religion. Legislators have no more right to say a man shall not work on the first-day of the week, than they have to say that he shall work on the seventh-day. To dictate upon either of these points, is to exercise authority never committed to them by God or man. It is therefore an act of usurpation and tyranny.

Religious Freedom—Equal Rights.—The Convention now in session at Albany to revise the Constitution of the State of New York, has adopted the article of the present Constitution guarantying the free exercise of religious worship. A discussion arose, but no action was taken, in relation to the article now in force which provides that no preacher of the gospel or priest of any denomination, shall be capable of holding any civil or military office or place within this State. The re-enactment of this provision was strenuously opposed as anti-republican and illiberal. Under the present Constitution, so long as a minister discharges his duty faithfully he is ineligible to any civil office, just like a State-prison convict; but the moment he proves himself unworthy of the ministerial office, and is turned out of it in disgrace, he is recognized as fit to be a candidate for a seat in Congress or the Governor's chair. We think the clergy will not thank the Convention for taking their case in hand. If they are so good that they ought to be kept out of civil offices, we do not believe they will rush into them to the injury of the State. If they are not too good to occupy such offices, we see no reason for Constitutional enactments to exclude them from benefits and responsibilities which are open to every other class of citizens.

SABBATH ACCIDENTS.

We are glad to believe, that the old song about "Sabbath accidents" (on Sunday,) is not so often heard now-a-days as formerly. Occasionally, however, a faint strain reaches us; on which account we have thought best to throw together the following items:—

Distressing Accident.—An accident occurred at the residence of John I. Slingerland, Esq. in New Scotland, about seven miles from Albany, on Saturday, which put several lives in danger and resulted in the death of a promising child, aged 4 years, a daughter of Mr. R. M. Pease of Albany. Mr. Pease was preparing to return to the city, and was in the act of driving the horse and wagon round from the rear to the front part of the house, Mrs. P., two of his own children, and three of his brother's having jumped in for the moment, when the horse started suddenly, threw Mr. Pease out, and started off, running furiously. Mrs. P. succeeded, with great presence of mind, in putting out two of the children from the rear of the wagon, when, while the horse was under full speed, having ran two miles, and down a steep hill, the wagon struck a bridge and Mrs. P. and two children were thrown out—the horse still dashing on—the other child remaining in until the wagon was upset and the horse finally stopped, was so much injured that she died on Sunday night. Mrs. P. was severely hurt, and two other of the children severely bruised.

Awful Accident.—On Saturday morning, about two o'clock, Irving Worthington, one of the workmen in the rolling mill of Ogden & Smith, near Fairmount, while engaged in bending a piece of iron, was by some means drawn between two cog-wheels, and instantly crushed to death in an awful manner. The deceased has left a wife and three children. He was 60 years of age.

Drowned.—Mr. Eason Lewis, a citizen of Black Rock, and formerly Canal Superintendent, was drowned in the harbor at that place on Saturday afternoon last, while endeavoring to rescue a laborer in his employ who had fallen into the water. Singular to state, another individual who was no swimmer also jumped in to the rescue of his fellow-laborer and succeeded in reaching the shore, while Mr. Lewis, the only swimmer of the three, was drowned.

Sad Accident.—A yonng man named Ezra Smith, met with an untimely end Saturday last. He was on a visit at Jamacia, and on Saturday afternoon went out in company with two others fishing; while in the act of jumping from a large boat into a smaller one, he fell between the two into the water and was drowned.

Sudden Death.—Wm. Marsh, a loborer in the employ of Messrs. B. Thompson & Co., Charlestown, while at work Saturday forenoon, dropped down and died instantly, as it was supposed from an affection of the heart. He was about 45 years of age, and has left a wife and several children, in Charlestown.

Judge Granger of Saratoga Co. died on Saturday in an apoplectic fit, on board a canal packet, on his passage from Troy to his home.

Milan Ross, Esq. a respectable citizen of Rahway, N. J., was thrown from his wagon while riding up Main-st. of that town on Saturday, and so much injured that he expired on Monday.

General Intelligence.

DOINGS IN CONGRESS.

In the SENATE, the bill for the admission of Wisconsin into the Union was passed. The Civil and Diplomatic Appropriation Bill, and the West point Appropriation Bill, were both passed. A Message was received from the President announcing the ratification of the Oregon treaty, and recommending the adoption of measures for the government of the Territory. A bill for the Territorial Government in Oregon was accordingly introduced. Bills were passed, to establish an additional land office in Iowa, to aid the improvement of Fox and Wisconsin rivers, to authorize the President to issue letters of marque and reprisal in the event of any being issued by Mexico, also a large number of private bills.

In the HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, a bill was passed to organize a Territorial Government in Oregon; one provision of the bill excludes slavery from the Territory forever. The Land Graduation Bill was laid on the table, by a vote of 104 to 79. The Harbor and River Bill was received from the President with his objections. The French Spoliation Bill was passed. The Post Office Bill was passed, one feature of which is, that it authorizes letters in Post Offices to be advertized in such newspapers as the postmaster may select, without regard to their circulation. A message was received from the President, asking an appropriation of $2,000,000 to enable him to make a treaty of peace with Mexico, for the settlement of the boundary, &c., if it shall be found that one can be made. The appropriation was made.

Congress adjourned on Monday.

FOREIGN NEWS—SIX DAYS LATER.

The steamship Great Western reached New York on Monday morning last, bringing English papers to July 25. The following summary comprises her principal news:—

The American Provision market continues tolerably steady. Beef is in good demand, but pork is less so. The inferior kinds of both have been in more request. Cheese and grease butter are lower.

The produce markets are in a state of stagnation. Colonial sugar has, of course, experienced the blow which is involved in the equalization of the duties.

In the manufacturing districts apathy exists, increased by one or two continental failures. The houses did business in English goods.

The weather, at all times an object of interest, is especially so on the eve of harvest. Since the middle of last month, when the intense warmth which prevailed for some weeks ceased, showers, more or less severe, have prevailed.

An address of the merchants of Liverpool to Mr. McLane, congratulates him on the settlement of the Oregon question, to which he replied. Both documents are highly interesting, and creditable to the feelings of the respective parties. If there is one place more than another which would suffer by the interruption of friendly relations with America, it is Liverpool.

Flogging in the British army has recently attracted a good deal of attention. Investigation has enlisted against flogging the indignation of the country, so that the extinction of the evil cannot be remote.

An elaborate report has been presented to Parliament relative to railways in connection with the invasion and the defense of the country.

RAILROAD ACCIDENT.—An accident occurred on the New Jersey Railroad, near Rahway, on Wednesday night, Aug. 5th, by which probably two or three persons lost their lives, and several more were severely injured. The particulars, (given by the Rahway Advocate,) are as follows:—

An extra train was engaged to run to New Brunswick, for the conveyance of a large number of Rechabites from Newark and Rahway, to join in a celebration of the Order at the former place. Three cars were well filled. They returned to this place about midnight, and when near town it is supposed some one drew the bolt connecting the forward car. The train was running at the moment with great speed, and a cry was raised that two of the cars were off the track. The engines were instantly reversed, of course bringing the forward and two rear cars together with a tremendous collision. Several persons were standing on the platforms, all of whom were more or less hurt.

A young man by the name of Ward had his legs most dreadfully jammed, and he is not expected to live. A man from Newark, it is also feared, is fatally hurt. Mr. Nathan Bunn of Woodbridge, had a piece of iron driven into the fleshy part of his leg, making a frightful wound, and was otherwise injured, but it is presumed not fatally. Several others received severe contusions. It is almost miraculous that more were not injured or killed outright. It is stated that the cars came together with such force that the platforms on which the people were standing, were knocked off and the forward car was jammed into that in the rear several feet, but those sitting in that car were thrown back by the concussion, and thus were saved from injury. All the cars are more or less broken up—wheels torn off, seats wrenched from their places, &c.

THE NEWSVENDERS OF LONDON, as we learn from the Times, lately partook of their annual Public Dinner. About two o'clock nearly 300 boys sat down to an excellent dinner, and they seemed highly delighted with the festive scene. About 6 o'clock nearly 200 men and their wives also sat down to a most sumptuous dinner. After the cloth was removed, a number of toasts were proposed and duly responded to. About 10 o'clock the ball-room was thrown open, and dancing was kept up till 3 o'clock in the morning. A Public Dinner among the 'b'hoys' who vend newspapers in this City would present a rich scene.

THE NEW MILITIA LAW.—That portion of the new Militia Law which relates to commutation of fines by the payment of seventy-five cents, went into effect immediately after its passage; but by the terms of that law all its other provisions are inoperative until the Governor, in the exercise of his discretion, shall issue his proclamation declaring them to be in force. This proclamation has been delayed because of the war with Mexico, which might render necessary a call upon the militia, and the new organization would so interfere with this call as to embarrass or defeat it. The volunteers called for from this State having been fully enrolled, this obstacle is now removed; and the Adjutant General has officially announced that after the fall parades, which will close on the 15th of October, and for which there is not time to prepare under the new law, the Governor will issue his proclamation declaring all the provisions of that law in full force. The official order requires all concerned in the execution of the law scrupulously to respect the right of the citizens to exempt themselves from the performance of militia duty, by commutation, where they shall avail themselves of that right in conformity with the provisions of the new law, by the payment of the money, or taking the oath before the assessor, as the law prescribes. [N. Y. Tribune.

AFFECTING SUICIDE.—The late suicide at Grass Lake, Michigan, by Geo. L. Smith, was of the most affecting character, and excited the most uncommon sympathy for the bereaved friends and relatives. He was only 26 years of age, and he leaves an interesting wife and two little boys to mourn his untimely death. His health had become impaired during the spring, from an excessive devotion to a very large business, which resulted in a mental aberration, after suffering with a severe pain in the head for two months. In May he left his business with agents, and with his wife started for New York, and after spending some days here he visited his parents in Madison Co., after which some friends in Orleans Co., where they tarried some three weeks. Believing him some better, they returned to their home at Grass Lake, where in a few days he terminated his own existence in the following manner. In the dead hour of night he arose, went to the pocket of his brother-in-law, took therefrom his keys, went to the barn, unlocked his carriage and took out his traveling pistol, returned the keys, but kept the pistol, without creating suspicion. During the morning he became worse, and shot himself through the head, within ten paces of his brother-in-law. He lived three hours, but spoke not. Another brother-in-law arrived three hours too late, to take him to Madison Co., N. Y. Previous to his sickness, he was always cheerful, witty, and very affectionate.

A GROCERY ON A NEW PLAN.—The Editor of the Boston Transcript says, A friend called upon us yesterday, vehement in his encomium upon a system of economy lately carried into practice by an association of Workingmen in Boston. This new philanthropic scheme has developed itself in a Store on the second story of Boylston Hall—a Grocery-store to supply articles to the families of Workingmen at wholesale prices. Its originators and others who form the Association pay $3 each as a first fee, and then 25 cents per month as a regular subscription. They then guaranty to each member $3 a week in case of illness, investing the common fund in Groceries, allowing the members only to purchase articles almost at cost. The Society saves the profits of the retailer, buying the stock at wholesale prices and selling at a trifling advance. This Boston Association may be termed the Parent Society. It has branches already established in some of the near Towns, and numbers in itself nearly 200 members. The store is open on the afternoons and evenings of Wednesday and Saturdays, and its plan certainly is both novel and useful. The Association is called 'The Workingmen's Protective Union,' and our friend who informs us of it says it will certainly maintain the sterling motto 'United we stand.'

CHILD OF SORROW.

BY MRS. PIERSON.

Child of sorrow!—Child of sorrow,—
Murmur not beneath the rod,
There may be a joyful morrow,
Treasured up for thee with God.

When thy night of pain is darkest,
When thy path is cold and drear,
Trust in God—He surely marketh
Every pang and every tear.

If thy spirit bow before him,
With a heart-felt, humble prayer,
If thy fervent faith adore him,
He will banish thy despair.

He will teach thee resignation,
He will give thee heart-felt peace,
Blessed hope, and consolation,
Riches and immortal bliss. [Forest Minst.

NEVER PROCRASTINATE.

"You'll please not forget to ask the place for me, sir," said a pale, blue-eyed boy as he brushed the coat of the man of leisure at his lodgings.

"Certainly not," said Mr. Inklin, "I shall be going that way in a day or two."

"Did you ask for the place for me yesterday?" said the pale boy on the following day, with a quivering lip, as he performed the same office.

"No," was the answer. "I was busy; but I will to-day."

"Heaven help my poor mother," murmured the boy, and gazed listlessly on the cent Mr. Inklin laid in his hand.

The boy went home. He ran to the hungry children with the loaf of bread he had earned by brushing the gentlemen's coats at the hotel. They shouted with joy, and his mother held out her emaciated hand for a portion, while a sickly smile flitted across her face.

"Mother, dear," said the boy, "Mr. Inklin thinks he can get me the place, and I shall have three meals a day—only think, mother, three meals! and it won't take me three minutes to run home and share them with you."

The morning came, and the pale boy's voice trembled with eagerness as he asked Mr. Inklin if he had applied for the place.

"Not yet," said the man of leisure, "but there is time enough."

The cent that morning was wet with tears. Another morning arrived.

"It is very thoughtless in the boy to be so late," said Mr. Inklin. "Not a soul here to brush my coat."

The child came at length, his face swollen with weeping.

"I am sorry to disappoint you," said the man of leisure, "but the place in Mr. C——'s store was taken up yesterday.

The boy stopt brushing and burst afresh into tears. "I don't care now," said he, sobbing; "we may as well starve. Mother is dead."

The man of leisure was shocked, and he gave the boy a dollar.

HOUSEHOLD LAWS OF HENRY VIII.

The following extract from an MS., relating to the regulation of Henry the Eighth's household, is curious and interesting.

"His highness's baker shall not put alums into the bread, nor mix rye, oaten, or bean flour with the same, and if detected, he shall be put in the stocks. His highness's attendants are not to steal any lock or keys, tables, forms, cupboards, or other furniture, out of noblemen's or gentlemen's houses, where they go to visit. Master cooks shall not employ such scullions as go about ill-dressed, or lie all night on the ground before the kitchen fire. No dogs to be kept in the Court, but only a few Spaniels for the ladies. Dinners to be at ten, suppers at four. The officers of his privy chamber shall be living together, no grudging nor grumbling, nor talking of the King's pastime. The King's barber is enjoined to be cleanly, not to frequent the company of misguided persons, for fear of danger to the King's royal person. There shall be no romping with maids on the stair case, by which dishes and other things are often broken. Care shall be taken of the pewter spoons, and that the wooden ones used in the kitchen be not broken or stolen. The pages shall not interrupt the kitchen maids. The groom shall not steal his highness's straw for beds, sufficient being allowed them. Coal only to be allowed to the King's, Queen's, and Lady Mary's chambers. The brewers are not to put any brimstone into the ale." Among the fishes for the table, is mentioned the porpoise; if too big for a horse-load, an extra allowance to purveyor. Twenty-four loaves a day allowed for his royal highness's greyhounds. Ordered, that all noblemen and gentlemen at the end of the Sessions of Parliament depart to their several Counties, on pain of the Royal displeasure."

ACCIDENTS ON RAILROADS.

At the last sitting of the Philotechnic Society of Berlin, the Baron de Reden read a memoir, the object of which was to prove that the number of accidents which have up to the present time happened on European railroads is extremely small compared to that of the number of passengers. The following facts are taken from this paper, which we find in a Paris journal.

In France, in the year most unfavorable to railways, that is to say when there were the greatest number of accidents, which was that of 1842, when the great disastar on the road from Paris to Versailles took place, there was one accident to 25,000 travelers. In 1844, the most favorable year, there happened only one accident in 1,321,000 travelers. In England, in 1840, the most unfavorable year, there was one accident to 64,000 passengers; in 1843, the most favorable year, 1 accident to 69,000 travelers. These figures, according to M. Reden, prove that accidents on the railroads in France, are much less frequent than those on the English railroads. During the five years from 1841 to 1845, the number of persons who have suffered from accidents on the English railways was 1,007, (399 of whom perished) or one in 95,000.

In Belgium, in 1844, the most unfavorable year, there was one accident to 88,000; in 1844, the most favorable year, one accident to 102,000 travelers. From 1835 to 1844, 58 individuals were killed and 103 wounded on the Belgian railroads. On the German railways, from 1841 to 1845 inclusive, there were only three persons wounded and four persons killed. In all Europe, the proportion between the number of individuals killed or wounded on the railroads and that of travelers on the same routes, was, in the most unfavorable years, as one to 494,000 and in the most favorable year, as one to 8,889,000. In Prussia, according to M. de Reden, 40 to 50 persons perish annually in traveling on the rivers. In the city of London alone, the number of persons who are killed every year by accidents which happen to carriages circulating in the streets, is about three hundred.

THE RETURN OF THE WANDERER.

Some years ago a pious widow, who was reduced to great poverty, had just placed the last smoked herring on her table to supply her hunger and that of her children, when a rap was heard at the door, and a stranger solicited a lodging and a morsel of food, saying that he had not tasted bread for twenty-four hours. The widow did not hesitate, but offered a share to the stranger, saying, "We shall not be forsaken, or suffer deeper for an act of charity."

The traveler drew near the table; but when he saw the scanty fare, filled with astonishment, he said, "And is this all your store? and do you offer to share to one you do not know? Then I never saw charity before! But, madame, do you not wrong your children by giving a part of your last morsel to a stranger?" "Ah," said the widow, weeping, "I have a boy, a darling son, somewhere on the face of the wide world, unless Heaven has taken him away; and I only act toward you as I would that others should act toward him. God, who sent manna from heaven, can provide for us as he did for Israel; and how should I grieve if my son should be a wanderer destitute as you, and should find a shelter, even as poor as this, and be turned unrelieved away?"

The widow stopped, and the stranger, springing from his seat, clasped her in his arms; "God, indeed, has provided just such a home for your wandering son, and has given him wealth to reward the goodness of his benefactress. My mother! O my mother."

It was indeed her long-lost son, returned from India. He had chosen this way to surprise his family. But never was surprise more complete or more joyful. He was able to make the family comfortable, which he immediately did, the mother living for some years longer, in the enjoyment of plenty. [Anecdotes of the Family.

A CHEERFUL HEART.

I once heard a young lady say to an individual, "Your countenance to me is like the shing sun, for it always gladdens me with a cheerful look." A merry or cheerful countenance was one of the things which Jeremy Taylor said his enemies and persecutors could not take away from him. There are some persons who spend their lives in this world as they would spend their time if shut up in a dungeon. They go mourning and complaining from day to day, that they have so little, and are constantly anxious lest what little they have should escape out of their hands. They look always on the dark side, and can never enjoy the good that is present, for the evil that is to come. This is not religion. Religion makes the heart cheerful, and when its large and benevolent principles are exercised, men will be happy in spite of themselves.

The industrious bee does not stop to complain that there are so many poisonous flowers and thorny branches in his road, but buzzes on selecting the honey where he can find it, and passing quietly by the place where it is not. There is enough in this world to complain about and find fault with, if men have the disposition. We often travel on a hard and uneaven road, but with a cheerful spirit and a heart to praise God for his mercies, we may walk therein with great comfort, and come to the end of our journey in peace.

"Give me a calm and thankful heart,
From every murmur free!
The blessings of thy grace impart,
And make me live to thee."

GROWTH OF LONDON.

We are apt to imagine here in the United States, that the growth of our towns and cities greatly surpasses in rapidity and extent those of the old world. Some facts about London would seem to contradict this notion. It is stated, for instance, in a recent report of the Government, "that in a little more than twelve years, twelve hundred new streets have been added to London, which is at the rate of one hundred streets a year. These twelve hundred new streets contain forty-eight thousand houses, most of them built on a large and commodious scale, and in a style of superior comfort." With all this wonderful increase, it is said "that the demand for houses, instead of diminishing, continues to increase, and that while in many towns of the interior the number of unoccupied houses is augmenting, scarcely is a new street finished, before almost every house in it is fully occupied. One great reason assigned for the rapid growth of London, is the extraordinary facility and despatch with which people are now transported over railroads terminating there. Owing to this cause, it is estimated that the daily influx of individuals is five times greater than it was fifteen years ago. London is now about forty miles in circumference, and numbers more than two millions of inhabitants."

UMBRELLAS.—It is curious to observe the slender thanks given to those who endeavor to increase the comforts and conveniences of the human race. When Jonas Hanway, though a very popular character, first appeared in the streets of London with an umbrella, he was looked upon with a feeling similar to that with which the ancient prophet of that name was regarded. The novel example of such effeminacy was ridiculed as quite insufferable; and preferring the rays of the sun to the shower of missiles with which he was assailed, he quietly put it down and took shelter in a cutler's shop, from the back door of which he retreated into an adjoining street, and without further molestation got safe home. It was some time before he again ventured to defend himself publicly against the sun's rays, but being deemed an eccentric, his singularity was overlooked, and he was permitted quietly to walk under cover. At length so many began to avail themselves of the like accommodation, that the common eye grew familiar to it. A few rurals stopped now and then to gaze and wonder, but felt rather amused than offended. The imitation at length spread from the Bond street men of fashion, to the men of smock frocks and aprons; and in our day, there is scarcely any one so poor that he has not an umbrella. They are become as common as shoes and stockings.

THE DEATH OF NAPOLEON.—But at length that wonderful mind was to be quenched in the night of the grave; and Nature, as if determined to assert the greatness of her work to the last, trumpeted him out of the world with one of her fiercest storms. Amid the roar of the blast, and the shock of the billows, as they broke where a wave had not struck for twenty years—amid the darkness and gloom and uproar of one of the most tempestuous nights that ever rocked that lonely isle—Napoleon's spirit was passing to that unseen world, where the sound of battle never comes and the tread of armies is never heard. Yet even in that solemn hour, his delirious soul, caught perhaps by the battle-like roar of the storm without, was once more in the midst of the fight, struggling by the Pyramids, or the Danube, or on the plains of Italy. It was the thunder of cannon that smote his ear; and amid the wavering fight, and covering smoke, and tumult of the scene, his glazing eye caught the head of his mighty columns, as torn yet steady, they bore his victorious eagles on, and "Tede d' Armee," "Head of the Army," broke from his dying lips. Awe-struck and still, his few remaining friends stood in tears about his couch, gazing steadfastly on that awful, kingly brow; but it gave no farther token, and the haughty lips moved no more. Napoleon lay silent and motionless in his last sleep.

NUMERICAL COINCIDENCES.—The marriage of Louis III. of France, with the Princess Ann of Austria, met with many obstacles, but was ultimately brought about in consequence of the following weighty considerations.

The name of Louis, or according to the ancient orthography, Loys de Bourbon, contained thirteen letters; he was in the thirteenth year of his age; and he was the thirteenth King of France of the name of Louis. The Princess Anne d'Autriche had also thirteen letters in her name; she too was in her thirteenth year; and there were thirteen princesses of the same name in the house of Spain. Nay, more, Louis and Anne were born on the same day, of the same month, of the same year. In short, nothing could be more obvious than that they were born for each other!

Nothing was more common in former times than such puerile combinations of circumstances. Similar to the above was the play on the number fourteen, as connected with the life of Henry the Fourth. He was born in the fourteenth century, fourteen years and fourteen decades after Jesus Christ; he came into the world on the 14th of December, and left it on the 14th of May; he lived four times fourteen years, four times fourteen days and fourteen weeks, and there were fourteen letters in his name, Henri de Bourbon.

TRAVELER'S WONDERS!—The Boston Post says the following extract of a letter from a sea captain to his lady in that city, shows the wonderful certainty and celerity with which a person may travel from one point of the globe almost to its antipodes.

CANTON, April 1, 1846.

DEAREST RIB,—Having scraped together enough of this world's goods to render us economically comfortable and independent during the rest of our lives, I shall resign the command of the clipper Swordfish, and will leave her on the first of May. I shall arrive in London on the 20th June; spend ten days there in arranging my business, and viewing the principal objects of interest, and will then proceed to Liverpool. I shall leave that port on the glorious fourth, in the Cambria steamer, and will arrive at East Boston on the afternoon of the seventeenth. You will, therefore, have a carriage ready on that day, and by the way, don't forget to have some broiled salmon, green peas and new potatoes for dinner, at 5 P. M. precisely.

But the finale is to be told. The captain did arrive there on the very day he calculated, and had the pleasure of dining on fresh salmon, with suitable fixins, precisely at 5. A century ago, the captain would have been indicted for a wizard.

POWER OF IMAGINATION.—At Williams College, the other day, the Professor of Chemistry, while administering in the course of his lectures the Protoxide of Nitrogen, or, as it is commonly called, Laughing Gas, in order to ascertain how great an influence the imagination had in producing the effects consequent on respiring it, secretly filled the India-rubber gas bag with common air instead of gas. It was taken without suspicion, and the effects, if anything, were more powerful than upon those who had really breathed the pure gas. One complained that it produced nausea and dizziness; another immediately manifested pugilistic propensities, and before he could be restrained, tore into pieces the coat of one of the bystanders; while a third exclaimed, "this is life—I never enjoyed it before." The laughter that followed the exposure of the gaseous trick may be imagined.

VANITY.—The French Princess de Charlois, when in the agonies of death, and receiving the last sacrament, yielded very reluctantly to the wishes of her confessor, to wipe off her rouge. "If I must," said she to her maid, "give me some other ribbons, for you know that, without rouge, yellow ribbons look frightful upon me." The celebrated actress, Mrs. Oldfield, had the same penchant. Her last words, in arranging some articles of dress, were: "One would not like to look frightful after death." Pope satirised thus:—

"One would not sure look ugly when she's dead,
And, Betty, give those cheeks a little red."

FRIGHT FROM A DONKEY.—Irving, in Ralph Ringwood, gives the following account of the consequences that the sight and braying of a donkey produced upon Mistress Barbara's nerves:—"Poor Barbara had never before seen a donkey, and having read in the Bible that the Devil went about like a roring lion seeking whom he might devour, she took it for granted that this was Beelzebub himself. The kitchen was soon in a hubbub; the servants hurried to the spot. There lay old Barbara in fits; as fast as she got out of one, the thought of the Devil came over her, and she fell into another, for the good soul was devoutly superstitious. After a time she got better in mind and body; matters were explained to her; and she became gradually convinced that it was not the Devil she had encountered."

BURIAL ALIVE.—We have often thought that some provision should be made by the government, against the possibility of living interments. Death and the funeral follow each other so closely that we have no doubt many persons are annually interred while alive. An exchange paper states that since 1833, accidental circumstances have prevented 94 persons from being buried alive. Of these, 35 persons recovered spontaneously from their lethargy, at the moment when the funeral ceremonies were about taking place, 13 were aroused under the stimulus of the busy love and grief about them, 7 by the fall of the coffin which enclosed them, 9 by the prickings of the flesh in sewing up the shroud, 5 by the sense of suffocation in their coffins, 19 by accidental delays which occurred in the interment (how significant is this item!) and 6 by voluntary delays suggested by doubt as to their death! We believe that in some parts of Continental Europe the law compels the delay of funerals for a certain and satisfactory term.

NEGLECTING THE ANTECEDENT.—Some very whimsical instances of this occur continually, especially in the answers of witnesses, when given literally as they speak. In a late assault case, the prosecution swore, "The prisoner struck him with a broom on his head till he broke the top of it." In narrating an incident some time since, it was stated that a poor old woman was run over by a cart aged sixty. So in a case of supposed poisoning, "He had something in a blue paper in his hand, and I saw him put his head over the pot and put it in." Another swallowing a base coin—"He snatched the half crown from the boy which he swallowed,"—which seems to mean the boy, not the money, but still the sentence is correct. An old fellow who many years sold combustible matches in Bishopsgate, had the following cry: "Buy a penny-worth of matches, of a poor old man made of foreign wood."

VARIETY.

The difference between rising at six in the morning and eight, in the course of forty years, supposing a man to go to bed at the same time he otherwise would, amounts to twenty-nine thousand hours, or three years one hundred and twenty-one days and sixteen hours, which will afford exactly eight hours a day for ten years; so it is the same as if ten years were added to life—a weighty consideration, in which we could command eight hours a day for the cultivation of our minds or the dispatch of business.

In one of the markets in this city, says the New York Sun, may be seen a middle-aged woman, whose history is full of interest. She is a younger daughter of a titled English aristocrat, whose estate is valued at $25,000 per annum. She was brought up in luxury, fell in love with and married her father's groom, was turned out of house and home, and obliged to fly from her country to avoid her father's vengeance. She passed through many trials which rend the heart, in her career from wealth to peverty. She is now selling fruit in a New York market.

A merchant of Philadelphia was taken in Baltimore the other day on a sheriff's warrant, and in duress, without a friend in the city by whose interposition he could escape a visit to the jail. A thought struck him in his depression, and in custody of the sheriff he visited the Telegraph Office. A message was dispatched to Philadelphia, a draft drawn and accepted, and in half an hour the party was released, blessing the arts and sciences in general, and Morse's Telegraph in particular,

Don Ferdinand Columbus, the son of the great discoverer, gives this description of his father:—'The Admiral was a well formed man, above the usual stature, with a long face and somewhat high cheek bones, without any aspect either of fullness or leanness. His nose was aqueline, his eyes light; his complexion pale, and lighted up with lively colors. In his youth he had light hair, which by his thirtieth year had become wholly white.'

In Great Britain, the post office now yields to the government a yearly nett income of about five millions of dollars; though since the franking privilege was there abolished, and rulers pay postage, like others, it has carried letters throughout the kingdom for a penny, and newspapers for nothing. And since this cheap system was introduced, it is stated that millions of the poorer classes are learning to write, for the pleasure of correspondence,—thus cultivating friendships, as well as increasing the revenue.

The character of Tasso has obtained the highest praise. It is said of him that there never was a scholar more humble, a wit more devout, or a man more amiable in society. Some person reported to him that a malicious enemy spoke ill of him to all the world. "Let him persevere," said Tasso, "his rancor gives me no pain. How much better is it that he shonld speak ill of me to all the world, than that all the world should speak ill of him to me."

A correspondent of the Springfield Republican, who stood upon the wharf at East Boston when the Cambria came in, says that as the vessel was nearing her destination, the Hutchinson Family, who were among the passengers, struck up "Home, Sweet Home!" and sang with thrilling sweetness and beauty that touching song. It must have been a pleasing and impressive incident to all who witnessed it.

An old lady who had been reading Locke's famous moon story very attentively, replied with emphasis, that the idea of the moon's being inhabited was too incredible to believe; 'for,' said she, 'what becomes of the people when the moon is nothing but a little streak?'

The Dayspring states that the annual sale of opium at Amoy, amounts to $1,200,000; and there are four other smuggling marts along the coast of the same province.

The Springfield Gazette says that the length of the paper used on the telegraph machine in Springfield, for the steamer's news, was nearly three miles.

Mr. Pohlman, missionary on the Island of Amoy, says that "it is well ascertained that among the poor people in that island one half of the female children are destroyed."

The first steamboat that ever arrived at St. Louis was in 1818. The navigation of the Lakes by steamboats commenced in the same year. What a change now!

ALFRED ACADEMY, AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institntion, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25
EXTRAS PER TERM.
Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

"A REASON OF THE HOPE."

Most of our readers are aware, that Eld. George R. Wheeler and his wife, who came to this country from England some two years ago, have recently embraced the Sabbath of the Lord and united with the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Shiloh, N. J. At the time of changing their views, they were members of the First-day Baptist Church in Salem, N. J. As the matter attracted some attention among their brethren, they thought it but just, when requesting letters of dismission from the church, to accompany that request with a distinct statement of the reasons for their change. This they did in the two following letters, which have been sent us for publication in the Recorder. We make room for them the more cheerfully, because we are informed that by a vote of the church to which they were written, or of the lords thereof, they were never read in public. Some people are very careful not to read or hear any thing which is likely to disturb their sleepy consciences. We hope this is not the case with the members of the church in Salem, although we must confess ourselves not destitute of fears on that point. At any rate, we think it advisable to publish the letters, so that any who may wish it can have a chance to read them.

Letter to the Baptist Church, Salem, N. J.

Christian Brethren:—After the most serious and deliberate consideration, I am compelled to come to the conclusion that it is my duty no longer to retain my membership with you. I have endured a most painful struggle in my mind for a long time, before I could come to this determination; but, to be honest and consistent, to it I must come. I wish you clearly and distinctly to understand, that the great reason for my taking this step is my change of views on the subject of the Sabbath. Allow me, dear brethren, to give you my sentiments on the Sabbath question before you pass sentence upon me.

I never questioned for a moment the soundness of the practice of keeping the first day of the week as the Sabbath of the Lord, until I came to this country. The circumstances in which I was placed introduced the subject to my notice. I thought a little about it at first, but determined on dismissing it from my mind, as I thought I would never change my views. Through family connections I was introduced to members of Seventh-day Baptist churches. It was natural enough for them to talk to me on a subject so interesting to themselves, and it was as natural for me to bring my arguments to meet theirs. By these means an impression was made on my mind that their sentiments were correct, which I could not quite erase, though I made the most determined effort to do it. Having many opportunities to examine their arguments at leisure, and some inducement, (as some of my children were living with families of that persuasion,) I deemed it right to think for myself, that I might know what was truth. "To the law and to the testimony" I went, and searched for scriptural arguments to meet theirs and outweigh them if possible. To my mortification, I could find no text which referred to the first day of the week as a Sabbath, much less the Sabbath. I found that the ancient law to "keep the Sabbath day holy," (which was the seventh day,) had never been changed. I found it to be a positive command of God from the creation, and he had no where said that another day should take its place. I found that in every text where the Sabbath was spoken of, it referred to the ancient day which God had sanctified and blessed. The ten commandments came under review, and not one of them was rejected by my Christian friends or the church to which I belonged, save the fourth. All these precepts are held as perfectly distinct from the ceremonial law, and nothing as abolished but the latter when the gospel day was introduced. My reliance upon the conduct of the Apostles in reference to the day, I found to be a failure, as it did not appear that they ever observed it under the idea of the Sabbath day.

These considerations were extremely unwelcome. I found myself beaten off from my standing, and no way of escape presented itself but to dismiss the subject, and resolve, whether or no, to take my old course in spite of the clearest evidence. My habits as a first-day Baptist were of long standing, and my opinions were deep-rooted, and as dear as my right hand or right eye; how could they be relinquished? I was ready to charge myself with instability, and with being swayed by the opinions of others. I thought of the difficulties lying in my way—of the censures which the Christian church would employ—my wife was not disposed to think much about these matters—difficulties in that case with my family appeared discouraging—nor was I free from anxiety respecting my business. With all these exercises of mind, I still went on, though but sluggish, in my old track. Through this inward struggle, together with other things of an unpleasant kind, I could fain have withdrawn from my fellow Christians, and become isolated from any Christian community. At length I concluded that I must be honest and consistent with my own convictions, and do what God's word required, yielding myself up to the conquest of omnipotent truth. I now declare myself to you and to the world to be a Seventh-day Baptist. Henceforth you will not find me in my shop on that day, and were it my business, that shop would be closed for the future. I still feel desirous that grace may be with all those who love our Lord Jesus Christ, and that they may be filled with the love of God. If it lies in my power to render them any service, I will do it to the best of my ability. The brethren and sisters I am acquainted with I highly esteem, and I do hope they will treat me as a Christian brother still, though I may I differ from them on the subject which has induced me to withdraw from you. Having taken this decided course, I shall leave my case with you, to do with me as you please, only be as decided on the subject as I am.

I intend, at the first opportunity, to unite with the Shiloh church. If you do not think proper to give me a letter of commendation as to character, I should like the letter I gave you which I brought from the Baptist Church in England. From your Christian Brother,

George Rose Wheeler.

Another Letter to the Baptist Church, Salem, N. J.

Salem, February 11, 1846.

Dear Christian Friends:—Feeling it to be my duty to make known to you the important change which has taken place in my mind respecting the Sabbath, I will endeavor to do it in as plain and concise a way as possible.

When I left home, Dec. 2d, I went to see the grace of God which was manifest in my children. When I reached there, and saw the love, unity, and Christian consistency there was in these seventh-day Christians, I almost involuntarily exclaimed, "Behold how these Christians love one another." I could only say with Peter, (Acts 11: 17,) "Forasmuch as God gave them the like gift as he did unto us who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ, what was I that I could withstand God?" I dare not raise one finger to prevent my children joining that people, but was obliged to "hold my peace and glorify God." An impression was then made on my mind which I could not resist. No one attempted to argue with me on the subject of the Sabbath, nor did I wish to speak about it to any one. I did not want to think the seventh day was the Sabbath, because I thought it was not practicable to keep it at Salem. But I felt constrained to search the Scriptures for myself, though I felt determined no one should know that I thought any thing about it. By the help of a concordance, I found and wrote down every passage that had the word Sabbath in it, both in the Old and New Testaments, and found that the word Sabbath really means rest—that it no where had any reference to the resurrection, nor is there any intimation that the day was to be changed after the resurrection. I then looked for every passage in which the first day was mentioned, and could not find it any where called the Sabbath, but was surprised to find how often the Sabbath was referred to by the apostles after the resurrection, without any intimation of a change of the day. Then turning to the first day of the week, it is not any where called the Sabbath. In Revelations 1: 10, where John speaks of the Lord's day, I found no mention made whether it was the first day or the seventh day, or whether he referred to any particular day of the week or not. As respects Acts 20: 7—"And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread"—I have frequently known some of our most interesting missionary meetings and ministers' meetings held in England, in my native town, on a Monday evening, and the ministers' meetings closed by partaking, together with the members of the churches, of the Lord's Supper. But I should be sorry for the next generation to say, that the Buckinghamshire Baptists in England kept their Sabbath on a Monday, because it was more convenient for the ministers to meet together on that evening. Again, at the 20th verse, Paul declares publicly, "that he had kept back nothing that was profitable unto them;" and at the 27th verse, he says, that he had "not shunned to declare to them ALL the counsel of God." I would ask, could he have used such language as this, if he knew the Sabbath was changed, and yet gave them no intimation of it? Did he ever do so in any thing else.

During my visit I spent many hours, sometimes by day, sometimes by night, (which no one knew any thing about,) meditating, weeping, praying, and reading the Scriptures, without note or comment, that I might search into these things for myself. Sometimes I was in great distress, and could not conceal my feelings from observation; for I thought I plainly saw the Master's will, and then not to do it, I knew the Word of God said I must be beaten with many stripes. After some time, I began to talk to a brother on the subject, who treated me with great Christian kindness without forcing upon me his opinions. At meeting in Plainfield and New Market, I often felt constrained to say, "Let me go with you, for I believe that God is with you." But still I felt greatly agitated and perplexed about home. To go home and forget all I had seen and felt was impossible. To go home to my husband to declare myself a Sabbatarian would, I feared, throw his house into confusion, and distress him, which was a hard thing for me to do. How then was it possible for me to keep the commandments of the Lord? This led me to search the Scriptures diligently, to see if there was such a case as for God to command his children to do what it was impossible for them to perform. Never did I feel the Word of God so precious to me as now. It was my delight indeed. The 77th Psalm seemed just adapted to meet my case. There Asaph made diligent search to see if he could find such a case as for God to cast off his people. He thought on God and was troubled, and so did I; for I often said, "Is it possible?—is that the character of God, that he should so clearly show me his will, and then put such hinderances in my way that I cannot perform it? I dare not entertain such hard thoughts of God. Asaph could not find such a case; for, at the 10th verse, he says, "This is my infirmity (or my weakness,) that I should think thus of God; I will remember what he has done." Then he called to mind what great things God had done for his people, and seemed to take encouragement, though his way was in the sea, and his footsteps he could not trace. Neither could I trace his footsteps; but I dared not say they were wrong.

> "Israel, his people and his sheep,
>   Must follow where he calls;
> He bids them venture through the deep,
>   But makes the waves their walls.
>
> Strange was their journey through the sea;
>   Thy footsteps, Lord, unknown;
> Terrors attend the wonderous way,
>   That brings the blessing down."

I trembled to make my decision known to my husband. After much serious consideration, fervent prayer, and pleasant conversation with dear Christian friends, I ventured to write to him, and soon received an answer, to my great surprise and joy, that he also was decided to keep the Sabbath of the Lord. His mind had been much more exercised on this subject than I had had any idea of. I felt from that moment that I must say with David, "I have sworn (or vowed) and I will perform it, that I will keep thy commandments." I dare not go back, for his Word had been "a lamp to my feet and a light to my path."

I could say many more things, but fear I have been too long already. But this I will say, if any of the brethren or sisters in the church are not satisfied with my statement, and wish to hear more, or think me in an error, I am ready to meet them at any time, for I am not ashamed or afraid to own my sentiments or converse with any one on the subject.

Yours in Christian bonds,

Hannah Wheeler.

THE RESURRECTION OF CHRIST.

When Jesus in the tomb was laid,
  'Twas Israel's solemn paschal evening,
Before that high day Jehovah made,
  Which saw them Egypt's bondage leaving.
There in the solid rocky walls
  Of Hades' cold and silent chambers,
Wrapt in Jewish funeral palls,
  Three nights and three days he slumbers.

Before the sealed, the stony door,
  Priests and Pharisees their guard have set,
The third day's safety to ensure,
  And thus his prophecy defeat.
But e'er the fourth day's morning breaks,
  While darkness yet Mount Zion shrouds,
Jesus the God his body takes,
  Despite that seal and those soldier guards.

The weekly Sabbath's sun was set,
  Its twilight faded quite away,
And darkness thick as Egypt's night,
  On all the Mount of Zion lay;
'Twas then, while solemn stillness reigned,
  Nor guard to guard, watch to watch, replied,
The rising Christ his might resumed,
  And all the powers of darkness foil'd.

Ere leaving his sepulchral bed,
  The winding shroud, the linen clothes,
And napkin from his turbaned head,
  In his own new-made folds repose.
Lo, up he stands—death yields his prey;
  Earth quakes at his almighty power;
Angels who waited on his way,
  Instantly roll back that stony door.

Long ere day's first reflected beam
  Broke o'er Olive's gardened mountain,
Women their balmy spices bring,
  And learn their Lord's alive again.
Daniel's prophetic mid-day week,
  Is with Jonah's three days sign fulfilled,
In Him of whom the prophets speak,
  Who will God's living temple build.

Shiloh, N. J., 7th mo., 1846. S. D.

Noble Conclusion.—A little Roman Catholic girl in Ireland had committed to memory fifty chapters. It pleased God to bring her to the bed of death. Her comfort in that hour was the reading of the Scriptures, but her parents, being Roman Catholic, wished her to confess to the priest, and receive anointing from him. The priest refused to give the absolution, unless she would surrender the Bible. Her parents interfered; and the mother, thinking her child was lost to eternity unless she complied with the priest's wishes, entreated compliance, but in vain, and the child still refused. At last, the poor ignorant mother stripped down the bed-clothes, and took from her the Bible which she had held on her little breast. The child, on finding her Bible gone, simply exclaimed, "Well, I thank God, he cannot take away the fifty chapters I have got by heart!"

AFFLICTION.

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

With silence only as their benediction,
  God's angels come,
Where in the shadow of a great affliction,
  The soul is dumb!

God calls our loved ones—but we lose not wholly
  What he hath given;
They live on earth, in thought and deed, as truly,
  As in His Heaven.

SUPERSTITION OVERTHROWN BY EDUCATION.

The following paragraph occurs in the report of the Assam Missions for 1845. It shows the important bearing of education and science upon the overthrow of heathen superstitions:—

"Another consideration that shows the importance of schools where science shall be correctly taught, is the firm and universal belief of the Hindus in their whole scriptures as the word of God, one part equally with another, so that when their geographical and astronomical systems are proved to be false, and the work of man, then their shasters, as a whole, inevitably fall to the ground For instance, the Assamese, Brahmins as well others, think it impossible to measure the distance of an inaccessible object. By a slight knowledge of the principles of geometry, the scholar learns that this can be accurately ascertained, and is prepared to credit the calculations made by astronomers of the distances of the heavenly bodies. He learns also that the earth is, by actual measurement, less than 8000 miles in diameter, instead of 4,000,000,000, as stated in the shasters; that there is, consequently, no room under the earth for the eight elephants, which are said to support it, each of whose heads is 8000 miles in thickness; that the whole surface of the earth has been examined without finding the Rum Ocean, the Sugar Ocean, the Milk Ocean, the Butter Ocean, and the seven intervening continents, &c.; and that there is no central Mount Meru, 80,000 miles in diameter, and no place for it to stand upon; that the moon is not 1,600,000 miles distant; that the eclipses of the sun and moon are caused by the intervention of the moon and earth, instead of a demon who attempts to devour them; that Ceylon is not a lump of solid gold, one of the summits of Meru that fell into the sea, but is like any other island; that its former king, Bibhikhon, died long ago, and that Ceylon is governed by the English; whereas the shasters say that Bibhikhon should live to the end of the world, and that his country should never be conquered. They learn that the Brahmaputra, Dihing, and Irawadi, are not branches of one and the same stream; that the Ganges rises in the Himalaya mountains, instead of flowing from heaven down the side of Meru, beyond the Himalayas; that the milky way is discovered by the telescope to be composed of small stars instead of being a branch of the Ganges; that the rainbow is caused by the sun's rays falling on the drops of water, whereas the shasters say it is Indra's bow, and made of gold. They learn that the lightning and thunder are connected as the flash of a cannon and the report of it, while, according to the shasters, the thunder only proceeds from the clouds, while the lightning is caused by the darts of Indra, shot against the demons that attempt to drink the rain, which strike fire as they fall upon the rocky mountains that sustain the heavens. From the errors of the shasters on these and many other similar points, the people will readily see that they are only the work of man. These remarks are sufficient to illustrate the important bearing of education and science upon the overthrow of the heathen superstitions around us."

THE WEEPING MOTHER.

Among the thousand griefs that flesh is heir to, there is scarcely one so touching and tender, and which so readily awakens sympathy in the hearts of others, as the grief of a fond mother weeping at the grave of her children. She is their mother. She loves them. She has endured the keenest pangs on their behalf. She has nurtured them with untiring and sleepless vigilance. Her heart-strings were entwined around them, and her life was wrapped up in them. But she is bereaved, and her heart is desolate and sad. In circumstances like this it is, that the consoling influence of Christianity is seen and felt in its heavenly power to soothe and cheer the torn and bleeding heart. We saw a mother bending over the grave of departed innocence. The tear drops chased each other down her wan cheeks, as with a trembling hand she gathered the sweet flowers which affection had caused to be planted there. Beneath that luxuriant rose-tree, was buried all a mother's fondest hopes and expectations. There reposes in unbroken slumber, her first born, her only son. "The last sweet relict of the loved, the dead." When first his eyes opened on this world of sin and sorrow, he was an orphan. Five days only had elapsed since his father's remains were consigned to the tomb. For two years was this little cherub the only consolation of his widowed mother; and when God sent to them another earthly protector, the little A—— was a sweet bond of union between them. But he, so beautiful, so beloved, was now sleeping in the tomb, and his bereaved parents were bedewing it with their tears.

In the same grave was now sleeping his lovely, his only sister, the sweet pledge of a second love. Only three months intervened between their deaths, and their parents were left desolate. But did they mourn as those without hope? Ah, no! they bent beneath the blow, as became Christians; humble, subdued, but not cast down; sorrowful, yet rejoicing. They loved to linger around the spot, which the ashes of their little ones had hallowed, and hold sweet converse with their glorified spirits. Now they had come to mingle their tears, and gaze upon spring's earliest flowers, as they bloomed in sweet luxuriance over their mouldering dust. I saw the bereaved mother, as she gazed upon that "little grassy mound," with an intensity that seemed to penetrate the very confines of the tomb. In that one look was depicted all a mother's soul. As she raised her streaming eyes from the envious earth that concealed their mortal bodies, and fixed them on the blue heavens above, there was in her countenance such an expression of unearthly joy and heavenly hope, that no one could mistake its meaning. It was a sweet vision of faith, looking forward to a blissful re-union in a brighter and better world. She was holding in her hand a beautiful emblem of the little sleepers, from whose graves she had gathered it—a beautiful rose just bursting into bloom and unfolding its beauties to the admiring gaze, and a sweet bud, whose fragrance was yet enshrined in its folded leaves. Both were beautiful, both emblematical, and both were precious to a mother's heart.

It was her last visit to that sacred spot. Years have passed away, and new duties have called us to other scenes. But though she no longer sheds the tear of affection over their graves, yet memory loves to linger there, and the impression of that last visit is as fresh on the tablet of her heart, as are the occurrences of yesterday.

GEMS FROM BISHOP HORNE.

Two learned physcians, and a plain, honest countryman, happening to meet at an inn, sat down to dinner together. A dispute presently arose between the two doctors, on the nature of aliment, which proceeded to such a height, and was carried on with so much fury, that it spoiled their meal, and they parted extremely indisposed. The countryman, in the mean time, who understood not the cause, though he heard the quarrel, fell heartily to his meat, gave God thanks, digested it well, returned in the strength of it to his honest labor, and at evening received his wages. Is there not sometimes as much difference between the polemical and practical Christian?

Sir Henry Wotton being asked if he thought a papist could be saved; "You may be saved," replied he, "without knowing that." An excellent answer to the questions of impertinent curiosity in religious matters.

Many persons spend so much time in criticising and disputing about the Gospel, that they have none left for practising it. As if two such men should quarrel about the phraseology of their physician's prescription, and forget to take the medicine.

To stand in fear of the people's censure or common talk may argue a harmless and peaceable mind, but never a brave and truly heroic soul.

THE GRAVE OF BYRON.

"Eight miles distant is Hucknall, or as it is more commonly and truly called, 'dirty Hucknall;' a collection of huts wretched in appearance; the people idle and ignorant; and the country around rough and uncultivated. A small church crowns the summit of a little hill, with no trees or hedges to relieve the barrenness of the spot; making it altogether as uninviting to the eye, as desolate to the heart, as any misanthrope could desire. We were quickly followed to the church, the object of our visit, by a lad with the keys; and on entering, soon found that the interior corresponded with its outward seeming. It was rude, cheerless, and cold; and yet how many generations yet unborn will seek that church, will tread that aisle, and gaze upon the spot which contains the ashes of one who 'twined his hopes of being remembered in his line with his hand's language!' A small white Grecian tablet, inserted in the wall immediately over the sepulchre, told us, 'In the vault beneath, where many of his ancestors and his mother are buried, lie the remains of George Gordon Noel Byron, the author of Childe Harold's Pilgrimage.' What stranger uninformed of the fact would have supposed that the remains of Byron were entombed in so obscure a sanctuary! I could not but feel however that it was well ordered in the fitness of things that they should repose there; that the place, church, vault and inscription were in good keeping with the character of him who boasted that he stood and should stand alone, remembered or forgot; and he might have added too with great propriety, 'should sleep alone.' The fierce sun may beat upon that house, and the cold winds of winter sigh through its casements; 'but after life's fitful fever he sleeps well;' as calmly, as quietly, as undisturbed in his dark and dreary chamber as the author of the 'Elegy' in his almost perennial daisy-blooming garden."

Appearance of Sardis.—"As the gloom of evening came on," says Dr. Durbin, "and rendered still more impressive the solitude and desolation which reigned around me, I read the epistle which Jesus sent by his servant John to the 'Church at Sardis,' and felt the force of the words: 'Thou hast a name that thou livest and art dead.' This is remarkably true both of the city and of the church. It was sad to think, that of the 'few names even in Sardis, which had not defiled their garments,' not even one was left. No where is the impression of total abandonment, of profound and unbroken solitude—the stillness of death—so deeply made upon the mind of the wanderer through the ruins of the ancient cities in Asia Minor, as at Sardis. An impression prevails among the Turks that the place is unwholesome: 'Every man,' say they, 'who builds a house in Sardis dies;' and, accordingly, they avoid it. A few wandering Turkomans dwell about the ruins in little black tents, and these are all the human inhabitants of the once splendid metropolis of Lydia."

How strange it is that we are constantly praising that past age which our fathers abused, and as constantly abusing the present age which our children will praise.

DENYING THE INSPIRATION OF THE BIBLE.

The Christian Religion acknowledges but one Sacred Book. From this it is derived, and around this, as a central light, all its systems must revolve. Whatever moves in harmony with it shall abide till the heavens pass away. Whatever clashes with it must perish and be forgotten. For several thousand years this precious volume has furnished instruction and nourishment for the spirit of man, and an interpreting response to whatever is deepest in him. Already it has seen more than a hundred generations pass away, yet it remains the only really authentic record of the past.

Nearly all whose opinions are worth much, both believers and unbelievers, acknowledge the great antiquity and high religious character of the Bible. But certain theorists have arisen in modern times, who suppose themselves to have discovered reasons for doubting its inspiration and exclusive authority. In opposition to the fondly-cherished old notion, that it is in very truth the word of God, written under the direct superintendence of the unerring Spirit, they hold that the light of inspiration, in its visits to earth, has struggled through the mists and clouds of prejudice, and hence that what is written is to be examined with caution and received with such modifications as time and circumstances may suggest. The promulgation of such views may justly excite the fears and draw forth the opposition and condemnation of all lovers of the sacred volume. They know that a denial of inspiration, either wholly or in part, leaves the Bible no longer the word of God, and robs man of the only infallible guide to which his soul can ever confidently bow. They know that the natural mind exults in this denial, and that it must for this reason lead to wide-spread and ruinous scepticism. In such circumstances, with good evidence before them that the Scriptures are indeed a communication from Heaven, how can they hesitate to sound the note of warning? To refuse or neglect to do so, is to give up their allegiance to the Author of the Bible, and consent to the ruin of their fellow men.

We do not mean to deny, nor do we doubt, that the forms of piety and worship may exist where the inspiration of the Scriptures is denied. On the contrary, such denial is often accompanied by a multiplication of these forms. Like the worshipers of old, neglecting the word of God, men may "go from mountain to hill," may multiply objects of adoration, and then offer to them the incense of their hearts. But in doing so they will lift up their souls unto idols, and forsake their appropriate resting place. They may talk of their adoration of the workmanship of the divine hand, and yet remain strangers to their own characters and the character of the Creator. To look at the stars and call them "the poetry of heaven"—or even to imagine a being called God is seen shining through them—never did lead a soul forth from the ruins of the fall to a simple trust in the one true God. It may be a great improvement upon the gross idolatory of those who never listened to any voice from the sacred oracles. But it is only a change from the worship of stocks and stones to the worship of an etherialized creature of the imagination. It leaves the soul mid-way in its flight from the land of darkness and danger to that of light and safety. Such has in multiplied instances been the result of denying the inspiration of the Scriptures. Instead of leading men to clear and affecting views of the divine character, such as would transform them into God's likeness and enable them to live conformably to his law, it has thrown a mist around them through which they could only see the beautiful morality of the Bible, while it has given rise to such an overweening self-complacency as effectually to prevent that morality from ever troubling their own hearts with its practical requirements. A most sacred and useful work would he perform, who should strip such a divinity of its multiplied wrappings, and exhibit its shrunken corpse in its cold and lifeless nakedness.

Convention for Bible Missions.—At a Convention for Bible Missions held at Syracuse in February last, a committee was appointed to call a General Missionary Convention for the purpose of considering the scriptural methods and instrumentalities of missionary effort; to inquire whether those methods are employed and those instrumentalities supplied by any of the missionary societies of our own country, and if not, to designate such instrumentalities and methods, and enter into the proper arrangements for sustaining and employing them. This committee—consisting of Gerrit Smith, A. A. Phelps, M. S. Scudder, Wm. Goodell, and Lewis Tappan—have issued a circular inviting all friends of freedom and missions to meet in Convention at Albany on Wednesday, the 2d of September next, for the purposes named above.

Reform in Turkey.—The Sultan of Turkey seems to have commenced in earnest the work of reform. For the first time in the annals of his dynasty, it is said, he has visited his Asiatic dominions, and after his return made a report of the results of his observations, and issued orders for their future better government. Twenty thousand schools are to be established throughout the country, and a normal school for teachers is to be instituted at Constantinople, under Emir Pacha, who was educated at the English University of Cambridge, where he took high degrees for mathematics and classics. The Sultan has also issued orders favorable to the persecuted Armenian Protestants, who have suffered from the excommunications of their bishops. The Armenian primates are "not to be suffered in any way to persecute or intefere with the converts when engaged in their trades and commerce;" but his excellency is to "protect and defend them." A correspondent of the Morning Chronicle, in view of these facts, says: "Protestantism is now planted in the Ottoman Empire, and it is my belief that it will strike its roots deep and spread them wide."

ANTI-SABBATH LAWS.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

Does not your private correspondent err in saying, that some of your correspondents "state that the law prohibits our keeping the Sabbath." I have been a close reader of the Recorder from the beginning, and I do not now recollect any such statement—no, not "only one instance." Your correspondent S. D. has said, (Vol. 3, No. 6,) "Northern laws openly and avowedly declare the fourth commandment abrogated." Does your correspondent not know that this is the case in New Jersey? Sec. 1st says, "Be it enacted, &c., That no traveling, worldly employment, or business, ordinary or servile labor, or work, either upon land or water, (works of necessity and charity excepted,) . . . . . shall be done or performed by any person or persons within this State, on the Christian Sabbath, or first day of the week, commonly called Sunday." Your correspondent knows that the fourth commandment says "the seventh day is the Sabbath;" and that the first day of the week is one of the six days on which the fourth commandment says men "shall labor and do all their work." The feast which Jeroboam commanded on the eighth month, instead of the one which God ordained in the seventh month, no more abrogated the commandment of Jehovah, than does the law of New Jersey which commands the Sabbath of the first day, instead of the one that Jehovah ordained on the seventh day, abrogate the fourth commandment of the decalogue. The New Jersey law prohibits all labor on the first day of the week; the fourth commandment of the decalogue authorizes all labor on that day.

DEDICATION OF THE ALFRED ACADEMY.

ALFRED, N. Y., August 12, 1846.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

Yesterday was a deeply interesting and joyful day for the friends of Education in Alfred and its vicinity. Our new and commodious buildings were dedicated to SCIENCE and RELIGION. It being the commencement of the fall term, there was brought together a large concourse of youth from the surrounding country and immediate neighborhood, as well as parents, friends and citizens. Our school has opened its present term under circumstances truly encouraging. The number of students present far exceeds that of any other term since its commencement, so that the present indications warrant us in hoping for success equal to the enlarged scale of the enterprise. The following is the order of exercises:—

1. Singing by the Choir.
2. Prayer by Eld. S. S. Griswold.
3. Singing.
4. Sermon and Dedication Prayer by the writer; text Proverbs 19: 2—"Also that the soul be without knowledge it is not good."
5. Singing.
6. Benediction by Eld. O. B. Call.

N. V. HULL.

POPERY IN 1716.

In the early part of the last century, several Hungarian reformers, frightened by the fires of persecution, lost their courage and abjured their faith. When the mother church received them back to her embrace, she imposed upon them the following articles, which were published in 1716, and have been re-printed in the original by a German theologian. They appear in the 14th Annual Report of the Evangelical Society of Geneva:—

Holding in one hand a lighted torch, taking the oath with the other, the apostates pronounced the following words:

ART. IV. We confess that every new thing which the Pope has instituted, whether they are or not in the Scriptures, all which he has ordained is true, divine, and beautiful.

ART. V. We confess that the very holy Pope ought to be venerated by every one with divine honor, and with adoration as profound as Jesus Christ himself.

ART. VI. We confess and affirm that the Pope ought to be listened to in all points as the holy father. This is why all heretics who live in a manner contrary to his laws, ought not only to be exterminated by fire without exception, and without mercy, but precipitated body and soul into hell.

ART. VII. We confess that the reading of the Holy Scriptures is the origin of all schisms and sects, as also the source of all blasphemies.

ART. IX. We confess that every priest is much greater than Mary, even the mother of God; for the latter has given birth to the Lord Jesus Christ but once; but a Roman priest sacrifices and creates the Lord Jesus Christ not only when he wishes, but also in all manners as it pleases him; and after having created him he swallows him whole.

ART. XI. We confess that the Pope of Rome has the power to change the Scriptures, to increase them or diminish them at his will.

Religious Destitution in New York.—The population of the city of New York at the present time is not far from 385,000. According to the Directory, there are only 177 evangelical churches in the city. Allowing that each of these churches will accommodate 800 persons—which is a pretty large estimate for the average—and provision is made for a little over 140,000 persons, leaving nearly 250,000 without suitable provision for religious instruction. It is true that this estimate includes a large number of children; but if we throw out all under five years of age, amounting to 116,000, still there remains the vast population of 134,000, within the sound of the church bells, who could not find a seat in the places of religious worship now erected, even if they desired to. In view of such facts, who can speak of the present as a time to relax efforts for the spread of the Gospel? There never was a time when Christians in the city of New York were called upon to make more vigorous exertions than at present for the instruction and salvation of the ignorant. And yet a great portion of the professing Christians in this city are either engaged in building their expensive temples, or congratulating each other upon what they have already done.

Hard to Suit.—The Alabama State Convention some time ago appointed a committee of three to examine all the catechisms prepared for the religious instruction of the colored people, and make a selection of the best. This committee proceeded in the duty assigned them; but on examination found none which satisfied them, and therefore appointed one of their own number to prepare a catechism suited to the wants of the Baptist denomination in Alabama. From these facts we judge that either the slaves or their masters are hard to please. It strikes us as being a very difficult task to prepare a catechism which shall make of the same man a good slave and a good Christian. Right notions of his own dignity, as related to God and eternity, would be likely to excite desires and feelings inconsistent with slavery.

"Honorable" with a Witness.—The so-called, but certainly mis-called, "Honorable Tradesmen's Association," in Hamburg, has decided, by a vote of 193 to 118, that Jews shall not be admitted among its members. And what reason does the reader suppose can be given for such a movement? One of the chief reasons, according to the London Herald, is, that they will not accede to the oft-repeated request to accept any pay-bills of exchange on Saturdays! A grand reason truly; because a class of men have honor enough to follow the dictates of their consciences, therefore they should be excluded from an "honorable association!"

Ronge-ism.—It is stated that the movement in Germany headed by Ronge has obtained a strong hold upon the people. Although but little more than one year has passed since the movement commenced, there are now 162 congregations and 150,000 avowed adherents in Germany. Besides these, there are great multitudes in Switzerland, France, Poland, and the United States, who sympathize with the reformers. The outward success which has attended this reform movement, is said to be greater than that which attended Luther's early career.

Sunday in Paris.—A correspondent of the Morning Star says that in Paris Sunday continues as much as ever to be a day of amusement. The troops are reviewed in the morning before the royal residence; the galleries of the fine arts, closed to the public during the week, are open and crowded on Sundays; the theatres display the grandest attractions, and are filled to overflowing; shops reap a golden harvest on this sacred day; racing, riding, revelry, and parade of all wickedness. The infidelity of the last century is yet cursing France with its fruits.

Bishop of Jerusalem.—The Rev. Samuel Gobat, formerly a missionary among the Abyssinians, was consecrated Bishop of the United Church of England and Ireland at Jerusalem, on Sunday, July 5th. The ceremony took place at Lambeth Chapel, where a sermon was preached by the Bishop of Calcutta. Doubts have been expressed in various quarters as to Mr. Gobat's orthodoxy. But at his ordination he expressed his assent to the creeds, and his subscription to the XXXIX Articles. Of course, therefore, he is sound to the core.

Doctors of Divinity.—The editor of the Vermont Observer, after announcing that the title of Doctor of Divinity was conferred upon the Rev. J. T. Peck, a Methodist preacher, at the late Commencement of Union College, discourses thus: "We remember, nearly a score of years since, of hearing Methodists say, that the reason why other denominations had Doctors of Divinity, was, because their Divinity was SICK. We suspect the disease is contagious!"

Hand of Fellowship Withdrawn.—A letter from the pastor of the church in Milton, W. T., says:—"In consequence of the disaffection of Bethuel C. Church towards this church and the denomination at large, he stated to us that he had made up his mind to unite with some other denomination, and therefore wished to be dismissed from the church; whereupon, after mature deliberation, and in consideration of difficulties which we had no hope could be satisfactorily adjusted, he was dismissed from the church and from fellowship."

Syria and Mount Lebanon.—After having heard a great deal about the sanguinary conflicts between the different tribes and religious sects in the vicinity of Mount Lebanon, our readers will rejoice to read the following extract from a letter written by Mr. Pomeroy, who was in that field on the 26th of May last:—

"They have a very dense population—it is thought not less than 500,000 souls—and is altogether the most hopeful field in Syria. You will be interested to learn that the field is all open, and invites the labor of missionaries. The various wars and revolutions which here occurred within a few years, have all been preparing the way of the Lord. The united testimony of our brethren there is, that the prospects of the mission were never so encouraging as at the present time. The gentle dews of divine influence are falling—the ear is open to hear—the missionaries themselves have received an unction from above—and within a few weeks some five or six persons, it is thought, have come to the saving knowledge of the truth."

Cheering from China.—Mrs. Gutzlaff, missionary in China, in a letter from which an extract is published in the Advocate of Moral Reform, says:—

"I have been nearly twenty years in Asia, and have never observed so much of the Divine power, and manifest influence of the Spirit of God, upon the hearts of the heathen, as just now. The work is increasing and the individuals who express their faith in the Saviour are becoming more numerous; and although their number is still exceeding small compared with the millions of Chinese, still the work has commenced under the auspices of the Saviour and will continue. What rejoices us most is, that so many Chinese are coming forward to preach the gospel, and that with effect and the assistance of the Holy Spirit. Five natives, full of energy and faith, have to-day proclaimed to their countrymen, not an hour or so, but nearly the whole day, in the open air, and in the houses wherever they can find hearers. If our Redeemer is pleased with their services, results will follow of great moment, and this nation, so long lost in idolatry and atheism, will gradually be called to share in the blood-bought privileges of everlasting love."

Noble Examples.—The Boston Atlas brings together a couple of paragraphs which present the bright side of human nature, rarely enough seen in this world:—

The late Earl of Egremont distributed, during the last sixty years of his life, to benevolent objects, the immense sum of £1,200,000; or about $88,800 a year.

A wealthy gentleman in New York, says one of the city journals, if he continues his present course, bids fair to emulate the example of the noble Earl. Among his generous donations, few of which reach the public eye, may be mentioned, $35,000 for the erection of a library building for Princeton Theological Seminary; $5,300 to stereotype one work for the Presbyterian Board of Publication, and $4,000 for another; $15,000 for one mission church in New York, and several ten thousands towards others; $2,000 for one missionary station, &c., &c.

Melancholy and Fatal Event.—The last number of the Morning Star contains a letter from L. G. Gardner, announcing the following fatal and mournful event. If it had occurred on a Sunday, instead of the Sabbath, who doubts that it would have been made the occasion of many warnings against desecrating the Sunday by chopping-bees, quiltings, and sprees?

"In the afternoon of Saturday, the 13th ult., while in Owego to attend my appointments, and while we were holding our covenant meeting, the young people convened some two or three miles west of the meeting-house for a chopping-bee, and a quilting, with the intention to have in the evening what they called a spree. They chopped into a number of trees in order to have them fall in quick succession. On a sudden a tree fell the opposite way from what they intended, and caught Henry Burton, a young man about 17 years of age, between two logs, and crushed the lower part of his body. He soon cried for mercy, and it was thought by some that he found the pardon of his sins; at least he said he was willing to die. He survived about one hour and fifteen minutes. It is said that four others came near being killed."

Fate of the Rioters.—Our readers well remember the bloody riot at Alton, Ill., in which the printing office of an anti-slavery newspaper was destroyed, and the Rev. Mr. Lovejoy murdered. The following facts in the subsequent history of some of the rioters should serve as instructive and solemn warnings. They were given by a correspondent of the Anti-Slavery Standard, the editor of which paper says they may be entirely relied upon:—

1. John Francis, the one who ascended the ladder and fired the ware-house of Godfrey & Gilman, and at whom Lovejoy was aiming to fire at the moment he was shot, is now in the Missouri penitentiary, for an attempt to commit murder, burglary, and robbery, sentenced for forty years.

2. Jennings, (known as Dr. J.,) supposed to be the one who shot Lovejoy, was killed at New Orleans in a bowie-knife fight across a table in a drinking-house, being horridly mutilated in the affray.

3. Dr. Beals, a leader of the mob, and who claimed the credit of killing Lovejoy, flourished for a season as surgeon-general in the Texan army, though all the while grossly dissolute, and extremely intemperate. He accompanied a hunting party to Santa Fe, and was murdered, while on the excursion by a company of Camanche Indians.

4. Roch, one of the most ignorant and wicked of the mob, but possessed of great strength, is now either in the Kentucky or Ohio penitentiary, for twelve years, for some crime—unknown.

The above named were among the most distinguished of the scoundrels. The remainder of them are either dead, in prisons, or traveling vagabonds. Not one of them, to my knowledge, has since succeeded in any respectable business, or attained any reputation except for crime and villainy.

Cheering.—A letter from Miss Vincent, of the Baptist Mission among the Karens, dated April 3, 1846, gives the cheering intelligence that three hundred and seventy-two Karen converts have recently been baptized. The demand for laborers in that field is very pressing, and the letter communicating the foregoing intelligence is accompanied by an earnest appeal for help.

Rev. Dr. Kendrick.—The venerable Dr. Kendrick, of the Baptist Literary and Theological Institution at Hamilton, is in very feeble health. He recently visited New York city for the purpose of obtaining medical advice; but as the physicians gave him no encouragement of relief, he returned to Hamilton to spend the remainder of his days.

Afflicted.—Rev. Eugenio Kincaid, the missionary, has recently met with a severe affliction in the loss of a son about 19 years of age, who was drowned while on a visit to some friends in Pennsylvania.

The Jews.—It is stated that Sir Moses Montefiore has obtained permission from the Emperor of Russia for the migration of ten thousand Jews into Palestine.

CONGRESS—CLOSE OF THE SESSION.

The Session of Congress closed at 12 o'clock on Monday of last week, agreeable to a previous vote. Among its last acts was the passage of the bill to establish the Smithsonian Institution. The interest already accrued on the fund, amounting to about $240,000, will now be applied to the object contemplated by the generous donor. The Board of Regents to carry the bill into effect, consists of fifteen persons—three ex-officio, three Senators appointed by the President of the Senate, three members of the House of Representatives appointed by the Speaker of the House, and six citizens at large appointed by joint resolution of the two Houses. These Regents are required by the law to meet in the city of Washington on the first Monday in September next, to enter upon the duties of their appointment.

Several bills failed for want of time or disposition to attend to them. The bill authorizing a Territorial Government in Oregon, which had passed the House, sleeps upon the table of the Senate. The bill appropriating two million dollars for negotiations with Mexico about peace, having passed the House, was not disposed of by the Senate before the hour of adjournment arrived, and so was lost. The Post Route Bill failed for want of the signature of the Speaker of the House.

NEWS FROM THE ARMY.

The news from the army is meager enough. Every thing of importance is given below. A letter dated July 27, says:—

"The town is now fairly overrun with troops, and a move toward Monterey with a portion of them is talked of. On the 26th the Camanches attacked a rancho between this and Mier, killed nine Mexicans and took off no less than fourteen women and children prisoners. Last night, so rumor has it, they stole upward of twenty horses from Gillespie's men, while they were encamped near the house of an American living four miles below this on the opposite side of the Rio Grande, besides taking off all the animals belonging to the rancho. I can hardly credit this; but should it prove true it will go hard with the Camanches. We have another report to the effect that six Americans, while driving in beef cattle from Loredo to San Antonio, were set upon by the Camanches and all killed, together with fourteen Mexicans who were in company. I learn that the steamer Aid starts with a detachment of troops to-morrow for Mier, to take possession of the place."

New Orleans papers of Aug. 7, say:—

"Gen. Taylor was dispatching regulars to Camargo with all possible haste; likewise sending large supplies of munitions. The highest point on the river at which any of the Volunteer troops were stationed was at Lomita, between Burita and Matamoros.

"Gen. Worth had been ordered to lay out a camp for 10,000 men at Camargo, and establish a depot 60 miles from there on the road to Monterey."

Adin Ballou's Community.—The following description of a community established at Milford under the leadership of Adin Ballou, is given by a correspondent of the Christian Freeman:—

They have now two large workshops, one of which has been in operation for some time, and the other just ready for the workmen to enter. In the former, various branches of business are carried on, though the principal one is the making of boxes for boots and shoes, great numbers of which they are able to dispose of in the immediate vicinity. The printing press is in this building. Here, also, driving the plane, assisting in the printing office, or doing whatever his hands find to do, I met Bro. W. H. Fisk, who formerly resided and preached in Milville. I should have mentioned that the machinery in both the shops is operated by water power. A fine stream runs directly through the premises.

Leaving the shops, we rambled over the farm, seeing here and there groups of happy laborers. In the course of our stroll I was informed that it is now a little more than five years since the community was organized, and a little more than four since they actually took possession of the farm. They had then near 260 acres of ordinary land—a shabby old house, and two or three decayed barns and out-buildings. They have been obliged to contend with many obstacles, with much prejudice from without, and many misgivings from within. But they have gone steadily onward, increasing slowly, toiling patiently, denying themselves heroically, till now they are in possession of about 400 acres of land, houses and shops as before named, and a chapel for religious and educational purposes; and number between 80 and 90 persons.

General Intelligence.

SUMMARY.

William M. Price, Esq., formerly United States District Attorney for the Northern District of New York, committed suicide at Ottignon's Pistol Gallery in Canal-st., by shooting himself. The immediate cause of this act was great pecuniary embarrassment, which had subjected Mr. Price's household furniture to Sheriff's sale. The officer had postponed the affair as long as possible, but on Monday told Mr. Price that the sale must positively take place without farther delay. He did not live to witness it.

The German journals relate numerous instances of the Christian humility of the new Pope. "His cook (says one of these journals) one day served for his dinner seven different dishes; Pius IX. sent for him, and told him that when cardinal he never had more than three, and that he would not now change his habit. His holiness has reduced almost all the expenses of his household. Four thousand Roman scudis which were annually spent in rare plants have been cut off from the budget, and half of the horses of the pontifical stables have been sold."

The Girard Bank opened at the old banking house on Third-st., Philadelphia, for the resumption of banking business. All the debts of the institution, except one or two claims which are in suit, have been paid, and means to meet those disputed issued, as well as any outstanding notes of the bank that may hereafter come to light, have been placed in the hands of the Trustees. The amount saved from the wreck considerably exceeds the expectations of the stockholders.

The Oswego Advertiser announces the death of Wm. G. Turner, who recently had charge of the Electric Telegraph at that place; and attributes his disease to the daily inhalation of the noxious gases arising from the batteries—which are charged with mercury, acted upon by powerful acids—with which his system became impregnated. Similar fatal results were attributed to the Daguerreotype process, on its first introduction; but either greater care has removed the danger, or its extent was greatly exaggerated.

The Boston Transcript says, We have seen some fine specimens of gold, recently discovered in Dedham, by our friend John H. Blake, Esq., of this city, while examining a vein of quartz, which was laid open by his directions, for the purpose of ascertaining whether it was worth working for galene. In the same vein there was found also, besides galena, carbonate and sulphuret of copper. This is probably the first discovery of gold, in place, in New England.

Up to the 1st inst. there has arrived from Europe, at Quebec, this Summer, 27,373 settlers, of whom the greater part were from Ireland, Scotland, and Germany. Last year, up to same day, 22,171 settlers had arrived there. Many of these immigrants take a passage in the timber ships, for a low price, and keep onward till they reach the Western States, the Canaan of their dreams. A similar number, ten or twelve years ago, brought five millions of dollars with them.

A London paper says that a new machine for the making of pins has just been completed. It is called "The Regina." Strings of wire enter it upon the one side by thousands, and almost immediately appear at the other, as pins in the most perfect form, literally headed and pointed to a degree of perfection defying microscopic power to detect a fault in shape and finish.

The Chicaga Journal announces that the work on the Illinois and Michigan Canal is progressing as rapidly to completion as circumstances will admit. A great drawback is the scarcity of hands. Some of the contractors have advertised for 500 laborers. Wages $1 per day. It is said that 2000 men can find employment by applying at the canal office at Lockport, 30 miles from Chicago.

The Baltimore American describes a complete set of camp equipage, made by Messrs. Robinson & Kreemer, tin and sheet iron workers, and intended as a present to Gen. Taylor. The set numbers about one hundred pieces, consisting of kettles, pans, trays, cups, coffee pots, knives and forks, sugar, tea and coffee canister, castors, &c.

Mr. Vanallen, a mechanic of N. J., is said to have invented a clock that runs without weights, and has neither cords nor key, requiring no winding up, and is perfectly portable. It is made entirely of metal, and the works are so simple that a child might understand its principle and set it a-going, and unlike most other clocks it is next to an impossibility to put it out of order, or if by rough usage it wants repairs, any person of common ingenuity can effect them. The inventor claims for it an entire new principle, and has given it the name of the Rack and Pinion Clock.

The scene in the magnetic telegraph office at Baltimore, during the prevalence of the storm on Friday afternoon, is represented to have been beautifully sublime. The electric fluid with which the clouds were charged, took complete possession of the magnetic telegraph lines, rendering them entirely unmanageable in the hands of the operators. The lightning could be seen continually playing around the instruments, and at one time a ball of fire, apparently several inches in circumference, came in on the Washington wires and exploded with a loud report.

The tomato, which has come into universal use, and is deemed a luxury by almost every one, may be preserved in the following manner. When ripe, let them be prepared by stewing as for the table, and seasoned to the liking; put them in small jars (one quart,) with covers. Over the top put a piece of linen or cotton cloth, which will cover, and press the cover on; then pour into the cavity melted mutton tallow, and keep them in a cool dry place in the cellar until required for use. They need only to be warmed to serve them for the table. I use small jars for the reason, that where exposed to the air, they soon ferment."

The Cambridge (Md.) Democrat learns that a fatal disease has made its appearance among the horses in that town and vicinity. No less than eighteen or twenty have died in that county within the last two weeks. The disease is called the "blind staggers."

A scarf shawl has been submitted to the Editor of the London Times. Four colors are so constructed as to fold into twenty different effects; either color can be worn alone, and two together, three or all four, according to the caprices of the wearer. Mr. Robert Kerr, of Paisley, is the enterprising manufacturer who has accomplished the weaving in one piece of this extraordinary shawl, which is announced to be a scientific production of far greater merit than any thing which has appeared in the French exposition of manufacture.

The Bangor Whig and Courier of the 8th inst., states that on the afternoon of the 6th there was a terrific hail-storm at Dixmont, having its center at Dixmont corner. The wind was very high, and many of the hail-stones were not only 'as large as a hen's egg,' but a great deal larger. All the glass exposed to the north was demolished—most of the crops completely ruined—the Corn beaten to the bare poles—the foliage beaten from forest and fruit trees. The storm was of short duration, but terribly destructive; indeed it has been suggested that some of the farmers in that vicinity may need the aid of a generous public, on account of the entire destruction of their crops.

The Naumkeag Factory, at Salem, is also very large. Its length is 400 feet, and its breadth 61 feet. It contains one apartmant, probably the largest, unobstructed by pillars, in this country, if not in the world. It is the upper story, the whole size.

The friends of John B. Gough will be pained to learn that he is now very ill, and but little hope is entertained of his recovery. From a letter, dated Liberty, Bedford Co., Va., Aug., we learn that he is at the residence of Dr. Moseby, near Liberty. We are assured the he receives every attention that his circumstances require, or that friendship can dictate. ☞ Later accounts say he is recovering.

We learn from St. Catharine's Journal that a man by the name of Christopher Enesley shot a young girl, by the name of Elizabeth House, with a musket, in Clinton, Canada West, on the 28th ult., but a small portion of the shot took effect. It is thought she will recover. Enseley put an end to his own life by discharging the contents of a loaded musket into his head.

The Philadelphia North American states that a violent thunder storm visited that city on Sunday afternoon. The rain fell in torrents, and the wind blew a gale, while the lightning and thunder were very severe. Streets were flooded, cellars were filled, awnings ripped, trees and houses were struck by lightning, and one or two persons injured.

The extent of the fire at Laprairie has hardly been exaggerated. The Montreal Courier, of Friday, 7th inst., says that only fifty houses are left standing; and that 130 houses in the old town and 11 in the new were burnt, the destruction of property amounting to £50,000. A great number of cattle were destroyed.

An arrival at St. Joseph brings news twenty days later than that brought by recent travelers from Oregon. In the interim, however, nothing had occurred of importance in Oregon. On their return, the travelers had no difficulties with the Indians. They brought several hundred letters, which were deposited in the Post Office at St. Joseph.

The Jamaica (L. I.) Farmer of the 11th inst. says: The disease among horses, which we noticed in our last number, has not at all abated. Over one hundred of these valuable animals have died in this town, during the past three weeks. Recently, it has made its appearance among the mules, and several have died. As yet no remedy has been discovered.

A person who has just returned from the eastern part of Long Island, says the potato crop in that quarter is almost ruined. Some farmers will not have a bushel of sound potatoes. The cause of the disease appears to be different in different cases; but in some, a worm has been discovered in every stock, cutting off the supplies of the tuber, and soon, if not prevented, causing destruction to the tuber itself. If, immediately after the tops begin to die in consequence of these attacks, they are mowed down, the tubers, it is said, will receive no injury except what results from being prematurely arrested in their growth. They will not be so large nor so good as if they had been allowed to ripen, but on the other hand they will not rot, nor become discolored.

The Potato rot has made its appearance in the Great Miami Valley. One field of eighteen acres, it is represented, is so badly injured that the owner has turned his hogs upon it. The crop this season in the West generally, is said to be a very abundant one, and generally of excellent quality, and we hope that it is not seriously to be injured by disease.

It appears that the number of applicants for the benefit of the Bankrupt Law, heretofore passed, was 33,739; number discharged from the payment of their debts, 28,291; refused by the courts, 766; applications still pending, 4,468; aggregate number of creditors, given by the applicants, 1,049,603; aggregate debts, $440,934,615; property surrendered, $43,697,307; cost of judicial proceedings, $602,322.

A friend from Clintonville, Lancaster, Mass., informs us that a factory is now being erected in that village, which is 700 feet in length, and 50 feet wide. Hight, one story. It has been in process of erection three years. The owners are Boston men. It is intended for the manufacture of Ginghams.

At a quarter past one o'clock P. M., a telegraphic dispatch was received at the office of the Chief of Police from Springfield, stating that a gentleman there by the name of John Healy had just been robbed of $200, and describing the thief named Catherine Holleran. At half-past six o'clock in the evening officer Bloom had the pleasure of sending word by telegraph to the gentleman who had been robbed, that the thief was arrested on her arrival in the New Haven boat, and his money secured.

The Grand Jury of Cayuga County, upon the testimony of the prison officers, last week found a bill of indictment against Russell Chappel, Agent of the State Prison, for providing unwholesome food for the convicts. The officers testified that he knowingly ordered to be cooked for their use, a quantity of injured and spoiled codfish, which had been condemned by the physician.

The Rockville (Md.) Journal says: "There is a singular disease prevailing among the colored people of this neighborhood. We have heard of several lately, who have been taken very suddenly, without any previous indication of its approach. We have heard of no white person being attacked. The disease is said to be something similar to a fit."

The house of Fred'k Morang, in Boston, was broken open on Monday night, and a mahogany portable desk, containing about $4,500 in bills of the Globe and New England Banks, Boston, was stolen therefrom. Fifteen or twenty $100 bills, the remainder in small bills. A reward of $500 is offered for the recovery of the money.

Mr. William Shaw, broker, fell down in Exchange-st. Boston, on Tuesday morning, in an apoplectic fit, and died that same afternoon. Upon searching his clothes which he wore that morning, it was ascertained that he had been robbed of between $1,000 and $2,000, in bank bills, and notes of hand.

A new printing press has been invented in England with which one stout boy can work off 1500 sheets per hour.

A writer in the Journal of Commerce, dating from Slab City, in the Western part of N. York, says:—"I left Avon on the evening of the 8th, with the expectation of staying the night at Caledonia, but on arriving at that place I found the Hotels had been fenced in. It was indeed a novel sight to see a stout rail fence encircling those large hotels. It seems that the inhabitants of the town voted 'No License,' and the tavernkeepers, feeling indignant at the measure, determined to cut off every accommodation from the traveling community. Hence those fences to prevent them access to their sheds and pumps."

The Boston Transcript says that on the 13th the bark Chesapeake cleared for Galveston, Texas, taking out a cargo of ice, pine-lumber and potatoes. This makes the second vessel that has cleared from that city for the above port, direct, since the admission of the Lone Star into the Union.

Cist's Advertiser informs us that William Harrison, who came to this country in 1792, was the first bank note engraver in the United States. He engraved the plates for the United States Bank. He had five sons all engravers. Richard H. one of the sons, came out to Marietta in 1821, and finished the first copperplate engraving ever executed in Ohio. His two sons now carry on the same business in Philadelphia. Another brother left four sons, all engravers. One of these has a son learning the business. Here is a singular case to occur in this country. A family for four generations following the same branch of mechanical business.

The police of Georgia recently arrested one Robinson, a negro, stealer, who confessed himself one of a gang concerned in stealing five or six negroes, and in robbing the mail. A stage driver on the western mail route, between Quincy and Mariana, named Alvin Flowers, was a partner in the gang, and the custom was to throw the mail bags off at a tavern in Chattahoochie, kept by R. Scott, take them to a back room and open them by false keys. After sifting the contents and detaining whatever they thought valuable, the bags were re-locked and sent to the post office. The persons concerned are all under arrest.

A correspondent of the Boston Courier makes the following forcible remark:—I never see a rich man denying himself the comforts of life, and striving night and day to add to his riches, but the picture of a jackass, with a pair of panniers on his back, rises to my mind, and in my mind's eye, I see him groping, with his nose in the gutter, fishing up garbage, and twisting his crooked neck to deposit it in his basket, and continuing to do so until he sinks under the load and rots beneath it.

The cultivation of the tea-plant in France bids fair to be a successful experiment. The climate of the South of France is said to be well adapted to the growth of the China herb, which being tried in the open air has developed its leaf finely. A warm but slightly humid atmosphere is requisite, and the plant transplanted from its native air, which will not grow in Algeria on account of too parching heat, shoots forth with excellent promise in the more genial climate of old Gaul.

The Boston Courier tells a story which proves that matrimony, like knowledge, is sometimes pursued under difficulties of the most tantalizing description. A gentleman went to Bristol, R. I. from New York, on Sunday, with the expectation of being married that evening; but when he arrived at the residence of the bride, he found that the ceremony could not be performed because they had not been three times published. They then went to Massachusetts and made application to a clergyman at Dighton, and to another at Taunton, but with no better success, as the Massachusetts laws also required a "publication." They went to Boston on Monday, and finding that they could not be married, even after offering to give bonds to indemnify a clergyman for all damages, and an extra fee, they took the steamboat line for New York in the afternoon.

She died in the triumphs of faith. Not only was she ready, but she expressed herself anxious to depart, and died without a struggle or a groan.

TO OUR LOCAL AGENTS.—Permit us to call your attention to the fact, that our receipts for a few weeks past have been very small—much smaller than during the same period last year, notwithstanding the increase of our subscription list. The Recorder is dependent mainly upon the receipts from subscribers for the means of meeting its liabilities. Many thanks are due to our Local Agents and friends, through whose aid our wants have been very promptly supplied in times past. Miscellaneous.

TO AN ABSENT WIFE.

BY G. D. PRENTICE,
Junior Editor of the Louisville Journal.

'Tis morn—the sea breeze seems to bring
Joy, health, and freshness on its wing—
Bright flowers, to me all strange and new,
Are glittering in the early dew—
And perfumes rise from every grove,
As incense to the clouds that move,
Like spirits, o'er yon welkin clear—
But I am sad—thou art not here.

'Tis noon—a calm, unbroken sleep
Is on the blue wave of the deep—
A soft haze like a fairy dream
Is floating over wood and stream—
And many a broad, magnolia flower,
Within its shadowy woodland bower,
Is gleaming like a lovely star—
But I am sad—thou art afar.

'Tis eve—on earth the sunset skies
Are painting their own Eden dyes—
The stars come down and trembling glow
Like blossoms in the waves below—
And like some unseen sprite, the breeze
Seems lingering 'mid these orange trees,
Breathing its music round the spot—
But I am sad—I see thee not.

'Tis midnight—with a soothing spell
The far tones of the ocean swell,
Soft as a mother's cadence mild,
Low bending o'er her sleeping child—
And on each wandering breeze are heard
The rich notes of the mocking-bird
In many a wild and wond'rous lay—
But I am sad—thou art away.

I sink in dreams—low, sweet, and clear,
Thy own dear voice is in my ear—
Around my cheek thy tresses twine—
Thy own loved hand is clasped in mine—
Thy own soft lip to mine is pressed—
Thy head is pillowed on my breast—
Oh! I have all my heart holds dear—
And I am happy—thou art here.

THE CIDER PLOT.

BY THEODORE THINKER.

When I was an apprentice, some years ago, I lived—no matter where, and served—no matter whom. There were three apprentices besides myself; and it seems necessary to say, that, at the time when the incident happened which I am about to relate, we had neither of us completed that branch of husbandry called the sowing of wild oats, and as the soil was very favorable for the development of that species of grain, we were perhaps a little too industriously engaged in its cultivation.

One day our employer bought a cask of cider—Newark cider, I believe they call it—and the greater portion of it was nicely bottled, and placed in a dark corner of the cellar, to be used, not for making vinegar, or mince pies, but for a very different purpose—which may be surmised by such as remember that in those days the juice of the apple had a much better reputation than it has now. We were all allowed our share of the beverage. But we were not satisfied. We resolved ourselves into a sort of committee of the whole, one afternoon; and after a long and somewhat spirited debate, came to the unanimous conclusion, that in the course of human events, it became necessary to employ the most effective measures to procure additional supplies from the cellar. Now it so happened, that these measures were not of the most peaceable and honorable kind. Such was their nature, in fact, that if we had been discovered in the act of resorting to them, it would no doubt have been deemed necessary, in the general course of human events, that we should be soundly whipped.

The plan was to seize a bottle once in a while, something after the manner of privateers; though I believe the trade of privateering is regarded as piracy now-a-days. How times are changed! We were to go on this expedition in rotation, from the oldest downward. We commenced, and two of us had performed the feat. It came George Reese's turn next. You didn't know George, I suppose. But I wish you had known him. I think you could appreciate the story better, if you knew him as well as I did. Well, George went down cellar, with his pitcher in his hand, thirsting for cider and glory. You must know there was a flight of stairs, that led directly to the cellar from the room we occupied. You should know, too, that we went down without a light, and felt our way in the dark. George had not been below two minutes, when we heard a report from the cellar very like the discharge of pistol. It was loud enough to alarm the whole house. We were frightened. We had reason to be. Who knows, thought we, but they have set a spring-gun for us, and poor George is badly wounded? We waited in silence, and with not a little anxiety, for the hero to come.

He came at last, and a sorry-looking fellow he was. He was covered from head to foot with yeast! The cook had placed her bottle of emptyings, tightly corked, in the village of cider bottles; and the truth flashed upon us at once that George had made a mistake, and captured the wrong bottle; and most of its contents, being a little angry at the time, were discharged into his face. But this was not all. George thought he had encountered a cider bottle, after all, for he could see nothing in the cellar, and he had poured what little remained of his yeast into the pitcher, and brought it up with him. When he made his appearance, there was such a noisy trio of laughter as that old kitchen had seldom heard before. This brought in the cook, and she laughed as loudly as the rest of us. Then to crown all, the lady of the house, hearing the noise, came to see what we were all about; and she laughed the loudest of anybody. I shall never forget the image of George Reese, as he entered that room. It gives me a pain in the side now, to think of it.

Moral 1. Before undertaking any enterprise similar to the cider-plot, it is desirable to count the cost.

Moral 2. In your pursuit after glory, take care that you do not come in contact with something else that is not so pleasant.

[Youth's Cabinet.

The Dignity of Labor.—Gladden life with its sunniest features, and gloss it over with its richest hues, and it becomes a poor painted thing, if there be in it no toil—no hearty, hard work. The laborer sighs for repose. Where is it? What is it? Friend, whoever thou art, know it is to be found alone in work. No good, no greatness, no progress is gained without it. Work, then, and faint not, for therein is the well-spring of human hope and human happiness.

FACTS ABOUT PERU.

By a correspondent of the Journal of Commerce.

Dietic Habits in Peru.—A woman here never nurses her child when she is angry, for fear of imparting to it a cholic temperament. If unable to perform this maternal function, she procures a black nurse, but never an Indian. The red-skin she feels assured will give it a fiery, irrascible disposition. For the same reason she will not feed it from the milk of a sorrel or brindle cow, if a black one can be obtained. The mass of the population subsist mostly on vegetable diet. Maize, peas, beans, barley, rice, and arrow root, are made into a sort of pulp, or mush, which is covered with molasses or sugar. This is the great edible staple of the people of Peru. It gives them slickness without strength, and fat without fire. They retain their flesh till they pass forty; then they begin to dwindle away; at sixty they are extremely thin; and at seventy have hardly substance enough to cast a shadow. All this too, in the most mild and equable climate on the globe. The thermometer in Lima seldom falls below 65, and rarely ascends above 82.

Abolition of Slavery in Peru.—Slavery is approaching its extinction in Peru. The 152d article of the Constitution declares that no one shall be born a slave in the Republic, and extends this provision back to 1820. Consequently, for the last 26 years all have been born free. The Constitution also declares that every slave imported from other countries shall be free the moment he touches the soil of Peru; and it deprives of citizenship any one who shall engage in this traffic. This provision of the Constitution has been enforced with more energy, perhaps, than any other. No aspirant or usurper has dared to trample on it.

Effect of Climate on Color.—The climate of Peru has a singular effect on the color of different races. It bleaches the black man into the mulatto, and bronzes the white into the Indian. It dwarfs the European in stature, in the second and third generation, and deprives him of fire and energy. The native youth, in their boyhood, exhibit intelligence and force; but as they grow up, they become feeble in body and irresolute in mind. The Indian who inhabits the ravines and table lands in the Cordilleras, is the only one who preserves his vigor. To his half-civilized enterprise and hardihood, Peru must look for her regeneration.

No Rain in Peru.—It never rains in Peru. The vapors, as they ascend from the sea, are attached to the summits of the Cordilleras, where they are condensed into showers. But on the line of coast, which lies between the sea and the base of these stupendous mountains, the rain never falls. All agriculture is the result of artificial irrigation. But the frequent and full streams, flowing from the Cordilleras, make this comparatively easy.

CARNIVALS IN PERU—WHITE AND BLACK.

The leading article in the July number of Blackwood, is a notice of a book of travels in Peru, by a German naturalist, Von Tschudi. We find in it many things that are new to us, about this country, which has not been much examined or described by tourists. Of the more entertaining passages, the descriptions of the Carnival at Lima, and of the same festival at Xea by the negroes, will amuse the reader.

Carnival at Lima.

We turn a few pages to come to the carnival. The chief sport of that festive season consists in sprinkling the people with water, concerning the purity of which the sprinklers are by no means fastidious. From nearly every balcony, liquors of the most various and unsavoury descriptions are rained down upon the passers by; at the street corners stand negroes, who seize upon all who are not of their own caste, and roll them in the gutter, unless they prefer paying a certain ransom, in which case they get off with a trifling baptism of dirty water. Troops of young men force their way into the houses of their acquaintances, and attack the ladies. First they sprinkle them with scented water, but when that is expended, the pump, and even worse, is had recourse to, and the sport becomes brutality. The ladies, with their clothes dripping wet, are chased from room to room, become heated, and are frequently rendered dangerously ill. Diseases of the lungs, and rheumatic complaints, are the invariable consequences of the carnival, to whose barbarous celebration many fall victims. Besides this, every year murders occur out of revenge for this brutal treatment. One favorite trick is to fill a sack with fragments of glass and earthenware, and fasten it to the balcony by a cord, the length of which is so calculated, that when let down the sack hangs at about seven feet from the ground. The sack is kept on the balcony till somebody passes, and is then suddenly thrown out, but, thanks to the cord, remains at a safe distance above the heads of those below. Although it is tolerably well known that in most streets there is at least one of these infernal machines, yet the sudden shock and alarm are so great, that persons have been known to fall down senseless on the spot. Horses are thus made to shy violently, and frequently throw their riders. The practice is each year forbidden by the police, but the prohibition is disregarded.

Carnival at Yea.

The negro carnival, which Dr. Tschudi witnessed at Yea, appears to us, of the two, a more civilized performance than the Creole carnival at Lima. In various of the streets large arches, tastefully decorated with ribbons, are erected; the negresses and zambas dance beneath them; while the allotted task of the men is to gallop through without being stopped. If the women succeed in checking the horse and pulling the rider out of the saddle, the latter has to pay a fine, and gets laughed at to boot. It is difficult to know which to admire most; the speed of the horses, the skill of the riders, or the daring of the women, who throw themselves upon the horse as he comes on at full gallop. As the horsemen approach, they are pelted with unripe oranges, which, thrown by a strong armed zamba, are capable of inflicting tolerably hard knocks. Dr. Tschudi saw one negro who, during a whole hour, galloped backwards and forwards without being stopped, and concluded by giving an extraordinary proof of strength. At the very moment that he passed under the arch, he stooped forward over his horse's neck, caught up a negress under each arm, and rode off with them!

The Moon in Lord Rosse's Telescope.—With respect to the moon, every object on its surface of the height of one hundred feet was now distinctly to be seen; and, he had no doubt, that, under very favorable circumstances, it would be so with objects sixty feet in height. On its surface were craters of extinct volcanoes, rocks, and masses of stones almost innumerable. He had no doubt whatever that if such a building as he was then in were upon the surface of the moon, it would be rendered distinctly visible by these instruments. But there were no signs of habitations such as ours—no vestiges of architectural remains to show it is or ever was inhabited by a race of mortals similar to ourselves. It presented no appearances which could lead to the supposition that it contained any thing like the green fields and lovely verdure of this beautiful world of ours. There was no water visible—not a sea, or a river, or even the measure of a reservoir for supplying town or factory; all seemed desolate. Hence would arise the reflection in the mind of the Christian philosopher—Why had this devastation been? It might be further inquired—Was it a lost world? Had it suffered for its transgression? Analogy might suggest the question—Had it met the fate which Scripture told us was reserved for our world? It was obvious that all this was mysterious conjecture. [Dr. Scoresby's Lect. on Astronomy.

Spanish Magistrates.—In a late number of the Foreign Quarterly Review, the following anecdote is told, to illustrate the corruption of the Spanish magistracy:

"A rich miller in the country was fixed upon by three persons as a fit object to be plucked. It so chanced, that shortly before the time appointed for the attack of his house, a party of traveling soldiers had requested lodging of him for the night, which he had granted; and these soldiers were sleeping above, when the robbers arrived and demanded his money. The miller told them he would go and fetch it; he awoke the soldiers, and with their assistance killed the three thieves and left them lying on the ground. The next day, as it was proper the authorities should be made acquainted with the circumstances, he went to the house of the alcade—magistrate—of his village, to call him to make his examinations. The alcade was not at home; on finding which he proceeded to the next in office, who was not at home either. He then went on to the third; neither was this one to be found, nor did any body know any thing of either of the three. At last, therefore, he returned home and prepared to bury them himself, when, on taking off the masks which concealed their faces, lo, and behold, there lay the three alcades!"

Curious Laws.—It is stated that among the laws of Edward the Third, there were some which illustrate in a forcible manner the barbarities of the age. A criminal of Derbyshire was sentenced to have his hand fixed on a table, with a knife stuck through it; and in this agony and attitude he remained till he had freed himself by cutting his hand off. Any one striking another in a court of justice, was liable to lose the same member; and the act of Parliament ordains that in order to give more solemnity to the operation, the master-cook and sergeant of the larder should attend with dressing-knives, the sergeant of the wood-yard with a chopping-block, the yeoman of the sculley with a pan of coals, and the sergeant farrier with hot irons, for the purpose of searing the stump. Whoever gave a blow in a church-yard, was punishable with the loss of the right ear, which was cropped in a way that showed small regard towards mercy. Severus condemned a notary for the exhibition of a forged pleading, by ordering the nerves of his fingers to be cut, so that he might never be able to draw another; and the 8th of Elizabeth, c. 3, visits with imprisonment and the loss of the left hand the sending of five sheep out of the kingdom, or the embarkation of them on board of any ship; and this too without any exception for the necessary provision of the ship's crew. The enactment was intended to protect the manufacturers of cloth!

Something worthy of notice.—When I was in Berlin, I went into the public prison, and visited every part of the establishment. At last I was introduced to a very lage hall, which was full of children, with their books and teachers, and having the appearance of a Prussian school room. "What," said I, "is it possible that all these children are imprisoned here for crime?" "Oh no," said my conductor, smiling at my simplicity, "but if a parent is imprisoned for crime, and on that account his children are left destitute of the means of education, and are likely to grow up in ignorance and crime, the government places them here, and maintains and educates them for useful employment. This was a new idea to me. I know not that it has ever been suggested in the United States; but surely it is the duty of the government, as well as its highest interest, when a man is paying the penalties of his crimes in a public prison, to see that his unoffending children are not left to suffer and inherit their father's vices. Surely, it would be better for the child, and cheaper, as well as better, for the State.

Hereditary Instinct.—In Dialogue IV. some remarks are made upon hereditary instincts. Mr. Rouillon has related an instance of such instinct in the hunting dogs of Mexico. Were they to attack the deer in front, whose weight exceeds their own six fold, they would be destroyed, and have their backs broke, as happens to other dogs ignorant of the manœuvre; which consists in attacking from behind, or laterally, and seizing the very moment when the deer, in running, rests upon two legs. The dog then takes hold of him by the belly, and throws him over. The dog of pure breed inherits this stratagem, and never attacks otherwise. Should the deer come upon him unawares (from not seeing him,) he steps aside, and makes his attack at the proper time in the animal's flanks; other dogs, however, superior in sagacity and strength, make the attack in front, and have their necks broken by the deer. So, too, some of our English miners carried out greyhounds to hunt the hares in Mexico. The air on that elevated platform, 9,000 feet above the level of the sea, is so rare that the mercury stands at 19 inches generally, and the dogs were soon exhausted with running in such an atmosphere; but their whelps are not at all incommoded by it, and hunt as easily as dogs of the country.

FACTS FOR THE CURIOUS.

Flax is a native of Persia; and cotton was first grown in India. Silk was first manufactured in China, about two thousand seven hundred years before the Christian Era.

There are more than two hundred burning mountains, or volcanoes, on the earth. These volcanoes are believed to be the chimneys, or vents, by which the gaseous matter escapes, that is generated by the internal fires of the earth. According to some geologists, the fires raging in the earth are so intense, that, at a depth of ten miles, the earth is a red heat; at a depth of twenty miles, it is a white heat; and at the depth of fifty miles, the hardest rocks would become liquid!

The air, or atmosphere, is an elastic fluid, and surrounds the earth, and extends between forty-five and fifty miles above its surface.

The rose is found in all countries—it adorns the whole earth. Poets of every age and clime have eulogized it as the most beautiful and exquisite of flowers. Anacreon calls it the "flower of flowers."

The philosopher Thales, termed one of the wise men of Greece, taught that water was the sole element of which the universe is composed; and he believed that amber and the magnet possessed life.

The highest mountains upon the earth are the Himmalah in Hindostan, the loftiest peak being a little more than five miles high.

What is meant by the "Solar Cycle" is a period of twenty eight years, at the end of which time the days of the week return to the same days of the month on which they were at its commencement. The "Lunar Cycle" is a period of nineteen years, at the end of which the new and full moon return on the same days of the year as at its beginning.

Aristotle, in his history of animals, states that all animals have a mouth, and possess the sense of touch; these two characteristics, he considers the only ones that are indispensable. He also says that winged insects which have stings in the head, never have more than two wings: but insects which have stings in the posterior part, have four wings. His classification of animals is considered correct, by the learned, although he lived more than two thousand years ago! An ancient historian has preserved the title of two hundred and sixty works of this great man, which treat of almost the whole rang of human knowledge. Many of his writings have been lost.

If a person would read one hundred volumes a year, it would require five hundred years to read all the books worth reading in the English language alone!

VARIETY.

LEGAL SUCCESS.

By cost impoverished, and grown old in woes,
I've gained my suit! and strut in tattered clothes;
I've gained the suit! let gladness rend the hall!
The man who lost it has no clothes at all!

Lawyers are generally considered quite as sharp as any other class in society, but they are sometimes outwitted so amusingly as to bring down upon them the joke of all. Such was the case with a friend of ours, says the Springfield Republican, who stands at the head of the profession in a neighboring city. A fellow was arrested for passing counterfeit money; he employed our friend as counsel to defend him. He did so and successfully, and on the ground that the prisoner was innocent in his motives—that he was not aware that the bills were bad which he passed. Our hero was paid his fee on the spot—a clean ten-dollar bank bill, and his client went on his way rejoicing. The lawyer soon after offered his money at the bank, and behold his $10 bill in question, was pronounced counterfeit! He has not defended a counterfeiter since.

We see in the Cincinnati papers of the 4th, the announcement of the demise of the old brown dog of Cincinnati, a notice of which remarkable animal was published in the Picayune some months since; for more than twenty years this old dog has remained about the post-office, night and day, merely tottering off to get his meals. It is said that he there lost his master many years ago, and till the day of his death hovered about the spot in the vain hope that he would one day return.

It is not so generally known as it ought to be, that pounded alum possesses the property of purifying water. A table-spoonful of pulverized alum sprinkled into a hogshead of water (the water stirred at the same time) will, after a few hours, by precipitating to the bottom the impure particles, so purify it that it will be found to possess nearly all the freshness and clearness of the finest spring-water. A pailful, containing four gallons, may be purified by a single tea-spoonful.

Coldridge, who was a very awkward rider, was accosted by a wag, who remarked this peculiarity.

"I say, young man, did you meet a tailor on the road?"

"Yes," replied Mr. C., (who was never at a loss for a rejoinder,) "I did; and he told me if I went on a little farther that I should meet a goose!"

The assailant was struck dumb, while the traveler jogged on.

The Boston Courier says, "Bishop Doane, of New Jersey, is in the habit of receiving packages from Europe, addressed 'To the Right Reverend Lord Bishop of New Jersey.' This is the first time that we knew we had any Lords by title, though many a time and oft our eyes have been offended by an affectation of manner and style of the foreign nobility. Servants and carriages in livery are increasing among the New Yorkers, and even in Boston—puritanical Boston—two or three families indulge in this monkeyism."

Though a man without money is poor, a man with nothing but money is still poorer.

Nothing instructs a man more than his misfortunes; if he surmounts one, it will arm him against many dangers.

Some one has defined veneration thus: Placing too much confidence in the minister, and sleeping in church during the sermon!

Advices from Naples to June 27th, state that Mount Vesuvius was in full eruption, and vomiting forth masses of lava with great noise. During the night the flames presented a magnificent spectacle.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant andeconomical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institntion, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25
EXTRAS PER TERM.
Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

THE MIND.

The mind of man is an ever-active yet invisible principle. In former ages the talents of the learned were expended in vain attempts to fathom it, and throw aside the veil which concealed its connections with and operation upon the corporeal parts. Various and strange are the systems to which those attempts have given rise, all having a more manifest tendency to lead the mind from its legitimate sphere into the dark labyrinths of inappreciable abstractions, than to throw any ray of light upon the darkness in which it was enveloped. While by the visionary systems of Berkley and Hume the physical world has been robbed of its materiality, other and equally presumptuous egotists have endeavored to rob the mind of immateriality, and convert it into a ponderable agent, subject to all the laws which govern the material universe, consequently to dissolution and decay.

So eager have men been to escape the conviction of a future state, that they have seized the meagre gleanings of these self-exploded systems for correct data, and by reasoning falsely from false premises have proven the soul's mortality. If it be admitted that the mind is material, it does not follow that it is destined to annihilation. To suppose that one particle of matter has ceased to exist, or will ever cease to exist, is opposed to facts which chemistry and kindred sciences have developed. The fact that certain organizations disappear, affords no evidence of the extinction of matter. The end of that organization being accomplished, the liberated elements universally enter into new arrangements for new ends. To suppose the grave the ultimatum of man's existence, impugns the wisdom of Him who spoke worlds into existence. But the supposition is absurd, opposed to science and philosophy; and equally absurd is the supposition that the mind, being immaterial, is inseparably connected with the body. Many persons of mature years retain the impressions made on the mind in juvenile years; in the interim the body has undergone several changes, old particles having gone into new arrangements, and new ones taken their place; and yet the impressions remain. Now either the memory (a property of the mind) is distinct and uninfluenced by the changes of the body, or else the particles of matter with which it is identified possess the curious power of transmitting impressions made upon them to their successors. But whether we listen to the voice of conscience, or resist its warnings, the truth forces itself upon our convictions, that what is essentially ourselves, the part that thinks, and wills, and reasons, is necessarily immortal, and that the germ of dissolution finds there no soil congenial to its growth. In vain we try to escape from the anticipation of a future reckoning. That right and wrong are permanent principles growing out of the relation of things, is a fact which forces itself upon every sane mind. If not one of the minor laws which govern the physical universe may be violated with impunity, how vain to suppose that no retribution will follow a violation of those laws regulating the relation of man to his Maker. Futile as have been the attempts to hide man's responsibility beneath the rubbish of those sophistical systems, the light of modern day has at length dispelled one cloud, and man has learned that he knows not himself. The depths of mind can only be fathomed by Him from whose breath it emanated. To unfold the nature of its operations upon matter, transcends the limit of man's ability. Matter and mind are only known by certain properties; but beyond the simple knowledge of their existence and some of the laws regulating them, we cannot advance one step. Whether in their sub stratum they are alike, human ability has never determined. We say to resolve matter into its elementary principles by chemical analysis; but we have only exhausted our resources. We ascribe certain properties to bodies, as attraction, but the cause of attraction is a mystery. We note certain manifestations of mind; by its intercourse with the external world through the corporeal senses, certain impressions are produced which remain after the object has passed away; this is called memory; but who has learned the nature of that mysterious connection between external objects and internal emotions. The mind controls the body. My hand moves obedient to an imperative impulse; but who has fathomed the nature and application of that power?

Where, in the range of created things, is the wisdom of God more strikingly displayed than in the connection which he has established between mind and matter. By our senses we gain a knowledge of objects, their properties, essential and peculiar, and by a process peculiar to the mind, we compare and associate, combine any arrange, those acquired facts.

The mind is fitted for the reception of truth for a noble purpose, no less than the glory of God and the good of man. Perverted indeed must be that mind which is not drawn out in love to Him who is so plainly reflected from all his works—which breathes no responsive song to nature's gladsome notes—which feels no promptings of affection for the Author of his existence. If he loves Him not, he seeks not his glory; if he seeks not the glory of the Creator, he regards not the good of the creature, and thus becomes narrowed by selfishness, till he conceives the world created for him, and the human family subservient to him. His heart, unused to tender emotions, beats not responsive to kindred ones. His eyes, trained to meaner ends, shed no answering tears to those of aggravated sorrow. He is alike uninfluenced by the gentle tones of affection, and the imploring tones of sorrow—a walking automaton—a "statue in the quarry." Such the man of perverted mind. He sees no beauty and reflects none. Not such the man of cultivated mind. He sees a God in every leaf. His heart, alive to every holy emotion, beats in unison with the heart of his brother man. His ear, attuned to melody divine, and harmony sweet, is ever open to songs of gladness or wails of despair. The prayers of the poor attend him—the blessings of the comforted are upon him. Flowers spring up in his path. He lays him in the grave; flowers planted by the hand of love, and watered by the dews of affection, bloom above his peaceful head. He lives in the memory of grateful posterity. The light of his example will continue to shine long after the sculptured marble shall have crumbled to dust. D. E. M.

FEAST OF THE AISAOUA.

[Among all the delusions and fanaticism dignified with the term religious, the following graphic sketch, which I extract from Captain Kennedy's Algeria and Tunis in 1845, of the Feast of the Aisaoua, a sect of the Mohammedans, out-herods Herod for its absurdity, and far transcends all the antics and cruel inflictions I have ever met with, in a not very limited range of reading. It is profitable for Christians to peruse such narratives, revolting as they are, that they may learn to appreciate the high privileges they enjoy in living under the light of the ever-blessed Gospel; that we may behold what human nature is in its crude, unenlightened, unregenerate state; that we may behold the rock from whence we were hewn, and the pit out of which we have been digged, by the grace of Him who gave himself for us, to purify unto himself a peculiar people.—W. M. F.]

While drinking our coffee, we observed a boy who, leaning with folded arms upon a stick, watched every motion we made. The boy's countenance was disgustingly repulsive, and the vacant yet cunning expression of his features, more those of a brute than of a human being, as well as the form of his misshapen head, stamped him as an idiot from his birth. A tattered bernous hung loosely on his shoulders, and cold and wet as the evening was, he stood staring in at the entrance of the tent, while the other Arabs, whom curiosity had at first attracted, gathered round the fire a few yards distant. Knowing that the Arabs regard as saints, madmen and those whose intellects are effected, I paid no more attention to him, and left the tent for a few minutes. When I returned, the boy was still there, fixed in the same attitude; and I was told that he had just made a display of his sanctity, by holding in his naked hand a live scorpion, and then eating it, without suffering in the least from its poisonous sting. As he was standing close to the tent, there could be no doubt but that he performed the disgusting feat of devouring the reptile, but I was rather incredulous as to the fact of the sting not having been removed. We were discussing this point, when, guessing that he was the object of our conversation, he went away, and returned almost immediately with another scorpion in his hand. Taking a piece of stick, I examined it most closely in his uncovered hand, and perfectly satisfied myself that it had not been deprived of its sting, or injured in any way. The scorpion was of a tolerable size—upwards of two inches long—quite lively, and able to inflict a very painful wound, the effects of which would be apparent almost instantly, and last for a considerable time. Standing over the boy, I watched him narrowly, to see that he did not pinch off the tail of the reptile, or play any tricks; but, half raising his hand to his head, he put his mouth to his open palm, and I saw distinctly the scorpion writhing between his teeth as he took it up, and heard the crunching of its shelly covering, as he deliberately chewed and swallowed it. Neither his hands nor his mouth suffered in the slightest degree, and after a short interval he produced and ate another in the same way, which I also examined. The boy, since the early period when the infirmity of his mind became apparent, had been brought up a member of the religious sect of the Aisaoua, who claim the privilege, by the special gift of God to their founder, of being proof against the venom of reptiles, and the effects of fire. The present chief of the sect resides near Medea, and his disciples are to be found scattered over the whole of Northern Africa; they are held in a certain degree of reverence, but do not possess much influence. Captain Martenot gave us these details, and referred me for further information on the subject to the following account of a grand festival of the Aisaoua, written by an officer who was an eye witness of the scenes he so graphically describes.

In the court of a small Moorish house in the Rue de l'Empereur, Algiers, about sixty Arabs and Moors were assembled. Four standards—one red and yellow, and the other three red and green—were suspended from the columns of the court, over the heads of the chiefs of the sect. These were the standards of the Marabout, Mohammed-ben-Aissa. In the middle, a long wax taper, placed in an old black chandelier, alone afforded light to the assembly, and cast its uncertain glimmering rays into the gloomy corners of the building. The upper gallery was filled with women, covered with their white veils, leaving visible only their black eyes and their eyebrows stained with henna. Bou-Chama, by whose invitation I attended the festival, remained by my side, and explained the origin of the religious sect to which he belonged, in nearly the following terms:—Four or five hundred years ago a celebrated Marabout lived in the province of Oran. His name was Mohammed-Ben-Aissa, and having succeeded in gathering together a certain number of disciples, he wandered with them over the face of the land, sometimes in the Tell, and at other times plunging into the wilds of the Sahara. One day during his wanderings he lost his way in the desert. The provisions were exhausted, and his faithful followers, sinking from weakness, were on the point of perishing with hunger, when Ben-Aissa, stretching his hands towards heaven, implored the mercy of the God of Mohammed. 'Lord,' cried he, 'thou alone art able to save us. Take pity upon us, and cause whatsoever we may touch, to change for us into wholesome food!' At these words, seized with sudden inspiration, his disciples gathered stones, serpents, scorpions, &c., satisfied their hunger, and suffered no harm. 'We,' continued Bou-Chama, 'followers of this illustrious Marabout, have inherited the same privilege; and it is in commemoration of this miracle, and to perpetuate it, that we have now assembled together. By our prayers we obtain the cure of the sick, and draw down the mercies of heaven upon our newly born children!' After these words, Bou-Chama left me and joined his brethren; the rites were commencing. The prescribed ablutions having been performed, the Aisaoua, standing in meditative postures, recited eight times the Mussulman profession of faith—'I bear witness that there is none other god than God, and that Mohammed is his prophet.' In their voices there was something grave and solemn, which was most impressive. The Makaddam, or chief of the sect, then chanted a prayer for all Mussulmen, and called down upon them the benedictions of the prophet. At the end of each prayer the Mokaddam stopped, and the Aisaoua, lifting up their voices in turn, asked health for one, or the blessing of maternity for another; and the chorus then taking it up addressed a prayer to God, in accordance with the favor demanded. Incense was every now and then thrown on a brazier of live coals, and the chorus repeated in a loud voice, 'Es-salah! Es-salah!' They then all seated themselves in a circle, leaving a vacant space in the centre of the court. The Mokaddam and his chief assistants took their places opposite to me, and at their side a dozen Aisaoua arranged themselves, each armed with an enormous tambourine, which they beat in cadence, while the chorus vociferated a song in honor of Ben-Aissa. There was in these songs an undefinable spirit of frantic rage, which produced in me a certain impression of terror. I saw some of these fanatics roll enormous serpents in the hollow of their tambourines, while livid adders reared their hideous heads from the hoods of their bernous, and dropping to the floor, glided over the marble as cold as themselves. In spite of the horror which I felt at this sight, curiosity got the better of my disgust, and I remained. I must confess, however, that my heart beat violently; the dim obscurity, the infernal music, the women, shrouded in their white veils, appearing like phantoms risen from the grave, all prepared my imagination for the horrid spectacle of a festival of the Aisaoua. At the sound of this babarous music, one of the party rushed into the circle, with a frightful cry and extended arms, as if possessed by the evil one. He made the round several times, roaring hoarsely and savagely; then, as if compelled by a supernatural power, he began to dance to the sound of the tambourines and drums. He was then clothed in a white bernous, and his 'shasheah' (red woollen cap,) being taken off, the long hair left on the top of an Arab's head fell over his shoulders. He then commenced his 'zeekr.' The zeekr is a species of religious dance, which consists in jerking the head from right to left so that it touches the shoulders alternately. The whole body of the Aisaoua was in motion, his eyes soon became red and bloodshot, and the veins of his neck blue and distended; nevertheless, he continued his terrific dance. On a sudden two others rose up, and with savage yells joined the first. The three, excited by each other, redoubled their stampings and the motion of their heads, working themselves up into a state of frenzy impossible to describe. Now calling for red-hot iron, small shovels, the broad part the size of the hand, with long iron handles, were given to them. Seizing each one, these enthusiasts, placing one knee on the ground, applied their hands, and even tongues, to the red-hot metal. One of them, more madly excited than his companions, placed the brightest portion of the instrument between his teeth, and held it in that position for upwards of thirty seconds. Let not the reader think that I exaggerate; I witnessed all that I relate; and, in order to impress the scene stronger upon my memory, the performer of this last act placed himself directly opposite to me with a lighted taper in his hand. It is impossible for me to give a reason for what I saw, but I cannot disbelieve it; I smelt the stench of the burnt flesh, and when I afterwards touched their hands and feet, I found only a fresh and uninjured skin. The sight of one old man, nearly sixty-five years of age, gave me great pain; he grasped the red-hot iron, and placing it on his leg, allowed it to remain there until a whitish smoke arose, which filled the whole house with its poisonous odor. These dances lasted in this manner for the space of an hour. Notwithstanding the noise produced by the songs and the tambourines, the painful rattle in the throats of these mad fanatics could be distinguished amidst the din; at last, exhausted by fatigue, they fell backwards, one after the other, and lay senseless and motionless on the ground; the songs ceased, and nothing broke the solemn silence but the sound of their heavy breathings. A man, whose task it was to attend the half-dead wretches, now advanced, and placing his foot successively on the pit of their stomachs, pressed their sides strongly, kneaded their limbs, and caused them to revive. The dance re-commenced; four fresh Aisaoua rushed into the circle, and were soon in the same state of frenzy as their predecessors, striking their heads with red-hot shovels, and stamping upon them with their naked feet. Then, in their delirium, imagining that they were transformed into camels and lions, they uttered the cries of the animals they represented, and feigned a combat between them; their mouths foamed and their eyes sparkled with rage. The Mokaddam now presented to them a leaf of cactus, of which the thorns, an inch in length, and sharp as a needle, made me tremble. At this sight the combat ceased; the Aisaoua threw themselves upon the cactus, they tore and ground it between their teeth, making the air resound with a hoarse noise resembling the horrid cries of an enraged camel. At this moment the women, placed in the upper gallery, raised their dismal cry of lu-lu, lu-lu, lu-lu.

This frightful scene was only the prelude to all the horrors I was about to witness. Towards eleven o'clock the songs ceased, and coffee and couscousoo were brought in, of which I found it impossible to partake. The repast over, they recited a prayer before re-commencing their dance; and on the musicians beginning to strike their enormous tambourines, seven or eight of the disciples rose, howling dreadfully, and, dressed in white, like their predecessors, began to perform the zeekr. My acquaintance, Bou-Chama, was of this party; and taking a bundle of small wax tapers, he placed first his hand, and then his arm, face, and neck, in the flames. His features, when thus lit up, as they appeared from one moment to another through the varying flames, had quite a demoniacal appearance. In the meantime a negro had amused himself by placing live coals in his mouth, which, as he breathed, burnt brightly, and sent forth a thousand sparks. Without having been there, it is impossible to realize the terrific sight I had before my eyes. Opposite me, within two paces, was the negro, whose glowing mouth displayed itself in a black and hideous face; his head, with its single lock of crisp woolly hair, vibrating rapidly from side to side; and around me the hellish music, the convulsive stampings, and the frightful cries of the dancers. The negro was now in a state of the most furious excitement. Swallowing the still burning contents of his mouth, he seized a large scorpion, full of life and venom; placing it on his arm, he irritated the reptile in every possible manner, pinching it, putting it near the taper, and burning one of its claws. The enraged animal darted his sting into the offered hand; the negro smiled, and, raising the scorpion to his mouth, I heard it crack between his teeth, and, as he swallowed it, I turned my head aside in horror. The reader, perhaps, supposes that the scorpion was deprived of his sting; but I had ocular demonstration to the contrary; nay, more, I might have brought one from the Boudjareeah myself, and given it with my own hand, as many have done who have been admitted to these 'Hadrah.'

A yatagan was now brought, the point wrapped in a handkerchief, and two men held it horizontally about three feet from the ground. On seeing this, a man rose from his seat and commenced his zeekr; then, uncovering his breast, he sprang with all his weight on the naked blade; it seemed as if his body would have been cut in two by such a blow. He remained, however, with his bare breast on the sharp edge of the sabre, balancing himself with his feet, in a horizontal position, and tranquilly continuing his zeekr. Meanwhile the four other Aisaoua continued their furious dance, beating their heads with the iron shovels brought to a red heat. To these, three others soon joined themselves, grasping in each hand a living adder, with which they struck their bodies. As they danced, the serpents wound themselves about their limbs, hissing horribly. Then seizing them, some placed them in their mouths, so as only to permit the head of the reptile to escape; one even forced the adder to bite his tongue, and, leaving it thus suspended, continued his dance. Others squeezed them between their teeth, to increase their rage; and the irritated reptiles, in their desperate struggles to escape, twined around their necks, and, hissing, reared themselves above the heads of their tormentors. Excited by the spectacle before their eyes, and by the increasing noise of the music, the Aisaoua rose in a body, and rushed to take a part in the dance. Then commenced a scene which words cannot describe. Twenty Aisaoua, clothed in white bernous, with dishevelled hair and haggard eyes, mad with excitement and fanaticism, bathed in sweat, and grasping serpents in their hands, stamping, dancing, and convulsively shaking their heads, each starting vein swollen and distended with blood. The women, like phantoms, assisting in this scene, lit only by a pale and solitary taper, uttered in a piercing tone their shrill cries of lu-lu, lu-lu, lu-lu. This, mixed with strange songs, hoarse sounds, and the hollow rattle in the throat of each Aisaoua, as he fell exhausted and senseless, formed altogether a scene so totally repulsive to human nature, that it seemed, in truth, a feast of hell. Such dreadful exertions could not, however, last long; by degrees the number of dancers diminished, as one after another they sank under the fatigue, and their panting bodies strewed the marble pavement of the court. The feast of the Aisaoua was over.

MADAM GUYON was a beautiful and wealthy widow, and a favorite of the French Court in the days of Louis XIV. Without, we think, any direct renunciation of popery, she embraced that mild and gentle form of devotion usually called quietism. This exposed her to much persecution and several years' imprisonment. A prominent profession in that system was the entire annihilation of our own will. The following is a translation of one of her poems written in prison. Many who do not adopt all her peculiarities will be pleased with the gentleness and apparent contentment of her spirit.

A LITTLE BIRD I AM.

A little bird I am,
  Shut from the fields of air;
And in my cage I sit and sing
  To Him who placed me there;
Well pleased a prisoner to be,
Because, my God, it pleases thee.

Nought have I else to do;
  I sing the whole day long;
And He, whom most I love to please,
  Doth listen to my song;
He caught and bound my wandering wing,
But still He stoops to hear me sing.

Thou hast an ear to hear,
  A heart to love and bless;
And, though my notes were e'er so rude,
  Thou wouldst not hear them less;
Because Thou knowest, as they fall,
That love, sweet love, inspires them all.

My cage confines me round;
  Abroad I cannot fly;
But, though my wing is closely bound,
  My heart's at liberty.
My prison walls cannot control
The flight, the freedom of the soul.

O! it is good to soar
  These bolts and bars above,
To Him, whose purpose I adore;
  Whose Providence I love;
And in the mighty will to find
The joy, the freedom of the mind.

A SIMPLE STORY.

About one hundred years ago, there lived in Massachusetts a clergyman, who had a respectable neighbor belonging to his parish, who was notoriously addicted to lying, not from any malicious or pecuniary purpose, but from a perverse habit. The parson was every day grieved by the evil example of his neighbor. The person was Captain Clark, a friend of the parson in all temporal matters, and a man useful in the parish. But his example was a source of much inquietude to the parson. He was determined to preach a sermon on the occasion. Accordingly he took his text, "Lie not one to another."

He expatiated on the folly, wickedness, and evil example of lying, in such a pointed manner, that nearly every person present thought he was aiming at the captain. Meeting being done, some one said to the captain, "What did you think of the sermon?" "Excellent, excellent," he replied, "but I could not for my life keep my eyes off old mother Symington, thinking how she must feel, for the parson certainly meant her."

This story was told the writer by his mother, who was a daughter of the clergyman, and heard the sermon; to which she added, "My son, when you hear any folly or vice exhibited from the pulpit, before you look out for a mother Symington, look within yourself, and see if Captain Clark is not there." Her advice had some effect, and may have again.

A LESSON IN TENDERNESS.—I once asked John W. Edmonds, one of the inspectors of Sing Sing Prison, how it was that a Wall-street lawyer, brought into sharp collision with the world, had preserved so much tenderness of heart. "My mother was a Quakeress," said he, "and a serious conversation she had with me when I was four or five years old has affected my whole life. I had joined some boys who were tormenting a kitten. We chased her, and threw stones till we killed her. When I came into the house I told my mother what we had done. She took me on her lap and talked to me in such moving style about my cruelty to the poor, helpless, little animal, that I sobbed as if my heart would break. Afterwards, if I was tempted to do any thing unkind, she would tell me to remember how sorry I was for having hurt the poor little kitten. I never forgot that circumstance. For a long time after, I could not think of it without tears. It impressed me so deeply, that when I became a man, I could never see a forlorn suffering wretch run down by his fellow-beings, without thinking of that hunted and pelted little beast. Even now the ghost of that kitten and the recollection of my dear mother's gentle lessons, come between me and the prisoners at Sing Sing, and forever admonish me to be humane and forbearing. [Mrs. Child.

THE FAITH OF MISSIONS.—Count Ploss, a Dutch Nobleman, asked the Moravian missionaries, who were going to Greenland, how they intended to maintain themselves, unacquainted, as they were, with the situation and climate of the country? The missionaries answered, "By the labor of our hands, and God's blessing;" adding, that they would "build a house, and cultivate a piece of land, that they might not be burdensome to any." He objected that there was no timber fit for building in that country. "If that be the case," said the brethren, "then we will dig a hole in the earth, and lodge there." Astonished at their ardor in the cause in which they had embarked, the Count replied, "No, you shall not be driven to that extremity; take the timber with you, and build a house, and accept these fifty dollars for that purpose."

A SIGN OF COMING TROUBLE.—When the child of God has now arranged his worldly concerns to suit his mind, so that he begins to lean upon earth more and more, and upon Christ less and less, trouble is at hand. For his faithful covenant God will not leave him to settle down in the love of this world, but will pluck away his pillows of earthly comfort and quietness, and compel him to go to his Saviour, weary and heavy laden, for rest.

THE BIBLE JUDGED BY ITS FRUITS.

"By their fruits ye shall know them," is a just rule of judgment. If the Bible, in every department of interest where men have bowed to its authority, has exerted a purifying and saving influence, what better evidence can be given of its heavenly origin and full inspiration? The inefficiency of all other instrumentalities is written out upon every page of history. Poets have sung and sages have moralized of the nature, duties, and destiny of man, but they have failed to deliver him from the tyranny of passion and bring him under the control of reason. Has the Bible done more?

In answer to this question, we will hazard the assertion, that the Bible only has given just views of human character. It cannot be denied, that the various phases which man presents to man are a strange complex of mystery and light. At one time he is seen standing within the pale of Reason and Immortality, while the divine image is reflected from him, and eternal interests cluster about him. At another time we behold him crawling in the mire, while a prospective mess of pottage is the limit of his thoughts. Now his soul, weary of earthliness, struggles to break away from its control. Again he yields—sense becomes his cruel task-master, and the stillness of the grave broods over that soul in which a voice from heaven was just now heard. But enough is seen to show us what he once was, and what he now is. As the leaning columns and shattered arches of a structure once magnificent reveal its former glory, so in the midst of these ruins of fallen man we may discover traces of his original nature. Now any system of philosophy or theology which overlooks man's two-fold nature, must fail to meet his wants. If he be spoken to alone of his high origin and dignity, the temple of his worship will be filled with the work of his own hands—its walls will reflect only his own image—the divine presence will be self, and pride will be the ruling spirit. If, on the other hand, his eye be directed exclusively to his own inward corruption, the darkness of night will gather around him, and down-right despair will fix upon him. But the Bible addresses him in his true character, as gifted with a nature which allies him to angels, yet sold under sin and the bond-slave of sense. One portion of his nature cannot be annihilated while the other lives in health. Hence the sacred volume, while it distinctly declares his sensuality and danger, holds out before him a hope of pardon and safety through the all-sufficient sacrifice of Christ. It is in this way only, and through no other instrumentality than the Bible, that man is brought to a just view of his own character.

But it is especially by the light which the Bible throws upon the unseen world, that it secures its grand design, and gives highest proof of its divine authorship. It is common to remark the unhappiness of man. But whence comes it, except from his own immortality and consequent aspirations? Shut out from his mind all true light in regard to the character of the future, and he will be found superstitiously peopling eternity with wild shapes of terror and awe. Even the scoffer cannot help feeling that there is a dreadful meaning in it. A power within him is striving after something beyond; yet sin has hung a veil between him and that through which the keenest eye cannot discern distinctly. In these gropings he is ever becoming more and more weary, and less and less satisfied with his progress. He knows he must die; he believes he must live again. Hence his uneasiness and forebodings, which will continue to increase, until, in the hour of trial, all the images he has made to himself vanish, and he is left a poor spirit, with eternity around him, and he alone, without hope, without God. Now suppose this soul to have been enlightened by the sacred volume, and how changed the whole picture. Those aspirations have been directed towards objects which are imperishable and worthy; that anxious spirit has received instruction and become fully developed; it has found present peace, and looks forward to a state of unending rest with strong desire and confident expectation.

Such are some of the fruits, every day witnessed, of receiving the Bible as the inspired Book, and believing upon it. Wherever its leaves have fallen, they have been for the healing of the nations. Plenty, refinement, and religion, have sprung from it. Every interest, temporal and eternal—every duty, toward God and toward man—has been affected and regulated by it. When therefore men refuse to receive it, and labor to destroy its influence, we may justly ask them to embody for us the divine spirit of religion, that our souls, otherwise perishing, may live. But if they have only the torch for burning, no hammer for building, we may safely refuse to listen to their teachings.

Editorial Change.—We learn from the last number of the Black River Journal, that Joel Greene has disposed of his interest in that paper, which is henceforth to be published under the supervision of a Mr. Clark. In retiring from the charge of the Journal, Mr. Greene expresses much gratitude for the liberal support which has been extended to him, and strong confidence that the paper will continue to defend those principles to which our country owes its prosperity.

"Seventh-day Baptists.—We see by the Sabbath Recorder, the organ of the Seventh-day Baptists, that some persons of that denomination are about making an effort to test the constitutionality of laws which compel them to attend courts, serve on juries, or engage in any work, on the seventh day, inconsistent with their regard for that day as the Sabbath. If they succeed, they will be more fortunate than the 'Sunday people,' many of whom are compelled, both by the laws of the States and of the United States, to engage in secular pursuits on the Sabbath."

☞ We clip the above from the Cross and Journal, printed at Columbus, Ohio. The Editor mistakes as to the character of the law of which we propose to test the constitutionality. It is well known, that in several of the States there are laws which impose fines upon Seventh-day Baptists for working on Sunday. Such laws are regarded as conflicting with the provisions of the State and National Constitutions which guarantee the free exercise of religious opinions and practices. The question which we propose to test is, whether those statutes which impose fines upon us for working on Sunday are consistent with the general provision of the Constitution to secure religious freedom and equality. If they are not, we desire to have the Constitution honored by the annulling of the unconstitutional statutes. We have also asked for the passage of laws in several of the States in which Sabbath-keepers reside, to exempt them from attending courts, sitting on juries, or engaging in any work on that day which is inconsistent with observing it as the Sabbath. This privilege is granted to all those who observe the first day, and we do not see how any body who believes in doing to others as he would be done by, can hesitate about granting it to those who observe the seventh day. The fact that some "Sunday people" choose to accept of lucrative offices which require them to secularize the first day of the week, is no reason why the seventh-day people, who do not choose to accept such offices, should be compelled to secularize their Sabbath.

CIVIL PROTECTION OF SEVENTH-DAY BAPTISTS.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

In the Recorder of the 13th inst., under the head of "Religious Freedom—Equal Rights," you state that "the Convention now in session at Albany to revise the Constitution of the State of New York, has adopted the article of the present Constitution guarantying the free exercise of religious worship." I wish further to add, that when on that subject, in Committee of the Whole, Hon. Ira Harris proposed the following amendment which was adopted:—"And the Legislature shall provide by law for the effectual protection of the rights of conscience, so that in the exercise thereof no person shall suffer in person or estate." On presenting this, Mr. Harris remarked, that "he offered this having reference to a class of Christians in our State, who were very respectable in numbers, and among the best class of our citizens. He referred to the Seventh-day Baptists, so called. They had been subjected to embarrassing harrassments by ill-disposed persons, who, by selecting Saturday, their Sabbath, as the day to bring suits against them, in that way very often inflicted serious injury upon them, unless they would forego their rights of conscience. The Legislature had heretofore refused to take action for their protection, and this was only intended to require them to legislate."

Mr. Harris had been conferred with on the subject, by a Committee of the Central Association, and promised to do what he could for us. I think it therefore probable, that this is the best the Convention would do. If it is finally adopted, and carried out by the Legislature, it will fully answer for our protection. It is not at all probable, that the Convention would adopt an article of the Constitution in any sense acknowledging the seventh day as a legal Sabbath. Nor have they done it relative to Sunday. I hope the time may come, when our Legislatures shall "call the Sabbath a delight," but it is preposterous to expect such a thing until the church is converted, and public sentiment corrected. Any effort for this purpose would probably prejudice our protection on the Sabbath.

According to resolutions of the Central and Western Associations, it will probably be our duty to petition the next Legislature for protection. If so, I hope signatures may be increased a hundred fold.

Civil Difficulties.

I think a certain correspondent of yours, together with yourself, are in error relative to our civil difficulties upon the Sabbath question. I am not aware that the law "forbids our working upon the first day of the week;" but it does leave us exposed to civil services on the Sabbath, so that we are subject to fines and penalties if we do keep the Sabbath when called on for these services. The Revised Statutes of this State, Part 1, Chap. 20, Art. 8, Sec. 70, prohibits any servile labor or work on Sunday, except in cases of charity or necessity, unless done by some person who uniformly keeps the last day of the week, called Saturday, as holy time, and does not labor or work on that day, and whose labor shall not disturb other persons in the observance of the first day of the week as holy time. This, I think, is the only exception in favor of those who keep the Sabbath, besides what is contained in the special act of 1839, for the protection of Seventh-day Baptists. You and your correspondent may be correct if you refer to the laws of some other State. Respectfully, James Bailey,

DeRuyter, August 17, 1846.

OUR POSITION IN REFERENCE TO SUNDAY LAWS.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

Hitherto the action of Sabbath-keepers in reference to Sunday Legislation has been limited to simply praying that, whatever legislation was had to promote the better observance of Sunday, nothing might be done to take from them their natural and inalienable rights, or to praying the legislature to restore some of those rights which such legislation has already taken away. A little reflection will satisfy any person, that justice, truth, and reason, demand more of them than that. They must go against all STATE ESTABLISHMENTS OF RELIGION, if they wish to secure their own rights. Many of them are ready now for such action, and will doubtless take a stand the ensuing winter in the legislative halls, which, if persisted in, will sooner or later relieve them of all further trouble, and conduce largely to the spread of the truth. This is a matter in which they ought to act unanimously. If ever they wish their rights to be respected, they must show that they are sufficiently evident and easy of comprehension to be seen alike of all.

I send you the accompanying extract of a letter from a friend, who seems to be in a mood to act and counsel well in the matter, hoping that it will serve to unite Sabbath-keepers in their appeals to the several legislatures contemplated the ensuing winter. P. S.

"If there be any thing in this apostate world for which Jehovah is angry with the nations, it must surely be for making and enforcing laws which directly tend to the abrogation of his law. I fear division and opposition among our own people a thousand times more than the strength of the first-day interest. The fact is, the whole land trembles at our movements, from the St. Lawrence to the Rio Grande; and yet not a soul dares to make an open public attack upon us. Enough is done in private, but in the three years during which the subject has now been before my mind, I have seen no direct, public, manly attack upon the Seventh-day Baptists. Warnings and cautions without number are covertly given to the observers of the first day to avoid us—to beware of us. I do not wish really to provoke open hostility, if our own people will only rally to improve the opportunity to diffuse our sentiments through the masses of society, and to claim our own constitutional rights. The facts in regard to the state of things at present, are—1st, The fundamental laws of the land are all on our side; they strictly forbid prohibition and coercion; they are strictly protective of persons and societies, and not of religious institutions as such. 2d, We have some of the bests precedents and expositions of the fundamental law of the nation, on which to base a defense of our rights, as Washington's Virginia Letter, Johnson's Sunday Mail Report, the post office laws, the Court of Burlington Co., N. J., and the Hamilton Co. Court, of Ohio. Perhaps there are other instances with which I am not acquainted; if there are, they ought to be looked up, and embodied in a single collection, and someable and just jurist's comments thereon procured, and published together, and the whole would form an invaluable document, and must ultimately succeed in making the whole Sunday coercion code odious and nugatory. It will be impossible to get our rights by State statutes, so long as any considerable number of our people contribute to sustain the reputation of Sunday coercion by saying the "first day is better than no day"—as though neither seventh-day people nor first-day people would keep any Sabbath, any day of rest, without State laws to enforce it. What a distrust of God! What a want of confidence in the power of divine truth to affect the consciences of men! What a slanderous insinuation upon the principles of religion! As though all professing Christians were more afraid of them who can imprison a week, or take three dollars, than of Him who can imprison in hell fire, and take away our part out of the book of life! Just what infidels say! I do not think so bad of the professing world as that."

NOTICE,

To the Delegates and Visitors to the General Conference.

The several important matters to be considered at the next meeting of the General Conference, lead us to expect the attendance of many friends from different parts of the denomination; and we assure them all of a hearty welcome to our homes, as well as to the meeting itself. To facilitate the journey of such as travel by public conveyances, we wish to give them the following information:—

The steamboat Cohansey leaves Arch Street Wharf, Philadelphia, on the third and fifth days of the week, at seven and a half o'clock in the morning, and a stage from Greenwich will bring passengers to our doors about three o'clock P. M. for one dollar.

The steamboat Clifton leaves the lower side of Arch street, Philadelphia, on third and fifth days, at ten o'clock in the morning, and a stage will bring passengers to our doors by about five o'clock P. M. for one dollar.

The Greenwich stage leaves Stockton's Hotel, lower side of Market street, Philadelphia, on the fourth day of the week, at seven o'clock A. M., and will bring passengers to Shiloh for seventy-five cents; arrives about four o'clock P. M.

The Bridgeton stage leaves Burr's Ferry, upper side of Market street, Philadelphia, at seven o'clock A. M. every day.

There is a cheap and pleasant route from New York to Philadelphia by taking the New Brunswick steamboat Raritan at the foot of Cortland street, New York, at two o'clock P. M., to N. B., (fare 25 cents,) a stage will then carry to Princeton for 75 cents; where it arrives about nine o'clock P. M. Leaves Princeton at four and a half o'clock A. M. and carries to Trenton for fifty cents. Thence by railroad to Bristol; and from Bristol by steamboat to Philadelphia, for fifty cents, and arrives in time to take the Clifton to Salem. By this route, the traveler stays one night in Princeton instead of Philadelphia, and pays $2 for his passage instead of $4. Samuel Davison.

DeRuyter Institute.—It will be seen by reference to the advertisement of this institution in another column, that the fall terms opens on the 16th of September. At a meeting of the citizens of DeRuyter Village, on the evening after the close of the summer term, August 5, it was unanimously resolved to recommend the suspension of the District Schools in the Village during the first seven weeks of the next term of the Institute, and to send the scholars of the District Schools to the Institute, for the purpose of affording the Teachers' Classes an opportunity for practical teaching under the immediate supervision of their instructors. This fact may be interesting to the friends of the school as an indication of the feeling towards it, and also to those who propose to engage in teaching, and wish to qualify themselves for their work.

Sunday Travel in England.—A petition was presented to the House of Lords, through the Bishop of London, from several clergymen, against railroad traveling on Sunday. The petition does not seem to have been warmly advocated, on account of commercial difficulties. The design of the petition was to prevent traveling for recreation, but it was impossible, it was urged, to draw the distinction between traveling for business purposes and traveling for recreation. That traveling for business purposes was necessary, was strongly urged. "Lord Brougham had a case in point, which had just come to his recollection. The Bank of England was saved from insolvency, after the directors had set from nine till twelve o'clock on Saturday night, waiting for the means of relief, by the arrival of a large amount of money next day, being Sunday."

American Musical Convention.—Notice has been given, that this Convention will meet at the Broadway Tabernacle, in New York, on Tuesday, the 15th of September, and continue its session five days. The Committee of Arrangements state that preparations have been made for the delivery of addresses by various eminent gentlemen, for lectures upon the practical part of the science, for the usual discussions, and for illustrations and other performances, constituting altogether such "a feast of fat things" as is likely to exceed all former precedent in this country.

Monument to Roger Williams.—The spot where the body of Roger Williams now rests, is pointed out in an orchard, but not marked by any memorial. It has been proposed to awaken the people of Rhode Island to the propriety of erecting a monument to his memory. Surely the man who was among the first to proclaim freedom alike to Jews, Christians, and Pagans, is more deserving of a marble column than many of those upon whom a grateful posterity has bestowed that honor.

The American Board of Foreign Missions—whose meetings, for several years past, have been attended by five or six hundred clergymen, and others from a distance—hold their 37th Anniversary at New Haven, commencing Sept. 8th, at 4 o'clock, and to continue, probably, as usual, three days. This Society has now about 100 Mission establishments, at prominent points of influence on the globe, and its receipts for the past year have amounted to $262,073.

Union.—It is stated in the Christian Messenger, that a union is about to be formed between the Baptists of the Provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. If the plan can be carried out, it will no doubt add greatly to the strength and influence of the churches in those Provinces.

Quarterly Meeting.—We are requested to give notice, that a Quarterly Meeting will be held with the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Otselic, Chenango Co., N. Y., on the first Sabbath in September.

Christian Chronicle.—Such is the title of a very neat weekly paper recently started in Philadelphia. It is to be under the editorial management of Geo. W. Anderson, and devoted to the dissemination of Baptist principles in the State of Pennsylvania.

A Prohhet's Opinion of Camp Meetings.—Several weeks ago we gave some account of one S. S. Snow, once a Millerite preacher, who claims to be the prophet Elijah, and has established himself in New York. It seems that he was originally a Methodist preacher; but since he became a prophet he has taken a great dislike to all the customs of that denomination. Recently he attended a Methodist Camp Meeting, when he requested the privilege of preaching, and was refused. Since then he has published a series of advertisements in the New York Sun intended to take off such meetings. The following are fair specimens:—

"☞ CAMP MEETING—Now let Baal's prophets leap on the altar and cut themselves, and cry aloud, O, Baal, hear us! O, Baal, hear us! but there is no answer, for the door is shut against a fallen, corrupt church. Moreover the third woe and the last judgments are come to desolate the earth, and the saints are now in session judging the world by the grace of God, and who will be able to stand?"

"☞ CAMP MEETING NOTICE—The door is shut, now let the wolves in sheep's clothing howl in the woods, let the screech owl, scream to her mate, let the great owl lay and hatch her night birds, let the satyr half goat and half man dance on the altar of Baal, let them serve their gods many and their lords many; but the God of truth will destroy those miserable wretches of Babylon."

NOVEL LAW CASE.

In Richmond, Va., there is a law that if any person shall refuse to give to the commissioner of the revenue a list of his taxable property, he shall be liable to a fine of fifteen dollars for such refusal. An interesting case of this kind came up before the Hustings Court for the city of Richmond, on the 20th of July last, in which the Rev. Dr. Wm. S. Plumer was called upon to show cause why he should not be fined for refusing to give to the commissioner the amount of his salary or income for the year 1845. The following account of the trial is published in the Richmond Enquirer:—

"Edwin Burton, the Commissioner of the Revenue for the city of Richmond, being first duly sworn, stated that he called on Dr. Plumer, the defendant, for his taxable property and income; Dr. Plumer gave him a list of his taxable property, consisting of slaves, horse, barouch, watches and piano, but refused to give him, witness, the amount of his income and salary for the year 1845, as the pastor of the First Presbyterian Church in the city of Richmond; saying that there had been a meeting of the clergymen of the city of Richmond, and they had determined to test the law imposing a tax upon the income of clergymen, and he had been selected at the meeting to test it in his individual case.

"The cause was argued on the part of the Commonwealth by Joseph Mayo, Esq., and on the part of the defendant by Samuel Taylor, Wm. H. Macfarland, and E. C. Carrington, Esqrs. The ground taken by the defence was, that it was a tax upon religion and in violation of the act of religious freedom and the Constitution. It was also urged, that as the sums paid to ministers of the gospel were of an uncertain character and could not be recovered by law, it was unjust and illegal for the State to tax what was not protected by her laws. It was contended by the attorney for the Commonwealth, that the Legislature intended to tax income in the lands of every person, and that the provisions of the statute embraced salaries paid to ministers as well as to others. The argument on both sides was able and elaborate, and occupied the whole of Monday. The Court were of opinion that the salaries of ministers of the gospel were liable to taxation, and therefore made the rule for the fine absolute. The counsel for the defendant filed a bill of exceptions, and will take the case to the Circuit Superior Court. Thence it may be carried to the General Court, the highest tribunal of appeal in such cases."

A New-England Governor.—Gov. Briggs of Massachusetts has been spending some time at Saratoga Springs, where his character as a gentleman and a Christian secured for him respect and attention. A correspondent of the N. Y. Commercial Advertiser speaks of him thus:—

"On my arrival I was so fortunate as to meet at this house, once the head-quarters of fashionable resort, Gov. Briggs, the present chief magistrate of my own native State, Massachusetts; and I confess that I felt proud of her and of him. His Massachusetts friends who were sojourning here called upon him on Wednesday afternoon, and after kindly receiving every one, with elegant simplicity of manners, in answer to a few pertinent remarks by Mr. Walley, of Boston, he made one of the most touching addresses to which I have ever listened. Governor Briggs is a model. He is a temperance man—he is a man of piety—he is not ashamed neither of his temperance principles nor of his religion, and of this you would have been well persuaded, if you could have been present at a temperance celebration a few evenings ago, in the Presbyterian church, where Chancellor Walworth presided, and heard the Governor's appeal to the young men of our land. Not to speak of myself, I saw the tears trickle down the manly cheek of the Chancellor as he listened to the strains of eloquence which the Governor poured forth."

"Magazinery."—Such is the title given by a writer for the Harbriger to a species of literature which he describes in the following language:—

"To the making of a 'Lady's and Gentleman's Magazine,' there go a variety of materials, the chief of which is puffing. Like the rolls and flourishes of drums and trumpets, which on the stage usher in some army of half a dozen blockheads armed with tin-pointed spears, the godfathers and nurses of this youthful literature make no stint of preliminary noise. Modesty is a quality unknown to them, truth something they never heard of. The next material in the compound is an occasional article from the pen of some really clever writer—a story by Mrs. Child or Miss Sedgwick, or a poem by Longfellow or Lowell. These serve as capital to boast on, and as salt for the mass of unmitigated trash, the fifth rate sentimentality, and tenth rate moralizing, which in prose and verse make out the rest. The whole is done up in fancy covers, things called engravings are stitched in with pictures of fashions and perhaps a little music; the 'judicial and impartial' critics of the daily press go into raptures over it, and a large number of silly girls and brainless youths swell its subscription list, and hang with delight over its pages."

Expenses of Heathenism.—The following paragraph from a work on Protestant Missions in Bengal, by Rev. J. J. Witbrecht, shows that some heathens contribute their money for superstitious purposes with a liberality worthy of a better cause:—

"I once visited the Rajah of Burdwan, and found him sitting in his treasury. Fifty bags of money, containing 1000 rupees, (£100,) in each, were placed before him. 'What,' said I, 'are you doing with all this money?' He replied, 'It is for my gods.' 'How do you mean that?' I rejoined. 'One part is sent to Benares, where I have two fine temples on the river side, and many priests who pray for me; another part goes to Juggernaut, and a third to Gaya.' Thus one native is spending £25,000, or $111,000 annually, from his princely income, upon idols and Brahmins."

General Intelligence.

FOREIGN NEWS—TEN DAYS LATER.

By the steamship Caledonia, news has been received from England to the 4th inst.

The Cotton market was without any preceptible change—and an improvement had taken place in the manufacturing districts, in consequence of the probability of the passage of the new Tariff bill.

Owing to the Tariff having passed the more popular branch of Congress, the value of Iron has risen in anticipation of a large export to the United States.

The Liverpool papers are filled with an account of the visit of Prince Albert to that place, and the magnificent doings on the occasion.

Louis Bonaparte, ex-King of Holland, died at Leghorn of apoplexy on the 24th ult. aged 67.

Another attempt has been made on the life of the King of the French. While seated at a window in the Palace of the Tuilleries to listen to a concert performed by the National Guards, on the 30th ult. a man in the crowd drew a pistol, and fired two shots at the King. He missed him, of course—and also those in the vicinity—and was immediately arrested. His name was Joseph Henri. Interrogated as to the motives of his attempt, the prisoner replied that, on the eve of becoming a bankrupt, and not possessing sufficient courage to commit suicide, he had opened the code to find whether there was not a crime punishable by death without its being necessary to kill any one. He then conceived the design of firing at the King, but without intending to kill him, in order that the capital punishment might be inflicted upon him for having attempted the King's life.

The London Times of August 3d, says: "We regret to have to announce the death of the distinguished Hindoo gentleman, Baboo Dwarkanauth Tagore, whose name and high character may be familiar to many of our readers. He died on the first inst. at his residence, St. George's Hotel, Albemarle-st. in the 52d year of his age. With the exception of the learned Rammohun Roy, he was the first Brahmin of any note, we believe, who has visited Europe; and it is much to be lamented that neither of these eminent personages were fated to return to their native country, and to carry back to their brethren in the East the fruits of the civilization they had made such personal sacrifices to witness, and of the value of which we well know they had both formed so high an estimate."

A concert in the open air was given the other day by 1,800 musicians. It was the first time such a multitude of musicians ever played together in France, and the din and tumult were consequently the most terrific ever heard.

Speaking of the new Pope, the London Times says:—"All the political prisoners included in the amnesty have been released from the Castle of St. Angelo. Public rejoicings were conducted on a large scale, but with the greatest order. The Pope was the idol of the people. His carriage had been drawn by young men of the best families on Sunday from the Church of the Missions to the Quirinal. A placard from the Secretary of State's office had been issued, recommending moderation, which the people at once obeyed, by discontinuing their processions, though the nightly illumination was still persevered in. M. Renzi, the chief of the last insurrection at Rimini, was among the liberated prisoners.

On Saturday, August 1st, London and its suburbs for miles round were visited by one of the severest storms of thunder, lightning and hail, accompanied by a heavy rain, that has been experienced for several years past. Great damage was done to public and private buildings, and Buckingham Palace suffered severely.

There has been an enormous increase, at the various metropolitan hospitals and dispensaries, of English Cholera, in a very acute form. It is attributable more to the atmospheric influences than the use of fruit, to which it is generally ascribed.

At the London Wool sales, recently concluded, some attention was excited by a small quantity of that article from Oregon, which arrived in tolerable condition, free from burs, and well washed. It commanded a good price, and the country is said to be favorable for its production.

It appears that the combined fleets of England and France have already done good service in putting down the abominable trade in slaves on the Western coast of Africa; and they are confident of doing yet greater things shortly.

The Bey of Tunis has severely punished some individuals who sent their slaves out of his dominions and disposed of them clandestinely, on the abolition of slavery taking place.

FROM THE ARMY.

The steamship New York arrived at New Orleans on the evening of the 13th. She left Brazos San Iago on the 8th. McCullough's and Gillespie's Rangers were to start that day for Mier, on scout, with orders to take that point, if possible. The regiment of mounted Rangers, at Reynosa, under Hays and Woods, received orders to proceed to Linaries, and Monterey, and capture those points. General Taylor passed up the Rio Grande on the 5th. He had forbidden the sale of spirituous liquors at Matamoros, on their entrance at the mouth of the river. The health of the army was good.

The Mexicans were fortifying Monterey and calculated to meet the Americans with a strong force. The river was rising again at Camargo. Eleven steamers had passed up from Matamoros. Capt. Walker is dangerously ill at Matamoros.

A letter from Fort Washita, July 28th, says, 30 persons left Fort Smith three weeks previous, for California, and a report had come in from the prairies that they had all been murdered by the Camanche Indians.

One of the Alabama Volunteers, speaking of purchases from the sutlers of the army, says:—"I can positively buy more in Mobile for fifty cents, than with five dollars here." It is really hard to fight for almost nothing, and be swindled out of it in this way. Another volunteer, apparently much troubled in spirit, says: "It is pretty tough, I tell you—wages only $7 a month, whiskey from one to two dollars a gallon, and other necessaries of life in the same proportion."

FROM MEXICO.

A letter dated Vera Cruz, July 31st, says:—"The portrait of Santa Ana has been carried in triumph through the principal avenues of the City with acclamations, and the approving quiescence of the national troops of the Fortress of San Juan d'Ulloa. You may rest assured this movement will go forward, and Santa Ana and Almonte will make a triumphant passage from this to the Capital of the Republic. This will cement all defection within the boundaries of the Nation, and, as a natural consequence, bring about a more energetic defence of the National Honor. A Universal Sentiment prevails; and the one idea is to "repel the Invaders, and recover ground lost by the inaction of the national forces."

The following paragraphs are from recent Mexican papers:—

The Diario, which is the official paper, gives satisfactory accounts of the resources at the command of the Government, the augmentation of the military force, &c. Ten thousand men, according to this journal, would speedily be assembled at San Luis Potosi. General Paredes was to set out for the army on the 30th of July, General Bravo having arrived from Vera Cruz to assume the Presidency ad interim.

The President Paredes issued a decree on the 25th of July, in conformity with a resolution of the Congress, one item of which directed the issue of letters of marque against the commerce of the United States.

The troops sent by the Government to put down the revolt have been defeated by the insurgents, in the department of Jalisco. Gen. Arevalo was among the killed; and it is said that some towns in Jalapa had "proclaimed" also.

Important from Havana.—The ship Adelaide arrived at New York, Thursday 20th, from Havana, whence she sailed on the 8th inst. On that day, Santa Ana, Almonte and Rejon left Havana in the British Steamer Arab for Vera Cruz. Of course, this is no desperate venture. Santa Ana has long been fully resolved not to trust himself in Mexico without abundant evidence that the great mass of the people ardently desired his return and were ready to rally round his standard and restore to him the supreme authority. He must now have such assurance, or be deceived. Another month, we believe, will witness the downfall and banishment of Paredes, and the star of Santa Ana again in the ascendant.

The Czar and the Polish Peasantry.—It is quite cheering to hear of a liberal act in the history of Nicholas of Russia. We therefore notice with pleasure a report which is mentioned by a correspondent of the Charleston Courier, that the Emperor is about to carry out extensive and important reforms, which he has been long meditating, in favor of the Polish peasantry. He has for several months been residing in Poland, occupying himself almost exclusively in maturing his projects. Important modifications of the administration of Poland, which were at first intended, have been postponed for the present, and attention exclusively directed to the condition of the serfs.

Late events in Austrian Gallica have given to the Emperor much anxiety. It was only the prompt and decided measures taken by the prince Governor which prevented the spread of the insurrection into the Russian provinces. The Emperor proposes to try upon the 3,000,000 Polish serfs, projects which he desires, but has as yet been unable to realize, in his old provinces of Russia, where there are 40,000,000 peasants, subject to the deplorable conditions of the feudal service, and bound to the soil.

Extraordinary Case of Arson.—Last Sunday evening, says the Batavia Times, Mrs. Louisa Disbrow, wife of Mr. Russell Disbrow, of Stafford, was committed to the jail in this village for burning her husband's barn, filled with Grain and Hay, on Saturday last. Yesterday we had a short conversation with her, from whom we learned that it was her intention not to burn the barn, but to burn the house, and then destroy herself. She says, however, that she went to the barn with a match, and scratched it on the boards which took fire. She then returned to the house, and, in making arrangements to burn the house and hang herself, her apron took fire; some of the neighbors, having discovered the fire, rushed in at this time, tore the burning apron from her, and prevented the farther accomplishment of her intention.

Mrs. Disbrow is 26 years of age, has three children, the eldest eight years and the youngest ten months old. She talks freely of the whole transaction, affects to conceal nothing, attributes all to domestic difficulties, and fancies that the Law can inflict no greater unhappiness than she has experienced since her second marriage.

The Hutchinsons.—Some people seem to have a very pleasant time through life; they go through singing as merrily as a lark, and grow rich and fat all the time. So it seems with the Hutchinsons. It is said that during the year's residence of that 'Family' in England, they cleared the pretty little sum of $30,000, after paying all their expenses. The Manchester American says, they are now at their mountain home in Milford, some 15 miles from Manchester, enjoying the pleasures of rural life, and the cordial greetings of their friends. The family now own three large and beautiful farms, and are about to purchase another, which is valued at $10,000. They will not go out to sing for several weeks wishing leisure and rest from their European travels. The British press paid them very high compliments, and we are glad their visit to the old world was a successful one. We want to hear them again.

The editor of the Baltimore Clipper says, We saw yesterday a young lad about fifteen years of age, named William Bordell, who had just arrived in this city from Illinois, having started in June, and traveled the whole distance on foot, passing through Ohio and Western Pennsylvania, following the National Road. He was on his way to New York city, where his friends reside, and which he purposes to reach in the same way. We learn that he left New York eighteen months since, where he followed the occupation of a "News Boy," and having saved a considerable sum of money determined to make a tour through the country, which he has done, on foot, and a greater part of the time alone—traversing a greater portion of the Western States.

SUMMARY.

We see it stated in the Van Buren (Ark.) Intelligencer, that a 'Committee of Forty' on Cane Hill have organized themselves as Watchers of the Peace, and that they have a Constitution by which they are governed. Their object is to expel all outlaws, murderers and robbers who infest that part of the country and commit their depredations in the disguise of Indians. Beautiful idea, this, of organizing an illegal tribunal for the purpose of punishing law-breakers.

He has accepted the office of Secretary and General Agent for the Central Committee for Promoting National Education, and will remove to Cincinnati at the close of his official term as Governor of Vermont.

Mr. Stephen Talber, aged 90 years, lately died at Bristol, R. I., in the same house in which he was born, and in which his grandfather was born; a very old house.

On the 1st July, Capt. J. Kyle, of the brig Jane and Ann, when eighty-four miles from land, and on his passage to Hamburg, picked up a pair of turtle doves, which had alighted on the topmast of his vessel. They were in an exhausted state, but soon recovered, and are now in his possession.

The Mayor of Pittsburg having recently sent a slovenly male vagrant to jail, the keeper turned him away, declaring he would not have such a dirty fellow in the jail.

The graduating class of Yale includes among its number one of those remarkable instances of perseverance under great discouragements, which are now and then met with at every College, though very rarely attended by circumstances of such striking interest as at present. The individual referred to entered College three years ago, and is said to have made his way there from a distance of above one hundred miles on foot, and to have entered on his collegiate course with the sum of just three dollars on hand! He has, by his unaided efforts, sustained himself to the end of that course, and comes off with distinguished honor.

The Sunday School Advocate, published at 200 Mulberry-st. New York, for the Sunday School Union of the Methodist Episcopal Church, circulates eighty-five thousand copies regularly. This is supposed to be larger than the circulation of any other paper in the United States. One circumstance connected with it, printers at least will know how to appreciate; that is, every subscription is paid for in advance.

Godfrey Pope, who was an officer of the Kentucky volunteers, was recently shot near Matamoros by a sentinel. It was late in the evening or night; the sentinel challenged Mr. Pope as he approached him, he continued to advance without giving the countersign, whereupon the sentinel fired and killed him. He was put under arrest, but on an investigation of the unfortunate occurrence he was discharged.

Recent news from South Africa represents the difficulties with the Kaffirs near Cape Town as growing worse. A division of the regular forces was attacked by the Kaffirs, when three men were killed and six wounded.

The Canterbury (Eng.) Journal says: One of the largest flight of butterflies ever seen in this country, crossed the channel from France to England, on Sunday last. Such was the density and extent of the cloud formed by this living mass, that it completely obscured the sun from the people on board our continental steamers, on their passage, for many hundreds of yards, while the insects strewed the decks in all directions. The flight reached England about 12 o'clock at noon, and dispersed themselves inland and along shore, darkening the air as they went.

A foreign paper says that a French Engineer named Leonard, has taken out a patent in England for a simple means of diminishing the fuel necessary for producing steam. He introduces fish-oil into the boilers, with only a small portion of water. When the oil is at boiling heat, the water precipitates itself into the interior, and steam is generated as fast as is desired, without the oil being decomposed. The saving in fuel is said to be forty or fifty per cent.

A correspondent of the Genesee Farmer says:—"The best way of banishing rats and mice from mows or bins of grain, and all similar places, we have heard of, is scattering the branches of memtha veridis, or common spearmint, about the mows when packing away grain, or strewing over the bins of grain, casks of apples, &c., exposed to their depredations. We have tried it, so have our neighbors, and found it to be effectual."

China furnishes a new material for spinning in the shape of its common grass. Several manufacturers in Leeds have lately made most successful experiments with it. This grass possesses all the desirable qualities of flax, but the fibre is longer, finer and stronger. The stuff which has been manufactured there from resembles French cambric, but has more than the latter a silky appearance. In China it is customary to use grass for similar purposes.

A fortnight ago Monday night, the trains on the Erie Railroad were stopped by grasshoppers—there being such numbers of them on the track as to grease it as effectually as though lard had been placed on the rails.

The Erie Railroad Commissioners have decided to locate the route of the road through Pennsylvania, instead of going over the high grades of Broome and Sullivan Counties. This decision is of great importance to the Company, as it will enable them to commence work immediately along the whole line of the Road, on the most favorable route.

The Boston papers are filled with accounts of the breaking ground on the Long Pond Aqueduct, by which that city is to be furnished with water a la Croton. The affair took place on Thursday. The Mayor, City Council, and some hundreds of others were present, and the ceremony is said to have been very imposing. Any number of fine speeches and sentiments were given.

Another Anti-Mormon outbreak is threatened in the vicinity of Nauvoo. At a meeting of Anti-Mormons in Hancock county, resolutions were passed to expel the last remnant of the Mormons from the State of Illinois, and from the mob spirit evinced it is feared that violent measures will be resorted to in the execution of this threat.

The new and magnificent steamboat Atlantic, plying between New York and Allyn's Point, Ct., ran against a sloop near the latter place on Thursday night last. Some persons are puzzled to account for the formation of hail stones, in the atmosphere, when the temperature of the earth's surface is above ninety. Mr. Espy, in his meteorological lectures, gives a beautiful description of the formation of a cloud, and after the cloud is formed, he says, rain drops are generated—but sometimes these cannot reach the earth on account of the violence of the upward current, but are, on the contrary, carried to the region of perpetual congealation, there frozen, and thrown off at the sides of the hail cloud.

The cholera, which spread with so much rapidity in the month of May, in Aden, had, at the last accounts, nearly all disappeared. Several new cases made their appearance from time to time, but they were all quite light ones. The change in the trade winds has delivered Aden from the scourge, which, during the short time it raged, carried off more than 400 of the inhabitants. Four-fifths of the persons attacked with it, died. The cholera has raged the most in the district of Yemen. The mortality has been frightful. Mocha, Jidden, Jambo, and all the Arabian side of the Red sea, have suffered.

Miscellaneous.

THE SLAVE SINGING AT MIDNIGHT.

BY LONGFELLOW.

Loud he sang the Psalm of David!
He, a negro, and enslaved;
Sang of Israel's victory,
Sang of Zion, bright and free.

In that hour when night is calmest,
Sang he from the Hebrew Psalmist,
In a voice so sweet and clear
That I could not choose but hear.

Songs of triumph and ascriptions,
Such as reached the swart Egyptians,
When upon the Red Sea coast
Perished Pharaoh and his host.

And the voice of his devotion
Filled my soul with strange emotion;
For its tones by turns were glad,
Sweetly solemn, wildly sad.

Paul and Silas, in their prison,
Sang of Christ, the Lord arisen.
And an earthquake's arm of might
Broke their dungeon gates at night.

But alas! what holy angel
Brings the slave this glad evangel?
And what earthquake's arm of might,
Breaks his dungeon gates at night?

SMALL FARMS.

An aged and intelligent farmer pointed out to us, the other day, his well kept fields, and said, 'My farm is not very large—it is but a third of what belonged to my father; but I sometimes think I raise as much from my sixty acres as he did from two hundred.' And our old friend is right. A very general error prevails as to the superior advantages of a large farm. Because three hundred acres indifferently farmed, will produce more than one hundred acres farmed in the same manner, it does not follow that it is cheaper to farm three hundred acres indifferently, than to farm one hundred acres well. The fact is the very reverse. Any man who will sit down and make the calculation, can soon convince himself that the capital laid out in buying the three hundred is worse applied than if part of it had been used to improve one hundred acres. A good farm in first rate condition is worth more than a poor and neglected farm, though the latter covers twice, or even thrice the area of the former. Agriculture is like every other pursuit. That is the cheapest in the long run, which produces the same, with less expense and labor. And on this principle it can be demonstrated, that a small and well kept farm is better than one so large that it cannot be farmed thoroughly.

Take a farm of fifty acres, for instance. In the Eastern States such a farm, if of arrable land, is as much as one man can attend to; in fact even fifty acres is more than any ordinary family can farm thoroughly. We scarcely know, indeed, in this country, of what land is capable. A garden, well handled, and carefully manured, produces twice as much, acre for acre, as a field, however well cultivated the latter may be. Now this is a practical exemplification of the advantages of small farms; and centuries hence, when the population in this country becomes very dense, like that of China or Flanders, and when small farms will be a matter of necessity, and not of choice, the soil of the United States subjected to the garden-like cultivation of the Flemish provinces, will return three-fold its present yield. Where small farms have been properly farmed they have proved that such would be the case. The spade, for instance, is preferable to the plough; stall kept cattle pay better than cattle put to pasture; and liquid manure is cheaper, and of more value than any other kind. Yet not one farmer in ten keeps his cattle in the stall; and not one in three millions uses the spade or can afford to, except in his garden.

In Mr. Laing's late work of travels in Europe, he states that the soil of France now produces nearly twice as much as it did fifty years ago; and that intelligent traveler attributes this remarkable fact solely to the small farms into which France has been cut up since the abolition of the law of primogeniture. This is a fact worth considering.

PROFICIENCY OF RUSSIAN PICKPOCKETS.

The French ambassador was one day talking to a prince of the imperial house of Russia about the extraordinary dexterity of the Parisian thieves, and relating a variety of anecdotes concerning their feats. The grand duke expressed his opinion that the St. Petersburg pickpockets were quite as clever, and to remove all doubt on that point from the mind of the ambassador, he offered to lay him a wager, that if he would dine with him on the following day, before the removal of the desert, his watch, ring, and every thing else belonging to his toilet, that was not firmly fastened to his clothes, should be stolen. His excellency accepted the wager, and the grand duke immediately despatched a messenger to the director of the police, with a request that he would send the cleverest and most adroit pickpocket in his custody. He was put into a footman's livery, furnished with the necessary instructions, and promised exemption from punishment, and his liberty, if he performed his business well. The ambassador mentioned his watch as the article to which the principal attention, both of himself and the thief, would naturally be directed; and the new servant was ordered to give the grand duke a sign as soon as he had secured it. The dinner commenced; the first course came and was removed; the Greek, Spanish, and French wines, red and white, glistened in turn in the glasses. The ambassador was particularly careful of his watch; and the grand duke, observing his caution, smiled sometimes half sarcastically. The new footman was always bustling about, mingling among the other servants, changing plates and handing wine. The dinner was drawing towards a conclusion, and the grand duke was still waiting impatiently for the preconcerted sign from the thief, who, however, seemed completely taken up in waiting upon the company. All at once they perceived the grand duke's countenance brighten up; and turning to the ambassador, who was observed in conversation with his neighbors, he asked him what o'clock it was. The ambassador put his hand triumphantly into his pocket, where a few minutes before he felt his watch was safe, and to the astonishment of the whole company, but especially of the imperial entertainer, he drew from it a neatly trimmed turnip. Universal laughter ensued, and the ambassador was somewhat disconcerted. He would have taken a pinch to compose himself, but having felt in all his pockets, he discovered with horror, that his gold snuff-box was gone too. The laughter was redoubled.

In his embarrassment and mortification, he clapped his hands, as he was in the habit of doing, to his finger to turn the beautiful gold seal ring which he wore upon it—but that also was gone. In short, he found that he was completely plundered of every thing that was not firmly attached to his dress. The performer of this sleight of hand was then brought forward. The grand duke ordered him to restore the stolen articles, and was not a little surprised to see him produce two watches, and hand one to himself and the other to the ambassador, two rings, one of which he gave in like manner to the grand duke, and one to the ambassador, and two snuff-boxes, one for the grand duke, and the other for the ambassador. The prince now felt in amazement in his pocket, as the ambassador had done before, and found that he had been plundered in the same manner as the latter. He assured his excellency that he was totally unconscious of the matter, and was going to chide the rogue soundly, but bethought himself, and thanked him for having in so singular a manner enabled him to win his wager. He made him a handsome present, and procured his immediate liberation, admonishing him for the future to apply his talents to more useful purposes.

INDIA RUBBER BRIDGES.

An India Rubber Bridge has been ordered by the Government to be constructed for the use of the army in Mexico. The India Rubber Bridge was invented by Capt. Lane of the army, and used ten years ago in Alabama, during the Creek war. We extract from a journal the following description of the bridge as employed on the Chatahooche river.

"It consists of large bags, or pontons, something like cotton bags in shape, made of India rubber cloth, which being filled with air and attached laterally together, formed a bridge of fourteen feet width, and of any length, according to the number of bags used; upon these were light timber to support boards placed laterally, which forming a smooth, level surface, admitted the passage of wagons, horses, &c. A detachment of six hundred men, with all their arms and accoutrements, including the field officers mounted upon horses, marched on it at once, and remaining a quarter of an hour going through the evolutions to test its strength, they counter-marched, with as much facility as if on terra firma. Field pieces, with their complement of mattrasses, and their caissons filled with ammunition, and loaded wagons, were also driven over it with the same ease. It was said that a troop of horse arriving at night at a river where the bridge was, and seeing it stretching across the stream, crossed upon it under the impression that it was a common bridge. The great advantage of this bridge is its portableness, all the pontons and cordage for a bridge of three hundred and fifty feet being capable of transportation in a single wagon; whereas, the former ponton equipages consisted of cumbrous and bulky pontons of wood, sheet-iron and copper."

FIRST AMERICAN STANDARD.

The following extract is from the London Morning Chronicle, of July 25, 1776. The analogies of the first American ensign are ingeniously set forth; yet as our prejudices against the snake are deeply-rooted, and as old as original sin itself, few of our countrymen will regret that the device was changed. The extract, however, is a curiosity, and will be quite new to nine-tenths of the present generation:—

"The colors of the American fleet have a snake with thirteen rattles, the fourteenth budding, described in the attitude of going to strike, with the motto: 'DON'T TREAD ON ME!' It is a rule in heraldry, that the worthy properties of the animal, in the crest borne, shall be considered, and the base ones cannot be intended. The ancients accounted a snake or a serpent an emblem of wisdom, and, in certain attitudes, of endless duration. The rattlesnake is properly an emblem of America, as this animal is found in no other part of the world. The eye of this creature excels in brightness most of any other animal. She has no eyelids, and is therefore an emblem of vigilance. She never begins an attack, nor ever surrenders; she is therefore an emblem of magnanimity and true courage. When injured, or in danger of being injured, she never wounds until she has given notice to her enemies of their danger. No other of her kind shows such generosity. When undisturbed, and in peace, she does not appear to be furnished with weapons of any kind. They are latent in the roof of her mouth, and even when extended for her defence, appear to those who are not acquainted with her, to be weak and contemptible, yet her wounds, however small, are decisive and fatal. She is solitary, and associates with her kind only when it is necessary for their preservation. Her poison is at once the necessary means of digesting her food, and certain destruction to her enemies. The power of fascination attributed to her, by a generous construction, resembles America. Those who look steadily on her, are delighted, and involuntarily advance toward her, and having once approached never leave her. She is frequently found with thirteen rattles, and they increase yearly. She is beautiful in youth, and her beauty increases with her age; her tongue is blue and forked as lightning."

PLOUGHING IN ENGLAND AND SCOTLAND.—Mr. Colman of the Albany Cultivator, pronounces the ploughing of the English and Scotch perfect. It is, according to him, unrivaled and unsurpassable; and that not in rare instances, as at ploughing matches, but universally. The specific particulars in which it excels, appear to be these. The surface is completely inverted; it is done at a uniform depth; the furrow slices are cut in perfectly direct lines; it is raised without breaking, and either left flat on its back or left reclining at a particular angle; if the land ploughed be greensward, every part of the herbage is shut in, so that not a spire is seen between the furrows. Ploughing after this mode is performed at the rate of about an acre in eight hours—the team moving at the rate of about two or two and a fourth miles per hour; the whole being done without sweating, perturbation or fretting, and Mr. C. especially commends, without swearing; the work when done Mr. C. compares to a ruffle just from the crimpling iron.

A SPLENDID MONUMENT OF AMERICAN ART.—The editor of the National Intelligencer says, "We have rarely experienced so much pleasure as we received in looking upon the proof copy of a magnificent engraving of the United States Senate, in which are represented about one hundred eminent persons of our country. We have been aware for several years that such a work was in progress, but we had no idea that the result would be so satisfactory, so admirable. It marks an era in American art, and reflects the highest credit upon every one connected with its production. In delicacy and strength this engraving rivals the finest mezzotints of Europe, while in size and number of accurate likenesses it has never been equaled. Indeed, the precision with which the features and expressions of so many persons have been transferred to the engraving is truly wonderful, grouped as they are in every position, and of course in a manner often unfavorable to the preservation of likeness. Many of our readers have felt a deep interest in the success of this work, and those who saw it in the lobby of the Senate and of the House were equally surprised and gratified. The obstacles that have been surmounted in executing this picture were greater than we supposed, and we cannot but express again our admiration at the perfection of the whole; which, unlike any preceding work of the kind, was not engraved from a complete original drawing or painting, but from detached portions with only a general outline of their combination. Each likeness has been engraved from a single Daguereotype taken for the purpose, and in like manner the various sections of the Senate chamber, with the aid of the sketch of the whole effect in oil colors. During nearly four years this enterprise has been in progress, and each session of the three first years Messrs. Edwards and Anthony were engaged in the Capitol taking likenesses and views of the Senate Chamber for the purpose. Their design was noble, but many were incredulous of their ability to finish so arduous an undertaking—indeed, after two years' effort, it was nearly relinquished. But the task is accomplished, and Messrs. Anthony, Clark & Co. (such is now the style of the firm) have given to the country and the world a work of art with which any artist might be proud to have his name connected."

A MAN SUSPENDED BY HIS THUMB.—A Mr. Gray, of Providence, while engaged in painting the Congregational meeting house of Kingston, R. I. ascended the steeple to take off the vane for gilding. The ladders reached the foot of the iron spire on which the vane turned, 12 to 15 feet above. Mr. Gray ascended the iron spire by grasping with his hands and twisting his legs round the iron, which did not exceed two and a half inches in diameter, relying upon the ball half way up the spire, to rest his foot on, and from which position he could take the vane off with his right hand. While he was in the very act, the ball on which his feet rested gave way and ran down the spire. At this moment Mr. Gray was raising the vane over the end of the spire; as he did so, the spire growing smaller made a convenient place for his thumb to keep the balance in the gudgeon bore, when the ball gave way under his feet, and he sunk. The vane falling back with his thumb in the gudgeon bore, held him fast, with his feet 3 or 4 feet above without any thing to rest upon. He made two or three efforts to extricate his thumb, but without success, and after his strength was nearly exhausted, he called for help. His life now depended upon the strength of his left hand. The consternation of the beholders was great—some running one way and some the other, to obtain something to release the man from his perilous situation, while others turned away unwilling to witness the catastrophe which they apprehended in a few minutes. Mr. J. H. Clarke, one of the painters, came immediately up the spire, and placing his shoulder under the feet of the suspended man, at once relieved him. The scene was terrible to behold.

A MAGNIFICENT WEDDING.—The marriage of the Dutchess of Olga, daughter of the Emperor of Russia, it is supposed, will surpass in magnificence any thing of the kind that has taken place in modern times. A correspondent of the Boston Traveller, says: A series of grand fetes will be given, and continued for three days. The Empress of Russia will be present, and join the throng of crowned heads. These fetes will take place at the Emperor's summer palace and garden at Peterhoff, on the borders of tho gulf, and two hours' drive from St. Petersburgh. They will be the most brilliant and expensive ever got up in Europe. The artists of every nation have for a long time been employed to contribute their handicraft or talents to render every thing uneaqualed in modern times. It is supposed that among the entertainments there will be a grand review of fifty thousand men. Every regiment of cavalry will have a different colored horse, and every horse of each regiment, even to a spot, will be alike. Such a military display, it is said, cannot be equaled in the world.

INGENIOUS TEST.—A few days ago a merchant, in prosecuting his morning tour in the suburbs of Edinburg, found a purse containing a considerable sum of money. He observed a lady at a distance, whom he thought might be the loser. Determined to be correct, he fell upon a strange yet ingenious plan. He resolved to act the part of a "poor distressed tradesman," and boldly went forward, hat in hand, and asked an alms. This was answered with a polite "Go away, I have nothing to give you." The man, however, persisted in his entreaties and would not go until he had "relief for his famished wife and children." The lady at last condescended, but to her dismay found that the wherewith was gone. The merchant, now satisfied that he was correct, with a polite bow returned the purse, with the advice that in future she would be more generous to the distressed and destitute.

CHINESE INGENUITY.—The Chinese are often compelled to make their dwellings in large boats on the rivers. An officer in the navy tells me he observed one of these, who kept ducks for a living, practice an odd piece of ingenuity. In the day time the ducks were permitted to float about, but in the night time they were carefully collected. The keeper, when the night set in, gave a whistle, when the ducks always flew towards him with violent speed; so that they were invariably gathered in a minute. How do you suppose he had educated his flock so effectually? He always beat the last duck.

DECLIVITY OF RIVERS.—A very slight declivity will suffice to give the running motion to water. Three inches per mile, in a smooth, straight channel, gives a velocity of about three miles an hour. The Himalaya mountain, the loftiest in the world, is, at eighteen hundred miles from its mouth, only eight hundred feet above the level of the sea; that is about twice as high as St. Paul's church in London, (or the height of Arthur's Seat, near Edinburg) and to fall these eight hundred feet, in its long course, the water requires more than a month. The great river Magdelena, in South America, running for a thousand miles between two ridges of the Andes, falls only five hundred feet in all that distance. Above the commencement of the thousand miles, it is seen descending in rapids and cataracts from the mountains. The gigantic Rio de la Plata, has so gentle a descent to the ocean, that in Paragua, fifteen hundred miles from its mouth, large ships are seen, which have sailed against the current all the way, by the force of the wind alone; that is to say, which, on the beautifully inclined plain of the stream, have been gradually lifted by the soft wind, and even against the current, to an elevation greater than that of our loftiest spires.

STRENGTH OF CORDS.—The best mode of estimating the strength of a cord of hemp, is to multiply by 200 the square of its number of inches in girth, and the product will express in pounds the practical strain it may be loaded with. For cables, multiply by 120 instead of 200. The ultimate strain is probably double this. For the utmost strength that a cord will bear before it breaks, a good estimate may be formed by taking one fifth of the square of the girth of the cord to express the tons it will carry. This is about double the rule for practice just given, and is, even for an ulterior measure, too great for tarred cordage, which is always weaker than white. In cables, the strength, when twisted, is to the strength when the fibers are parallel, as about three to four.

A GOLD PEN.—The witty Editor of the Chronotype says:—"We are politely requested to accept a gold pen which comes by mail from the manufacturers, Josiah Hayden & Co., Haydenville, Mass. We do so with our best bow. We are a fortunate editor. Henceforth our course is gilded and smooth, having got rid of the villainous steel, which is always inclined to stab. We are resolved to conform ourselves, as far as our nature admits, to this new circumstance.

"Ha! ha! for poverty how odd!
A pen with diamond pointed nib!
Well stocked with truth, with kindness shod,
'Twill go to the leaders strong and glib,
And never prick the wholesome skin
Unless—immoderately thin."

VARIETY.

Stones in land operate as a drainage, to some extent, and attract heat. In some cases they may favor fertility from both those causes. 'Sandy land' usually contains but a small portion of lime. To ascertain whether the stones have 'lime in them,' break them, and apply a few drops of muriatic or nitric acid. If an effervescence is produced, there is lime.

"I am now an old fellow," says Cowper, in one of his letters, "but I had once my dancing days, as you have now; yet I could never find that I could learn half so much of a woman's character by dancing with her, as conversing with her at home, when I could observe her behavior at table, or at the fire-side, and in all the trying scenes of domestic life. We are all good when pleased; but she is the good waman who wants not the fiddle to sweeten her."

There, my lad, said an Athenian once to a little Hebrew boy, by way of joke, "here is apruta, (a small coin, of less value than a farthing,) bring me something for it, of which I may eat enough, leave some for my host, and carry some home for my family." The witty boy went and brought him salt. "Salt," exclaimed the Athenian, "I did not tell thee to bring salt!" "Nay," replied the boy, archly, "didst thou not say, 'bring me of what I may eat, leave, and take some home.'" Verily of this thou mayest eat, leave some behind, and still have plenty to carry home.

A man died in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., a few days since, who had been coachman in one family for seventeen years. He had received for his services from 15 to 18 dollars a month. The family had visitors, and he received presents from them. All the money he obtained, after paying his necessary expenses, he put at interest. At the time of his death he was worth $3000. He was about 40 years of age. So much for economy.

There are few countries which, if well cultivated, would not support double the number of their inhabitants, and are not extremely stinted even in the necessaries of life, says Swift. I laid out twenty barrels of corn, which would maintain a family in bread for a year, and brought back in return a vessel of wine, which half a dozen fellows would drink in less than a month, at the expense of their health and reason.

An old toothless clergyman used to be much bothered by the lesson in which the names Shadrack, Meshack, and Abednego, so often occur. At last he adopted the experiment of calling them 'these three gentlemen,' reading thus—'So the king commanded these three gentlemen to be cast into the fiery furnace.'

On the Railroads in England, now being constructed, there are said to be employed 120,000 persons, and 120,000 horses, earning weekly £500,000, or $2,500,000.

A good criterion by which to judge the disposition of a man, is to watch him when he passes some boys at play. A kind man will step out of the way, and let the little fellows have their sport, while a crabbed one will push through the "ring" and spoil their fun.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant andeconomical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institntion, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25
EXTRAS PER TERM.
Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the eonvenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

DE RUYTER INSTITUTE.

TEACHERS' Classses will be formed at the opening of the fall term, September 16, to continue seven weeks, which will be exercised in practical teaching under the immediate supervision of the Principals, with a thorough review of the common-school studies. Lectures on the theory of teaching, and other important subjects, will form a part of the daily exercises. The Principals will be assisted by Hon. Edward Cooper and the County Superintendents of Madison and Cortland Counties. All the improvements and important suggestions of the day in the art of teaching, will be brought before the class for their consideration.

MORAL AND POSITIVE—NO. 2.

Having shown in a former article, that all God's revealed laws are both moral and positive, and that there exists no scriptural ground for distinguishing them by those considerations, it is proper that we should point out what distinctions do exist. We could well agree with modern divines, if instead of insisting upon the theory of God's laws being partly moral and partly positive, they were to say, "Without A DISTINCTION we should confound the eternal standard of right and wrong given to Israel at Sinai, (the sum of which is love to God and our neighbor,) with the body of carnal ordinances imposed on them until the time of reformation." This very sentence of Andrew Fuller contains a distinction, which is natural, just, and Scriptural; and it is surprising that his acute mind did not see that the only distinction which the Scriptures make in the laws and institutions of Jehovah is, that some are of local, and others of universal application. Some are limited to specified objects and periods, and others are as unlimited and permanent as the government of God over the world. Thus the Scriptures repeatedly affirm, that Jehovah gave statutes to Israel which he gave to no other nation; yet our Lord says, "The Sabbath was made for MAN." See Psalm 47: 20, Mark 2: 27. The apostle affirms that the Levitical law was ordained only until the promised seed, that is Christ, should come. See Heb. 7: 11, and Gal. 3: 19. But there is a law of which Christ says, "It is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than for one tittle of the law to fail."

The same obvious distinction obtains between the covenants; as in Pslam 105: 9, 10. "Which covenant he made with Abraham, and his oath unto Isaac; and confirmed the same unto Jacob for a law, and to Israel for an everlasting covenant." But when He made a covenant with all flesh, "God spake unto Noah and to his sons with him, saying, And I, behold I establish my covenant with you, and with your seed after you." Gen. 9: 8, 9. The covenant with Abraham separated his seed, in Jacob, from all the other families of the earth; the covenant with Noah includes all the families of the earth, Jews and Gentiles, "to perpetual generations." Each of these covenants was established with laws coextensive with the covenants.

That the Holy Ghost regarded these things in the ministry of the apostles, is evident from the account of their decision on the controversy about circumcision. Acts 15: 20, 29. Here circumcision, which is a sign of the covenant made with Abraham, is declared inapplicable to the Gentiles; but pollution of idols, and fornication, and strangling, and the use of blood, are strictly forbidden. These are things against which Jehovah signified his displeasure in the family of Noah; and they are, and from the days of Noah they ever have been, binding upon all the race, upon Gentiles as upon Jews. Connected with these instructions which the apostles and the Holy Ghost sent unto "them which from among the Gentiles are turned unto God," is instruction from the Books of Moses, "For Moses of old time hath in every city them that preach him, being read in the synagogues every Sabbath day." What could these instructions be? If the Levitical law be annulled, and also the national covenant, (as Paul tells us it is in Heb. 7: 18,) what is there of these books obligatory? Evidently those laws regulating the hearts and lives of men, which the new covenant puts into the mind and writes upon the heart, Heb. 8: 10. It is thus also that the apostle Paul said to the Galatians, "If ye be circumcised Christ shall profit you nothing," (Gal. 5: 2,) and unto the Phillippians, (4: 8,) "Whatsover things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." In the same manner he says to the Collossians, (2: 16, 17,) "Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of a holy day, or of the new moon, or of the sabbaths, which are a shadow of things to come; but the body is of Christ." In the same manner he says to the Jews, (Rom. 2: 25,) "Circumcision verily profiteth, if thou keep the law; but if thou be a breaker of the law, thy circumcision is made uncircumcision." And in chap. 3: 19, "Now we know that what things soever the law saith, it saith to them who are under the law, that every mouth may be stopped, and all the world become guilty before God." Also in verse 31, "Do we then make void the law through faith? God forbid; yea, we establish the law." What can be more obvious, than that the sacred Scriptures teach the disannulling of the national laws of Israel, with the national covenant, and yet that Jews and Gentiles are still under law to God?—that some laws were local and temporal, and some universal, of the whole race, and perpetual in their duration? Obvious as it appears to us, however, it may not be so plainly apparent to some others. We frequently meet with persons who cannot see how the national covenant of Israel, and the laws enjoined under it, can be disannulled, and yet Jews and Gentiles still be bound by some of those laws to God! They cannot see how a law can remain, and yet a penalty once annexed to it be done away by the same authority! Let us try to make this more obvious by illustration. When James II. of England took away or disannulled the provincial charter of Connecticut, all the laws and penalties enacted under it were null and void; the citizens could neither sue nor be sued by those charter laws. But were they without civil law at that time? By no means. The king's attorney was there to enforce the laws of the empire. The city of New York has a corporate charter, and her citizens therein are governed by municipal laws enacted under that charter. Suppose the Legislature should be offended, and take away their charter; they could not enforce the municipal laws any longer; but would they be without law at any time? No, not a day; the laws of the State would extend over them, and the State's attorney would be bound to see them enforced. Some of the same duties would be enforced by State law which were enforced by municipal law, but with a slight variation in routine, and with penalties differently expressed and inflicted. The case of the Jewish nation and the world appears to us a parallel one. The world was never without law to God. God saw fit for special purposes, to separate the Jewish nation from others; for this cause he gave them a covenant, with laws—a charter. In that charter he enjoined the observation of laws obligatory upon mankind by the penalty of legal executions; for their disobedience, he has disannulled that charter, and the penalties thereby enjoined are of course void. But does this proceedure in any way affect the laws, or the penalties enjoined upon the race of man? By no means. God's government over the race of man does not cease, although the Jewish theocracy is abolished.

ADDRESS

To the Inhabitants of the State of Rhode Island.

The undersigned were recently appointed by "THE RHODE ISLAND SABBATH UNION," respectfully to ask the co-operation of the Pastors, Church Members, Magistrates, and People generally, in promoting a better observance of the Sabbath, throughout the State.

In pursuance of the purposes of their appointment, the Committee would call your attention, in the first place, to THE CLAIMS of the Sabbath.

The Lord of the Sabbath has said that "the Sabbath was made for man." Man is here used, most certainly, as a generic term, and, therefore, presents a universal proposition. The Sabbath was not made for man; for man, as a genus, as a race, unless it was made for every individual of the race; for the first, and for the last man; for the first generation, and for every other. The Sabbath, then, must have existed from the beginning, and is as old as the human race. Our Lord says, moreover, "The Sabbath was made for man." He says not—the Jewish Sabbath—or, the Christian Sabbath; but, the Sabbath, the common, the universal one, which belongs to mankind. Is not this the very language to denote a universal and perpetual institution?

Let us look at the connection of the Sabbath with the work of creation. "God blessed the Seventh day, and sanctified it." If the Creator had merely rested on the Seventh day, it would have been an impressive consecration. But when he proceeds to bless and to sanctify it, there is authority; a positive Sabbath, forming a part of the primeval arrangement, when God fixed the order in which the world should go; six days, labor; one day, rest; over and over, forever. The first week of the world, then, was not completed, till there had been a Sabbath, as well as a first day, or a sixth. Is not this indicative of the universality and perpetuity of the institution? Consider, if you please, the necessity of the Sabbath. It was made for man, because he could not do without it. Both mind and body need a different rest from that of sleep, a regular, waking rest. Experience shows that about one seventh of human life, or one day in seven, is best adapted to this purpose.

The soul of man wants a special season set apart for the purpose of preparing for the duties and enjoyments of a higher existence. Rational evidence of such preparation is never afforded by those who dispense with the moral influences of the Sabbath. Are not these the reasons why the Sabbath was made, and why it was made for man?

To object that a large part of mankind have never heard of the original institution of the Sabbath, and that, therefore, it could not have been made for man, is (to say nothing of impugning our Lord's veracity,) as absurd, as to deny the true rotation of the earth, because a large part of the world have always believed the contrary.

It has also been alleged that, in the sacred records of the first twenty-five centuries from the creation, no farther mention is made of the Sabbath, and the inference is urged that it must have ceased. The allegation is not strictly true. Repeated mention is made of weeks, as the received division of days—a rule of division which originated in the Sabbath, and would never have been thought of without it. That the Sabbath of the creation laid the foundation for a septenary division of days by all nations, is not disputed.

But further: the form in which the Sabbath is spoken of, when it is again distinctly mentioned in the Pentateuch, is proof that it was then, and ever had been, and ever would be in force; that it was primeval and perpetual. Homer and Hesiod, Josephus and Grotius, to name no more, furnish ample evidence that "the seventh day Sabbath" was observed throughout the world—Eastern and Western—civilized and barbarian. There is no explanation of this fact but upon the supposition that the Sabbath was made for man; was meant for man; was and is binding on man.

A statute can expire but in one of two ways, by limitation or by repeal. If we examine the original appointment of the Sabbath, Gen. 3, or the recognition of it, Exod. 16, or the giving of the ten commandments, Exod. 20, or the exposition of the Sabbath, Isa. 58, or our Lord's assumption of it as his own institution, Mark 2, we shall find that no limitation of time is hinted at, but the reverse. Two passages have been adduced as favoring a repeal, (Rom. 14, and Coloss. 2,) neither of which has any reference to the subject, one way or the other.

To crown the whole, our Saviour, when foretelling the destruction of Jerusalem, gave directions respecting the observance of the Sabbath in an emergency, which was not to occur till more than thirty years after he left the world; thus committing to his friends an institution which, most undeniably, he expected them to keep and protect, to the end of time. The sun is not more essential or abiding in the system of nature than is the Sabbath in the moral world.

As to the propriety of observing the first day of the week, instead of the seventh, we deem it sufficient say, that the Christian world generally having now for eighteen centuries regarded the first day of the week as the true Sabbath, it cannot be expected that they will change it back till they are clearly shown to be in the wrong. If any are persuaded of the claim of the seventh day to be so observed, we would respectfully urge upon them to maintain such observance, in strict accordance with the Bible exposition of its sanctity.

The extent to which the Sabbath should be kept holy, is plain. "In it thou shalt not do any work; thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, nor thy man-servent, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates." Comment on a statute so explicit would but weaken its force. It is equally binding ON ALL MEN. There is, however, a divine commentary recorded by the prophet Isaiah. "If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day, and shall call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words;" "all my blessings, individual, social, national, shall be thine." These expositions are law, as immutable as the Decalogue. No plea of interest or convenience will ever invalidate a word of them. There they are clothed with God's authority; good against all traveling, or visiting, or labor, or recreation, on the Sabbath day, for purposes of convenience or gain, down to the last day of the world. The passage from Isaiah suspends all abiding national prosperity on the observance of the Lord's day, as there expounded. God will bear long, it may be, with the Sabbath-breaking prevalent in our State and nation; but as God is unchangeable, there must be national reformation in our observance of the Sabbath, or permanent prosperity will be withheld.

God requires us to remember the Sabbath day; that is, to recollect it during the previous week, and so arrange all our worldly interests, as to make it sure, that we shall have nothing to hinder us from keeping it holy. Again, God requires us to remember the Sabbath DAY. A "day" is twenty-four hours; one exact seventh part of every man's human existence.

In the Scriptures, there is not a hint, that that part of the Sabbath, when the sun shines, and some men are awake, is any more sacred than those other hours of the day when the sun is set, and some men are asleep. Common sense repels the idea.

Such, then, are the high and divine claims of the Institution, for the rescue of which from all manner of profanation and abuse, we would fain rally the people of this eminently prospered commonwealth. We present it to you, as invested with an authority, and with a sanctity, which must remain till the heavens and the earth shall pass away. Is it not entitled to your most conscientious regard? Ought not every degree and species of desecration to be forthwith forsaken?

That the Sabbath is extensively desecrated in this State, none will deny. In speaking of the various forms of desecration, we begin with the worldly conversation of Christian families on the Sabbath. Multitudes who regularly repair to "the communion table," are in the habit of "speaking their own words," emphatically, on the Sabbath day; accustomed to converse often on purely secular topics; or, at best, only about religious things, and in a secularizing spirit, which has no tendency to hallow the passing hours. This habit has already reached to an alarming extent, and is emboldening those who feel not the restraints of personal religion, to indulge in all the open forms of Sabbath desecration. It is an effectual hindrance to a general, outward reformation.

There are many who compromise with principle and conscience, by traveling, for instance, or by requiring persons in their employ, to labor, on a part of the Sabbath day; resting, or attending public worship, and allowing their servants to do the same, during the remainder of the day; as if to be profane in the morning, could be atoned for, by being devout at noon; as if dishonesty to-day, might be balanced by the honesty of to-morrow! Take another case. Why is it any less sin for a man to require a domestic to devote a large part of the Sabbath, to the preparation of sumptuous meals, than to run an omnibus, by hiring some one to drive it for him?

Almost every kind of recreation is resorted to, more or less, on the Sabbath, and especially by the young. There is a great deal of riding and of sailing on the Sabbath, whenever opportunity offers.

Steamboats, rail-cars, and omnibuses, are run in violation of the Sabbath; manufacturing is done, directly or indirectly, on the Sabbath; livery stables are kept open, as a standing temptation to those who have no other time for relaxation, to break God's law; provisions are prepared for market, if not exposed for sale; milk-carts rattle through the streets of our chief cities, on the Sabbath; post offices are opened; letters and newspapers relating to business and politics are taken out and read; and even some of those who are "set for the defence" of the Sabbath are found violating it, either by prosecuting journies on that day, or by traveling an unwarrantable distance for the purpose of pulpit exchanges.

These are a part of the prevalent ways in which the Sabbath of the Lord is profaned, and the displeasure of the Almighty is constantly incurred. The bare recital is alarming, to all intelligent patriots and Christians.

The appropriate remedies of this crying evil, scarcely need be named. To enumerate the ways in which the day is desecrated, is to indicate the path to reform. Total abstinence from all participation in the sin of Sabbath-breaking, is the true and only doctrine. Much, very much must be done, by voluntary amendment; self-purification. Respectfully, but solemnly do we call upon every good citizen to keep himself pure from the guilt of desecrating, in thought, word, and action, the Sabbath day. We earnestly entreat every one, who hath hitherto indulged, directly or indirectly, in any sort of Sabbath-profanation, to ponder, first, the everlasting claims of God's law; secondly, the demonstrated fact, that all temporary gains from wrong-doing, and especially the gains of Sabbath-breaking, are an ultimate and unfailing damage to the pecuniary interests of the offender; and, finally, that the habits of violating the Sabbath, now rife through the land, must be done away, or the consuming judgments of God, which he has denounced on the nations that dishonor his day, will lay waste our goodly heritage, and overspread it with the blight of his anger.

We call on the Church of Christ to remember, that with the disappearance of the Sabbath, every blessing and vestige of true religion will disappear; and atheistic violence and impurity will take its place. We call on the churches of every name, to say, if they are not imperiously bound to apply to this giant evil the hand of a wise, but unflinching discipline, till not "the smell of contamination shall be found in the skirts of their garments.

We call on Magistrates to maintain the honor of those civil enactments, which were wisely intended for the protection of God's holy day.

We call on Parents and Teachers to awake to this matter, and, by precept and example, to train up a generation of strict Sabbath-keepers, who shall call the Sabbath a delight, and shall honor it, in all the relations of life.

We call on the occupants of the Pulpit to see to it, that their own purity is not shaded by even the appearance of evil; and that they speak forth, without fear or favor, the thunders of God's dishonored law."

Finally, we call humbly on God, to pour his Spirit upon the whole community, and to crown with the continual dew of his blessing, every well-directed effort to honor his own institutions, and to hasten the day when this Commonwealth shall be Emmanuel's.

LEADING CHILDREN TO GOD.

A mother sitting at her work in her parlor overheard her child, whom an elder sister was dressing in an adjoining bed-room, say repeatedly, as if in answer to his sister, "No, I don't want to say my prayers, I don't want to say my prayers."

"How many church members in good standing," thought the mother to herself, "often say the same thing, in their hearts, though they conceal even from themselves the feeling."

"Mother," said the child, appearing in a minute or two, at the parlor door; the tone and look implied that it was only his morning salutation.

"Good morning, my child."

"I am going to get my breakfast."

"Stop a minute; I want you to come and see me first."

The mother laid down her work in the next chair as the boy ran towards her. She took him up. He kneeled in her lap, and laid his face down upon her shoulder, his cheek against her ear. The mother rocked her chair slowly backwards and forwards.

"Are you pretty well this morning?" said she, in a kind, and gentle tone.

"Yes, mother, I am very well."

"I am glad you are well. I am very well too; and when I woke up this morning and found that I was very well, I thanked God for taking care of me."

"Did you?" said the boy in a low tone—half a whisper. He paused after it; conscience was at its work.

"Did you ever feel my pulse?" asked his mother, after a minute of silence, at the same time taking him down and sitting him in her lap, and placing his fingers on her wrist.

"No, but I have felt mine."

"Well, don't you feel mine now—how it goes beating?"

"Yes!" said the child.

"If it should stop beating, I should die."

"Should you?"

"Yes, and I can't keep it beating."

"Who can?"

"God."

A silent pause.

"You have a pulse too, which beats in your bosom here, and in your arms, and all over you, and I cannot keep it beating, nor can you. Nobody can but God. If he should not take care of you, who could?"

"I don't know," said the child with a look of anxiety, and another pause ensued.

"So when I woke this morning, I thought I'd ask God to take care of us."

"Did you ask him to take care of me?"

"No."

"Why not?"

"Because I thought you would ask him yourself."

A long pause ensued. The deeply thoughtful and almost anxious expression of countenance showed that his heart was reached.

"Don't you think you had better ask him for yourself?"

"Yes," said the boy readily.

He kneeled again in his mother's lap, and uttered in his simple and broken language, a prayer for the protection and blessing of Heaven.

BLOODY SWEAT.

A correspondent of the Boston Recorder, in commenting upon that passage in the New Testament, where it is said of our Saviour, that "he sweat, as it were, great drops of blood, falling to the ground," gives the following instances from history of a similar effect produced by excessive anguish or fear:

"Mezeary, the historian, thus describes the death of the base Charles IX, of France:—'Nature exhibited strange freaks during the last two weeks of this monarch's existence. From inward excitement of mind or soul, his body was frightfully agitated; so much so that the blood gushed from the pores of his flesh. At last, in the extreme weakness occasioned by these agitations, he yielded his soul.' He also relates that a governor of a town, being sentenced to death, on beholding for the first time the gallows, experienced agitation which produced a profuse sweating of blood. Lombard mentions a general who experienced the same from chagrin elicited by loosing a battle. He tells of a nun, the most beautiful of the age, whose terror was so great on falling into the power of banditti, that it caused blood to ooze from every pore. A lecture delivered to the Society of Arts at Harlaan, in Europe, speaks of a person being prostrated on the deck of a ship by a storm, who, when raised, was found streaming with blood from the surface. He was not wounded, but the phenomenon had been occasioned by the excitement of mind. In the same lecture, a widow is mentioned who fancied that she saw the apparition of her son, supplicating her to release his soul from purgatory, by praying every Friday. On the ensuing Friday, while under extreme excitation of mind, a bloody perspiration covered her body. The same occurred every subsequent Friday, until she thought her task accomplished, after which, her mind returned to its usual state, and the bloody sweat ceased."

MINISTERS OF FIFTY OR SIXTY.

My three predecessors, then, were not dismissed, as many ministers are at the present day, simply because they were past the meridian of life. In some places, it is now regarded almost an unpardonable offence, for a clergyman to be over fifty years of age. Indeed, even before he is forty, some begin to whisper, that it is time for the old minister to ask a dismission, that they may secure the services of a young man—such complaints reach the ears of the pastor—his sensitive heart is grieved at the fact, that his performances, on account of his age, are so unacceptable to his people—but being unable to cause his grey hairs to turn black, or a third set of teeth to grow in his head, his only course of safety is to ask a dismission. Now, is it right to treat a faithful servant of Christ in this manner? Because, forsooth a man is not a boy, should his head be cut off? Who thinks of ceasing to employ a blacksmith, or a carpenter, or a shoemaker, or a lawyer, or a statesman, because they are fifty years of age? The Presidents of the United States have usually been men who were between fifty and seventy years of age. John Quincy Adams is nearly eighty; and who regards him as incompentent for the duties of a representative in Congress?

THE BOASTER REPROVED.—Euripides was slow in composing, and labored with difficulty, from which circumstance a foolish and malevolent person once observed that he had written a hundred verses in three days, while Euripides had only written three. "True," says Euripides, "but there is this difference between your poetry and mine—yours will expire in three days, but mine shall live for ages to come." Thus we often find that what is of rapid growth, soonest comes to decay. It has been found true also, sometimes in a moral sense, that those who have made the greatest profession, and seemed to have outstripped all others in their zeal, have in time of temptation fallen away; while the deliberate, the cautious, the humble, have held on their way.

AFRAID TO LEARN.—It is related that Galileo, who invented the telescope, with which he observed the satelites of Jupiter, invited a man who was opposed to him, to look through it, that he might observe Jupiter's moons. The man positively refused—saying, "If I should see them how could I maintain my opinions which I have advanced against your philosophy?" This is the case with many. They will not hear truth for fear that the arguments which they have framed will be destroyed, and they may be obliged to give up their vicious indulgences.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, September 3, 1846.

ADDRESS OF THE RHODE ISLAND SABBATH UNION.

On our first page to-day will be found an Address to the Inhabitants of the State of Rhode Island, prepared by a Committee of "the Rhode Island Sabbath Union." The document has the sanction of influential names, and is in many respects quite remarkable. It is characterized, we should say, by great candor and equally great inconsistency. Perhaps these are necessary characteristics of a popular address in favor of the first day of the week, since such an address must first profess a high regard for the Sabbath in order to awaken interest and secure confidence, and then show a total disregard for the Sabbath by pushing it aside without ceremony to give place to another and entirely different institution. Be that as it may, the address before us is marked by this inconsistency. It is, nevertheless, one of the best articles of the kind which we have seen, and we therefore bespeak for it a careful perusal.

The arguments in support of the claims of the Sabbath, are presented in a clear and forcible manner, and will meet with general approval. All intelligent Sabbath-keepers hold, with the writers of the Address, that when our Saviour said, "The Sabbath was made for man," he referred to the race, and hence that the institution was not designed for either Jews or Christians as such, but for every member of the human family. They hold also, that when the Creator proceeded "to bless and to sanctify" the seventh day, he made it a "positive Sabbath, forming a part of the primeval arrangement." They farther hold, that "a statute can expire but in two ways, by limitation or repeal;" and that in all the passages of Scripture which allude to the Sabbath, "no limitation of time is hinted at, but the reverse." But how, after acknowledging all these positions, to get rid of the old seventh-day Sabbath, and introduce in its place a new first-day Sabbath, that is a question which many intelligent Sabbath-keepers do not know how to answer. It was evidently an embarrassing question to the writers of this Address. They have endeavored to escape from their dilemma, not by meeting and fairly disposing of the question, but by first proving the claims of the original Sabbath, which was the seventh day—then assuming, without a shadow of proof, that the first day of the week is the Sabbath—and then, in conclusion, urging all those inspired promises and threatenings in respect to keeping the seventh day, as encouragements or warnings to keep holy the first day. This is undoubtedly the easiest way to get round the difficulty. But is it effectual?—is it honest?—We say, No.

Let us look a little more minutely at the reasoning of the Address in respect to the propriety of observing the first day of the week instead of the seventh. The following paragraph comprises all which is said on the subject:—

> "As to the propriety of observing the first day of the week, instead of the seventh, we deem it sufficient to say, that the Christian world generally having now for eighteen centuries regarded the first day of the week as the true Sabbath, it cannot be expected that they will change it back till they are clearly shown to be in the wrong. If any are persuaded of the claim of the seventh day to be observed, we would respectfully urge upon them to maintain such observance, in strict accordance with the Bible exposition of its sanctity."

Here it is assumed, that the Christian world generally have for eighteen centuries regarded the first day of the week as the true Sabbath. That assumption is false, as can be easily proven, and as every intelligent reader of Church History ought to know. The Address itself acknowledges that our Saviour "gave instructions respecting the observance of the Sabbath—(not the first day of the week, nor the Lord's day)—in an emergency which was not to occur until more than thirty years after he left the world." In the mean time the Acts of the Apostles specify some thirty religious meetings on the Sabbath, and tell us by implication of many more; yet not one word is said about the first day having taken the place of the seventh as the Sabbath. If we turn now from the Scriptures to the History of the Church, we shall find direct and abundant testimony that the assumption of the Address is wholly without foundation. Theophilus Brabourne tells us, that "the Sabbath was in use in the primitive churches after Christ, for three or four hundred years, being so long as the church retained her best purity." On the other hand, Dr. Francis White, Lord Bishop of Ely, in his "Defence of the Orthodox Doctrine of the Church of England," tells us that "the catholic church, for more than six hundred years after Christ, permitted labor and gave license to many Christian people to work on the Lord's day, at such hours as they were not commanded to be present at the services of the church." The assertions of both these writers are corroborated by the words of Ignatius, who says, "Let us not keep the Sabbath after a Jewish manner, in sloth and idleness. But let us keep it after a spiritual manner, not in bodily ease, but in the study of the law, and in contemplation of the works of God. . . . And after we have kept the Sabbath, let every one that loveth Christ keep the Lord's day festival." From this it is evident, that Ignatius did not regard the Lord's day as having taken the place of the Sabbath, but that he would have the Sabbath kept first as such, after which the Lord's day, not as the Sabbath, but as a festival. To the foregoing we might add the testimony of many other eminent historians. We might quote from the History of the Sabbath by the learned Dr. Peter Heylyn, who proves beyond dispute, that the doctrine of the divine appointment of the first day of the week for the Sabbath, was never taught in England until the year 1595. Or we might quote the assertion of Dr. Richard Whateley, present Archbishop of Dublin, that the custom of calling the first day of the week by the name of the Sabbath originated with the Puritans less than three hundred years ago, and only prevails now where their influence is felt. But it is needless to multiply proofs upon this point. If the works to which we have alluded do not prove this assumption of the Address to be false, then we may despair of proving any thing from history.

But suppose we grant, for the sake of the argument, all that the writers of the Address claim, viz. that the Christian world generally have for eighteen centuries regarded the first day of the week as the true Sabbath. Does that prove it to be the true Sabbath? If it does, then the fact that all the Mohammedan world have for several centuries kept the sixth day of the week as a Sabbath, proves that day to be the true Sabbath. Or, does the long continuance of a wrong change its character so as to make it right? Do acts of disobedience, by being repeated a thousand times, become acts of obedience? If so, then there is scarcely any form of sin which may not be justified by examples reaching back, not merely eighteen centuries, but sixty centuries, even to the fall of man. Perhaps, however, the Committee do not mean to claim, that the antiquity of this practice proves its correctness; they only mean to give it as a reason why they should continue it until clearly shown to be in the wrong. What do they mean by being clearly shown? They have the Bible before them, which asserts—clearly enough, one would think—that "the SEVENTH day is the Sabbath; in IT thou shalt not do any work." Now although they have ransacked the Bible until they have found nearly every passage which is essential to establish the claims of the Sabbath, they have not found, or at least they have not presented, the first passage to justify the change of the Sabbath. In such circumstances, what is their duty? They find themselves working upon the day in which God has forbidden them to work; shall they stand still until somebody proves to them clearly that it is wrong to do what God forbids? If men will deliberately shut their eyes against the truth, and then justify themselves in error because they do not see "clearly," there is but little hope of showing them that they are in the wrong. We cannot help thinking, from the shape of this Address, that the members of the Committee were far from seeing clearly that the first day of the week is the Sabbath by divine appointment. Nay, more—we question whether any one of them dare say before God that he is free from misgivings on that point. We know very well, that vast numbers of the common people question the propriety of keeping the first day, and tremble for their safety in neglecting the seventh day. They are only kept in countenance by such sophistry as this, from the high seats of learning and influence. The position here taken, that men may continue their time-honored practices until clearly shown to be in the wrong—connected as it is with a practical refusal to inquire after the truth—would, if carried out to its legitimate results, put an end to all reform, and justify the darkest deeds sanctioned by the customs of heathenism.

"If any are persuaded of the claim of the seventh day to be observed, we would respectfully urge upon them to maintain such observance." This is kind and charitable towards the Sabbath-keepers of Rhode Island, and we doubt not the advice will be followed. But a question here arises, which may trouble some honest readers. The Committee have said a great deal about the duty of keeping the Sabbath, and the sin of neglecting it; but can it be, that after all they are so uncertain which day is the Sabbath, as to recommend the keeping of a day which they themselves secularize? It is even so; and we are not certain but what if there were in Rhode Island communities of those who keep the sixth day of the week, the same recommendation would be extended to them; and so the people would have three Sabbath days in succession. In such case, the Magistrates, who are here called upon to "maintain those civil enactments which were intended for the protection of God's holy day," would have their hands full, and perhaps their prisons too. Does not this recommendation show the perfect folly of attempting to bring about a Sabbath reform, until the friends of such reform take a position where they can bring a "thus saith the Lord" to enforce both the day and the duties of the Sabbath?

We have already occupied too much space in commenting upon this Address of the Rhode Island Sabbath Union. We will only add, that we are truly grateful to the authors of it for lending the sanction of their names to sustain some of our strongest, but often disputed, positions. Henceforth, we suppose, it may be regarded as settled, upon the authority of Dr. Wayland and his influential coadjutors:—1st. That when "God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it," at the completion of the work of creation, he gave us a positive Sabbath, and not merely a moral precept requiring rest one day in seven. 2d. That the words of our Lord, "The Sabbath was made for man," may justly be interpreted as teaching that the Sabbath was not made for Jews or for Christians as such, but for every individual of the race. 3d. That in the Scriptures there is no limitation of the Sabbath; neither Romans 14, nor Colossians 2, having any reference to the subject, one way or the other. 4th. That the Sabbath spoken of in connection with the flight from Jerusalem, was not a new day, but the old Sabbath. 5th. That the grand argument in favor of continuing to observe the first day of the week is drawn—not from the Scriptures, but—from the practice of the Christian world. Let these concessions be noted, and preserved for future use.

LITERARY ANNIVERSARIES.

Accounts of the Anniversaries of Colleges and Theological Seminaries have occupied an important place in the columns of our exchange papers for a few weeks past. Of course our readers will not thank us to copy them. From a hasty perusal of several reports, we judge that the interest in thorough collegiate studies is slowly increasing. The number of graduates seems not to diminish, and arrangements are making to furnish them with every facility which can be desired. We wish the same could be said with truth of theological studies and students. From the facts before us, however, we are led to question whether the theological seminaries of our country are making improvements to correspond with those made by the colleges. We believe it is agreed that the number of students has not much increased for several years past. The most common reason assigned for this, is the absence of revivals and the low state of religion in the churches. It is natural to expect that there will be but few theological students in a time when piety is at so low an ebb that men decide to enter upon studies for the ministry from no higher motives than they would enter upon other professional studies. Perhaps it is well; but there is certainly great occasion to pray and labor for better times.

A NEW UNIVERSITY.

Among the acts passed by the Legislature of New York at its last session, was one incorporating the University of Buffalo. It provides not only for the establishment of a Collegiate Institution, but of a University, with a complete organization of the Law, Medical, and Theological Departments. One term of the act was, that the Commissioners named in it might organize the University when $20,000 were subscribed to its capital stock. This amount having been subscribed, the Commissioners gave notice of the fact, and the stockholders proceeded to elect a Council to administer the affairs of the institution in future. This Council have since held a meeting, decided to organize a Medical Department at once, and elected seven gentlemen somewhat widely known as experienced lecturers to fill the different medical professorships. If we may judge from what is said in the Buffalo papers, that is a very favorable point for the establishment of a University, and the prospect of its going forward and taking a high stand is very flattering.

BAPTISTS IN DENMARK.

The readers of the Recorder are somewhat familiar with the persecutions to which many Baptists in Denmark have been subjected. The Rev. Dr. Baird, who is now in that country, speaks of them as follows, in a letter to the editor of the N. Y. Evangelist:—

> Although no change in the laws has taken place, you will be pleased to learn that a little band of Baptists in this city are not now molested, nor have they been for some months, if not a year. You are, perhaps, aware that some years ago two brothers here of the name of Moenster, (Munster) one an engraver, the other a student of philosophy in the university, became pious, and adopted Baptist principles. One of them (the engraver) being a married man, and occupying a house, they began to hold meetings in his parlor. This was contrary to law. I attended their meetings with deep interest in the fall of 1840. Since that time the elder Munster has been thrown into prison six times, and lain there in all three years. Others have been imprisoned. They have had to pay a great deal of money in the shape of fines. But the "word of the Lord is not bound." The little congregation exceeds three hundred, and there are five others in the provinces. "Blessed are they who are persecuted for righteousness sake." I have visited these dear brethren often.
> I was glad to hear them well spoken of by all with whom I conversed. There is a great deal of sympathy felt here for them. Let us hope that there will soon be an end of such conduct on the part of the government. I was gratified to hear these brethren speak so kindly of the King and Queen, and indeed of the entire government. You will ask, then, who are the authors of the shameful persecutions which they have endured? Shall I tell you? I am ashamed to do so, but it is the hierarchy. Oh! this accursed union of Church and State! How it generates formalism, pride, intolerance, and every thing which is contrary to the true spirit of Christianity! The religion of the Saviour, though it is uncompromising with error, teaches man to bear even with those who hold the most dreadful errors; to pray for them; to do them good; to respect the consciences and rights of all men.

A MAGNIFICENT BEQUEST.—The late Mrs. Magee, of Dublin, has bequeathed £20,000 for the establishment of a Presbyterian college, to be appropriated under the direction of the General Assembly; and in addition she has bequeathed India funds to the amount of about £25,000 to the Foreign Missions, and £5,000 to the Home Missions of Ireland. The principal for the Foreign Missions to remain intact; but as now invested it will yield £700 or £800 per annum. This is encouraging to the Presbyterians of Ireland.

TEMPERANCE IN OREGON.—The people of Oregon have a law respecting the importation and sale of ardent spirits, which strikes at the root of intemperance in that country. It provides, that if any person shall import or introduce any ardent spirits into Oregon, with intent to sell, barter, give, or trade the same, and shall offer it, he shall be fined the sum of fifty dollars for each offence, which may be recovered by indictment, or by trial before a Justice of the Peace, without the form of pleading. If any person shall sell, barter, or give away any ardent spirits, he shall forfeit the sum of twenty dollars, to be recovered in the same way. If any person shall establish or carry on any manufactory or distillery of ardent spirits in Oregon, he shall be subject to be indicted before the County Court, as for a nuisance; and if convicted, he shall be fined the sum of one hundred dollars; and the Court shall issue an order to the Sheriff, directing him to seize and destroy the distilling apparatus, which order the Sheriff shall execute. If similar laws were passed in some of the more populous States an immense amount of misery would be prevented.

CATHOLIC INSUBORDINATION.—The village of Waltham, Mass., has been several times disturbed by riots at the Catholic Church. The cause of difficulty seems to be, that the bishop has placed a priest over the people with whom a part of the congregation are displeased. On a recent Sunday morning, when the priest entered the church, those opposed to him created a disturbance, which was not quieted until the military had been ordered out by the authorities. On Sunday morning, week before last, the unpopular priest again attempted to occupy the church, when a disturbance arose, which led to the ringing of church bells and the firing of cannon to call out the militia. The tumult was quelled, however, by the retreat of the priest.

MONUMENT TO JOHN KNOX.—The old house in which John Knox lived and died, and from a window of which he used sometimes to preach to the multitudes assembled in the street, has long been pointed out to every curious traveler. But it is to be taken down—if indeed it has not already been demolished—to make room for two churches and two schools, surmounted by a tower, designed as a monument to the great Reformer. The thought is a happy one. While the old house stood, no other monument was needed. But since that is removed, to what more appropriate purpose could the ground be dedicated, than to the erection of suitable buildings for instruction and worship.

COLLEGIATE EDUCATION IN SCOTLAND.—The Free Church of Scotland is about to establish a College for the thorough classical education of not only its ministry, but the people. Twenty-one individuals have subscribed £1000 each, making a total of more than $100,000, for the object. The corner stone of the building has been laid by Dr. Chalmers, and the work is rapidly progressing.

TEMPERANCE IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES.—Rev. Dr. Baird recently attended a Temperance Convention at Stockholm, and states that the King, Queen, and Crown Prince were present. Dr. B. thinks it would be difficult to name another monarch who feels such an interest in the temperance cause as to induce him to attend a Convention day after day. He adds the following facts:—

> "From the document (the report,) I learned that there are in Sweden 332 Temperance Societies, and upward of 90,000 members.
>
> In Norway, where the temperance cause has only just taken effectual hold, there were at the beginning of this year 128 Temperance Societies, and 14,812 members. The prospect is in the highest degree encouraging in relation to that country. A few years ago, the Storthing passed an act directing all the distilleries to cease in ten years.
>
> There are now in all Germany, including Austria, 1426 Temperance Societies, and no less than 1,019,133 members.

STARVING PRICES FOR WOMEN'S WORK.—We have heretofore given some astonishing specimens of the low prices at which sewing is done by poor women in New York. But the half has not been told, as you may see by the following extracts from the Monthly Report of the Office and Register Department of the American Female Moral Reform Society:—

> "A poor and very respectable woman, whom we well know, and whose husband has been out of work ten months, called for advice in certain matters. I expressed a wish to see the work she had obtained, which she was reluctant to show me; it was a jean coat with one pocket and four button holes, and 'must be well done, or she would get no more.' It was long before I could prevail on her to tell me the price she obtained for making it, saying, 'the man would give her no more if she told—he gave as much as others—and was better than others, as he was kind and good.' She had walked two miles to obtain it—must do the same to return it—and was to receive five cents only! Who would dare to buy or wear a garment so made? The same man had given out, as she told me, the week before, seven hundred shirts to make for five cents each, and then was obliged to send twenty poor starving creatures away without any. These customers speak highly of his justice and endeavors to serve them.
> "At No. — ——— st., a Jew gives ten cents for making fine shirts with ten plaits in the bosom, neatly made, and four button-holes. She made one, going for it and returning it the same distance; but found she should starve at that, and declined taking any more. She had to buy her own thread, costing two cents, which he did not allow, and two days were required to make the shirt."

MEXICAN AFFAIRS.—Recent accounts from Mexico state that several very important military posts, and great multitudes of the people, have declared in favor of Santa Ana, whose arrival was hourly expected. What effect this will have upon the termination of the war, is quite uncertain. A letter from Washington says, that on Wednesday, August 26, a Cabinet Council was held on the subject of our relations with Mexico, and especially in reference to the recent demonstrations of the Santa Ana party; and that it was determined to take no farther steps, diplomatic or belligerent, in regard to Mexico, until the result of the revolution shall be known. The fleets are to remain inactive, and General Taylor is to continue to menace an invasion, until the new Santa Ana government shall be established. If diplomacy should then fail, the war is to be commenced in earnest, and means are to be found to render our very expensive naval establishment somewhat less useless than it has hitherto been.

TAVERNS IN OLD TIMES.—If any body thinks that the evils of visiting taverns and using strong drink, were not discovered until modern times, his impression may be corrected by reading the following paragraph, which is taken from a Confession of the Waldenses, composed more than seven hundred years ago:—

> "A tavern is the fountain of sin; the school of the devil. It is the manner of God to show his power in the church, and to work miracles—that is to say, to give sight to the blind, to make the lame go, the dumb to speak, the deaf to hear. But the devil doth quite contrary to this in a tavern; for when a drunkard goeth to a tavern, he goeth uprightly—but when he cometh forth, he cannot go at all, and he hath lost his sight, his hearing, and his speech. The lectures that are read in this school of the devil, are gluttonies, oaths, perjuries, lying, and blasphemies, and divers other villanies—for in a tavern are quarrels, slanders, contentions, and murders."

STATE OF MORALS IN FLORIDA.—A letter in the Charleston Mercury, dated at Quincy, Florida, Aug. 14, says:—"The minds of the people here are too unsettled to think of any thing at present. Our jail is full of rascals for negro and horse stealing, who will be hung in less than six weeks. Last night, about 10 o'clock, while the Western Stage was within half a mile of this place, the driver was shot and died a few hours after. There is a dreadful state of things here, but the den of villains is fast breaking up. We have now in jail eight finished rogues, the murderer of the poor stage driver among them. An Extra Court is to be held on the 14th of September, to try and hang them all of course—in fact, a great number were anxious to have them hung to-day.

LIFE IN CALIFORNIA.—A letter from a visitor to California gives the following picturesque view of the social virtues to be found in those waters:—"Most of the inhabitants are great scamps; they not only confess that they steal horses and cattle, but they boast of it. I bought a horse this morning that the man is to steal for me in a day or two. You will think this strange conduct, but this same man was not only robbed but beaten by the other; and there is no law to punish them, so that he has to make himself whole in the coin of his opponent. The Spanish portion of the inhabitants are a thieving, cowardly, dancing, lewd people, and generally indolent and faithless."

SOCIAL EVILS AND THEIR REMEDIES.

The following paragraph is from an editorial article in the New York Tribune. The picture may be too highly colored in some respects, but it is so true in many other respects that we cannot resist the inclination to copy it:—

> "Mamma," lisped a fashionable young lady the other day, "shall we have the same servants in Heaven that we have here? I should so like to have Polly to dress me in the mornings." The spirit here unconsciously evinced lies at the bottom of the deadly hostility of our time to the idea of a radical reform of society. Did the men and women about us sincerely desire the universal prevalence of equality and social justice, all beyond would be easy. But they do not. Nearly all at heart believe downright manual labor degrading; they would avoid it if possible; or, if not, they would gladly leave their children in a condition to avoid it. The hod-carrier and the washerwoman share this feeling equally with the banker and the fine lady—we think they have more of it in the average. Let the canal-digger or gardener's journeyman draw a prize in a lottery or hear of a fortune left him by a dead relative, and he promptly throws his spade from him and swears he will never do another day's work so long as he lives. Such an oath is easily kept; idleness, gluttony and drink generally finish him before long, leaving the most of his property to ruin his children. The banker may send his sons to a farm-school to learn the trade of gentleman-farming, but the newly-inflated hod-carrier will be sure to put his boys through college (if money will do it) and into the learned professions, though as unfit for such a destiny as a horse for leader at the opera. So the world goes—every body striving to get on other people's shoulders, and so trampling down hundreds in his reckless selfishness. Not one in a hundred even recognizes the primary truth that it is base, unmanly, unchristian, to sneak through life without an honest and steadfast purpose of doing good in it—without creating (not by proxy) at least as much wealth as you consume. Many a good Christian (as he understands it) thinks it perfectly right to add hundred thousand after hundred thousand dollars to his hoarded wealth or to spend tens of thousands per annum on the food, clothing, lodging, &c., of his family of six or eight persons, while ignorance, want, and wretchedness stalk hopeless and uncheered all around him. Alas! the church itself often fails to remind him pointedly and frequently that this is not according to Christ. It is more likely to cry, "Infidel!" at him who does.

VERY IMPORTANT FROM MEXICO.

Santa Ana at Vera Cruz—The Dictator Paredes Imprisoned—Farther News from the Army and the U. S. Squadron in the Pacific—The Californias Seized, &c.

By the Magnetic Telegraph, the New York Tribune has received the following important news, from Washington, dated Monday, August 31:—

The steamer McKim arrived at New Orleans on the 23d, with dates from Point Isabel to the 17th and from Camargo to the 13th. She brought 100 volunteers on the sick list. Gen. Wm. O. Butler was confined to his tent at Point Isabel, by sickness. China, 90 miles above Camargo, was taken by McCulloch and his 75 Rangers, on the 5th of August. Seguin, with 100 mounted Mexicans, took flight from the town, which contains 700 inhabitants. There were 300 regulars at Camargo, on the 9th, ready to start for Montery.

The volunteers were pouring in. General Taylor arrived on the 9th, with his staff. Baylie Peyton also arrived on the 9th. A grand review of the troops took place, and it is said Taylor expressed himself in terms of admiration of their discipline. Duncan's battery and McCulloch with a portion of his men left Camargo on the 12th, in the direction of Monterey.

The steamer Arab arrived off Vera Cruz on the 15th August with Santa Ana on board. He immediately placed himself at the head of the movement in that department. The departments of Puebla and Mexico have declared for Santa Ana, and Paredes has already been taken prisoner. The revolt at the Capital was headed by General Salas. Before Santa Ana left Havana, he took letters from General Campbell to Commodore Conner, and avowed himself, in reply to some inquiries as to his intentions, as follows:—"If the people of my country are for War, then I am with them, but I would prefer peace."

News had been received in Mexico that Monterey on the Pacific and California had been taken by one of the vessels of the United States squadron. Another account says that all California had yielded to the Americans.

A letter dated at Vera Cruz 16th August, says that advices have been received by Express of the formal Annexation of California to the United States; that is, the U. S. forces have taken possession of California. This news came to the British Consulate at Vera Cruz.

An Elephant's Doings.—The Buffalo Commercial Advertiser learns by a gentleman who was at Lockport on Saturday, that at noon of that day an Elephant belonging to a menagerie exhibiting there, walked out of his tent toward a span of horses attached to a wagon some twenty rods off. The horses took fright as the huge beast approached them, broke loose and ran a few rods to an angle of a fence; the elephant followed, capsized the wagon and threw the horses some two rods over the fence. One of the horses rose with several broken ribs, and managed to escape his assailant, which fell upon the other with his tusks, tore out his entrails, and continued to toss him along the fence some ten rods or more.

At this time the keeper, who was at dinner when the elephant escaped from the tent, came up and called the animal by his name. The elephant immediately obeyed the word, and followed the keeper to an orchard about a hundred rods off, where he was secured by strong chains made fast to the trunk of a full grown tree.

Just as our informant left in the afternoon, he heard that the elephant had uprooted the tree to which he was fastened, and had injured a man; but learned no particulars. The rage of the elephant, it is said, was caused by some tobacco concealed in the food that some of the bystanders offered to him. People cannot be too cautious how they trifle in such a way with an elephant.

Dreadful Explosion of Fire Damp.—The Pottsville Miners' Journal of the 29th inst. has an account of an explosion of gas which took place on the afternoon of Wednesday last, at the colliery of Mr. George Rich, on the West Branch of the Mt. Carbon road, known as Lewis vein, which was most disastrous in its results. It was followed by what is known to miners as choke damp, and black or after damp, by which eight men were overpowered. So violent was it that for a long time no assistance could be extended to them successfully, and Mr. Rich, the owner, who entered for this purpose, was near falling a victim to his philanthropy. At last they were extricated, six of them perfectly insensible, one, named John Tiley, dead, and long after yet another, who, though in longer than any of the rest, was yet recovered. Mr. Rich himself was, for a long time, in a state of unconsciousness and delirium, but is recovering, as are all who were taken from the shaft alive. The scene was of heartfelt interest—the prostration of the sufferers, the dismay of the spectators, and the agony of the families of the injured men, presented one of those scenes persons who do not live in mining districts can form no adequate idea of.

From Buenos Ayres.—A Buenos Ayrean paper of June 13 says:—The predatory Indians of the desert, whose visits since General Rosas's memorable expedition are, happily, but "few and far between," lately made an incursion into the department of the North, when General Pacheco immediately detached from the army of the centre a strong column under the command of Major Bustos in pursuit of the invaders. The column penetrated into the heart of the desert and surprised the Indians in their wigwams. The result has been that upward of 60 fighting Indians, including two Caciques, have been killed, and 5 taken prisoners; 900 sheep, 200 and odd head of cattle, 160 mares and 470 horses, as also large deposits of Indian corn, pumpkins and other provisions, falling, besides, into the hands of the victors.

Legal Weight.—The following table of the number of pounds allowed to the bushel of different grains, &c., may be a convenient reference to many:—Wheat, 60; beans, 60; clover seed, 60; potatoes, 60; rye, 56; flax seed, 56; corn, 56; onions, 57; buckwheat seed, 52; salt, 50; barley, 48; castor beans, 56; hemp seed, 44; timothy seed, 45; oats, 24; bran, 20; blue grass seed, 14; dried peaches, 33; dried apples, 22; stone coal, 70.

Lines to Mrs. Wells on the Death of her Son.

Death has been near to thee,
Thy little one is fled;
Remember him with love,
Though sleeping with the dead;
And when his voice you seem to hear,
Then think his angel spirit near.

I look'd upon his face,
So beautiful and sweet,
In calm repose of death,
He seemed as if asleep—
It seemed as if an angel's hand
Had borne him to the spirit-land.

The faintly-lingering smile
Which on his features lay,
That was a token left,
And thus it seemed to say,
'I'm happy in the world above,
Encircled by eternal love.'

How blessed is the hope
To us so kindly given,
When from our friends we part,
To meet again in heaven—
To meet in that eternal home
Where parting tear is never known.

When o'er his grave you bend,
And shed the sorrowing tear,
Think not of him as dead,
But only sleeping there;
The sleeping dust you mourn shall rise,
To live immortal in the skies.

Miscellaneous.

From the Boston Cultivator.

AWAY TO THE WOODLANDS.

Away to the Woodlands,
  Where the wild birds are singing,
And the flowers of the forest
  From their green beds are springing;
Away, while the dew-drops
  Like rich pearls are gleaming,
And o'er the tall hill-tops,
  The bright sun is beaming.

Away to the woodlands,
  Where the waters are gushing,
And the blossoms of spring-time,
  In their beauty are blushing;
Away! the soft breezes
  Now are kissing the flowers,
And the honey-bee's ling'ring
  In the sweet, fragrant bowers.

O, yes! to the woodlands
  We are joyfully hasting,
And the pleasures of nature
  In their fullnesss we're tasting;
And, like the winged songsters,
  We will gratefully raise
Our notes of thanksgiving,
  Adoration and praise.

THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.

The origin of these Islands is evidently volcanic. On the large Islands, great numbers of extinct craters are visible, while on those of the most recent formation, some of them are sending up the last expiring columns of smoke, and others seem to be at the very noontide of fiery strength. Perhaps no objects in nature exhibit in a more striking light than do these Islands, the wonder-working power of the great laboratory of nature. Such immense masses of matter upheaved, not only from the bottom of the ocean, but from the inmost bowels of the earth, and thrown up, not only to the surface, but many thousand feet above, giving a stable and convenient abiding place for great numbers of human beings, accords only with the power of Him who had only to say, Let it be, and it was done.

The people bear evident marks of being derived from the Malay stock. To this origin they are traced, principally by their language and features. It may be a matter of curiosity to know how the first inhabitants found their way to these Islands, since the nearest continental coast, and the nearest Islands of importance, are distant about three thousand miles. Improbable as it may at first sight appear, there is little doubt that they were drifted upon the Islands by the winds and waves, upon such water craft as barbarous nations are found now to possess. Quite a number of Japanese have been drifted upon the Islands in small junks, and also picked up in the ocean in the vicinity, by whalemen, since the mission was established. No reason can be given why the ancestors of the present inhabitants might not have found their way there in a similar manner.

The bodily stature of the Sandwich Islanders is about equal to that of our own. They may be a little less in height, with a corresponding increase in width. Their color is copper, which is perhaps one of the very best hues for the skin, while it is one of the most agreeable colors for the eye to rest upon, as soon as we become divested of national prejudice.

Mentally, there is this peculiarity, if it may be called so, of the Sandwich Islanders. As a general rule, in childhood and early youth, they are bright and intellectual, and in adult life and old age, they are dull and stupid.

Morally, they are debased and degraded to almost a level with the present race of Egyptians, the lower castes of India, and the slaves of South Carolina.

The chiefs differ widely from the common people, in mental and bodily stature. They are almost twice as large, owing to their superior living, and much more intellectual, because of the freedom they enjoy. [Dr. T. Lafon.

A WOMAN KILLED BY HER HUSBAND.

The following extraordinary case occurred a short time since in Wurtemburgh; we find it related in a foreign journal:

Adam Gayring, a man of sixty-four years of age, of honest and upright dealings, loved and respected by all who knew him, presented himself on the 8th ult., before the authorities at Heidenheim, stated calmly that he had just killed his wife. His declaration was immediately taken, as follows:—"My wife," said he, "as every one knows, has been suffering for a long time from illness, and at times the pains she had to endure were such as to affect her reason; she latterly gave up all hopes of recovery, and continually repeated that not only was life a torment to her, but that she feared that if I died before her, she would be reduced to misery. This morning, after we had read together the 4th chapter of the Book of Judges, (they were devout people and read the Bible every day,) she requested me to drive a nail into her temple, as Jael did to Sisera, as such a death seemed to her short and easy, and would put an end to sufferings; she said she forgave me beforehand for the act, which absolved me before God and man. A nail, she said, would not cause a great hemorrhage, and would make but a slight wound. "As soon as I am dead," she added, "you con close the wound, put on a clean cap, and no one will know anything at all about it." After long resistance (continued Gayring) I gave way to the wishes of my wife. I took a nail and begun to drive it into her left temple with a hammer, but the nail was too weak, and the point, instead of entering flattened itself on the bone. I then took a small drill, but was equally unsuccessful. My wife grew impatient and repuested me to kill her at once with the hammer, which I accordingly did, by knocking in the skull. The body of my wife is at my house, where you can examine it at your leisure."

The magistrate immediately proceeded to the house with a medical man and Gayring under a strong guard. They found the body dressed, upon the bed. On the left temple there were two wounds, and the right side of the skull was knocked in as low down as the temple. Beside the bed was a table, on which was a bible, the nail, drill, and hammer alluded to. On the ground was a basin of water, in which the murderer according to his own declarations, washed his hands before presenting himself to the authorities.

Gayring is now in prison; he is perfectly calm and convinced that he acted well in fulfilling the wishes of his wife by putting an end to her sufferings.

MY FIRST PATIENT.

Dr. George Hubbard of Boston, in a letter to the editor of the Boston Medical and Surgical Journal, says thus:—

"Your Journal of late has had a good deal to say, pro and con, in relation to homœpathy; and while reading the same, I have often been reminded of the treatment of my first patient, the very first that I was ever called to, and for whom I took upon myself the responsibility of prescribing.

"The following is the case. In the year 1832 I was residing in the family of a planter in Eastern Virginia. I had then just commenced the practice of medicine. Late one evening, Daniel, the dining-room servant, a stout, healthy negro, was taken very suddenly ill. His master being absent, I was invited to see him. He was rolling upon the floor, twisting himself into every manner of shape, groaning, and seemed to be in great distress. His mistress, in the patient's hearing, asked me if I thought I could do anything for him. I told her I could relieve him. I went into another room, took a piece of wheat bread, soaked it in water, made two or three common-sized pills, and to give them the appearance of medicine, rubbed them over with soot from the back of the chimney, placed them upon the hearth before the fire, and baked them hard. I then went back to the patient, gave him the pills, and ordered him off to bed.

Next morning, before I left my room, I heard Daniel below, singing and whistling, and apparently in a state of great happiness. As soon as I met him, I inquired after his health. He said he felt first-rate, that the pills cured him right off, that he never took any medicine in his life that did him so much good. He continued well, and often spoke of the great cure received from the pills."

Casting out Devils.—The following story is credited to a French paper:

Last January, a rich hypochondriac in the north of France was persuaded by his friends that he was bewitched; and, repairing to his physician, announced that he had seven devils. Only seven? said the doctor. "But seven."

The man of medicine, seeing that his patient's malady was mental, went through with a formal examination, and promised to cure him in seven days, driving one demon from his body every morning, at 20 francs each, with the exception of the last, to overcome whose obstinate tenacity was worth forty francs. The hypochondriac consented, and the next day was subjected to the action of a machine, novel and formidable in appearance to him, and received a severe electric shock. He shrieked aloud; and the doctor said coldly, "one has departed." The same operation had been performed six successive days; and when the seventh came, the patient was warned to summon all his courage for a contest with the chief of the band, whose resistance would be tremendous. The doctor then proceeded to give him a shock which laid him sprawling on the floor. Gayly recovering himself, "I am cured!" he exclaimed, paid the price agreed upon, and went his way.

Moral.—"Answer a fool according to his folly."

Forests and Streams.—That remarkable man, Humboldt, has reduced it almost to a demonstration, that the streams of a country fail in proportion to the destruction of its timber. And of course, if the streams fail, our seasons will be worse; it must get drier and drier in proportion. Every body knows, who can number twenty years back, that the water courses have failed considerably, and that the seasons have been getting drier every year. Humboldt, speaking of the Valley of Araguay in Venezuela, says that the lake receded as agriculture advanced, until the beautiful plantations of sugar-cane, banana and cotton-trees, were established on its banks, which (banks) year after year were farther from them. After the separation of that Province from Spain, and the decline of agriculture amid the desolating wars which swept over this beautiful region, the process of clearing was arrested, and old lands grew up in trees with that rapidity common to the tropics, and in a few years the inhabitants were alarmed by a rise of the waters, and an inundation of their choicest plantations.

The Rage for the Antique.—A foreign correspondent of the Philadelphia North American, remarking upon the fashionable mania for articles that seem old, says, that such is the rage for Italian antique, that regular manufactories, subterraneous, are established at Rome. Arms of heroes, heads of gods, feet of Satyrs, and fragments—of nobody, are formed in endless variety, and colored so as to resemble the most perfect specimens of antiquity. When ready, they are concealed among ruins by goatherds, and travelers are, as if by chance, directed to them. England is full of these antiquities of six months old; as English travelers generally are the most wealthy, and very easily gulled. Similar establishments abound, also, for the manufacture of coins, and coins of the Cæsars, &c., &c., of a similar antiquity, are carried off to the cabinets of London in great numbers. Medieval antiquities are the rage in Paris, and similar manufactories abound there. A young antiquarian showed lately, with great pride, to an artist, a very fine specimen of Gothic furniture, which he had just bought at great cost. "It is very fine," said his friend, "and it will last you long; for it is quite new."

Points of Honor.—Col. Montgomery was shot in a duel about a dog; Capt. Ramsay in one about a servant; Mr. Fetherston, in one about a recruit; Stearn's father in one about a goose; another gentleman in one about "an acre of anchovies;" one officer was challenged for merely asking his opponent to enjoy the second goblet; and another was compelled to fight about a pinch of snuff; General Barry was challenged by a Captain Smith, for declining a glass of wine with him at dinner in a steamboat, although the General had pleaded as an excuse that wine invariably made him sick; and Lieutenant Crowther lost his life in a duel because he was refused admittance to a club of pigeon shooters.

To Shake off Trouble.—'Set about doing good to somebody; put on your hat and go and visit the sick and the poor; inquire into their wants and administer unto them; seek out the desolate and oppressed, and tell them of the consolations of religion. I have often tried this method, and have always found it the best medicine for a heavy heart.' [Howard.

A Lark and a Hawk.—It may be questioned whether the human mind could have shown more sagacity than is exhibited in the following case of instinct in a bird. As a gentleman was traveling on horseback a short time since, in the West of Norfolk, England, a lark dropped on the pommel of his saddle, and spreading its wings in a submissive manner, cowered close to him. He stopped his horse, and sat for some time in astonishment, looking at the bird, which he supposed to be wounded; but endeavoring to take it, it crept around him, and placed itself behind. Turning himself on the saddle to observe it, it dropped between the legs of the horse, and remained immovable. It then struck him that the poor thing was pursued, and as its last resort hazarded its safety with him, when looking up, a hawk was perceived hovering directly over them. The poor bird again mounted the saddle, under the eye of its protector; the disappointed hawk shifted his station, and the little fugitive, watching his opportunity, darted over the hedge, and was hid in an instant.

Tunnel Under London.—The plans and sections of the railway tunnel under London, are now before the public, and excite universal admiration. There is something magnificent in this scheme of the London and Birmingham Company, and of their engineer, Mr. Stephenson. The works are proposed to commence at the Camden town station, crossing the Hampstead road by two arches of 70 feet span, and then by means of viaduct and embankment, progressing to the western side of Maiden Lane, where the subterranean communication begins. Thence, below the street, square, crescent, and church, varying from 30 to 100 feet deep, the tunnel is carried to the city terminus, on the site of the old Fleet Prison. The tunnel will be about two miles in length; the whole extension better than three. To the metropolis it will be an incalculable benefit, superseding the ponderous wagons, the convenience of passengers, and part of that interminable bustle and roar which agitate the "mighty heart" of London.

Surnames.—In Sweden, the nobles did not assume them till late in the sixteenth century—"not before the beginning of the fourteenth"—and the lower orders not, of course, till some time after. Lapland is said to have used them much earlier. The country people in Denmark, Sweden, and Norway, have as yet but few; the Sclavonian population of Eastern Europe none, in general, but patronymics. In Esthonia, the serfs, on their emancipation a few years ago, received them at their own request from the nobles. In 1584 many noble Russian families had them not; nor was it till 1681, or soon after, that all took them. In Germany none but the highest families had surnames before the twelfth century; about that time the rest of the nobility, and in the fourteenth and fifteenth the bulk of the people began to assume them. The Azorean poor have but very few now, and in Elba they were all but unknown not many years ago.

The Ruling Passion.—Bonaparte died in his military garb, his Field Marshal's uniform and boots, which he had ordered to be put on a short time previous to his dissolution. Augustus Cæsar chose to die in a standing position, and was careful in arranging his person and dress for the occasion. Julius Cæsar, when slain by the conspirators in the Capitol, concealed his face beneath the folds of his toga. Siward, Earl of Northumberland, when at the point of death, quitted his bed and put on his armor, saying "that it became not a man to die like a beast." A more remarkable instance is that of Maria Louisa, of Austria, who, a short time before she breathed her last, having fallen into a slight slumber, one of the ladies in attendance remarked that her Majesty seemed to sleep; "No," said she, "I could sleep if I would indulge: but I am sensible of the near approach of death, and I would not allow myself to be surprised by him in my sleep; I wish to meet my dissolution awake."

Such are the efforts of poor, expiring mortality—still clinging to earth—still laboring for the breath of posterity, and exerting itself in efforts to fall with gracefulness at the last.

Clear out your Eyes.—Spark Arresters being defective, or not in use on some railroads, the following directions for removing a spark or cinder from the eye are furnished by a correspondent of the American Railroad Journal:—"Should the obstruction be in the upper part of the eye, take the eyelashes of the upper lid between the fingers of one hand, and draw it away from the eye-ball, while with the other hand, press the lower row of eyelashes completely underneath, (between the eye-ball and the upper lid,) closing the eye firmly at the same instant. A little gentle working, to and fro, of the eyelid, with the finger—thus thoroughly lapped over each other—will immediately remove the obstruction. Should the cinder have lodged in the lower part of the eye, place the upper row of eye-lashes in the same position, underneath the lower part of the lid (as described above,) and the relief is certain."

How to Prolong Life.—For many years there prevailed in China an extraordinary superstition and belief that the secret sect of Tao had discovered an elixir which bestowed immortality. No less than three Emperors died after swallowing a drink presented to them by the eunuchs of the palace, as the draught that was to confer never-ending life. "The best method of prolonging life, and of making life happy," said a wise Mandarin to one of these infatuated princes, "is to control your appetites, subdue your passions, and practice virtue! Most of your predecessors, O Emperor! would have lived to a good old age had they followed the advice which I give you!"

Sleep.—Few of our readers, perhaps, are aware that the human body falls asleep by degrees. According to M. Cabins, a French physiologist, 'the muscles of the legs and arms lose their power before those which support the head; and these last sooner than the muscles which sustain the back; and he illustrates this by the case of a person who sleeps on horseback, or while they are standing or walking.' He conceives that the sense of sight sleeps first; then the sense of taste; then the sense of smell; next that of hearing, and last, that of touch. He maintains, also, that the viscera fall asleep one after another, and sleep with different degrees of soundness.

Don't know his own Son.—There is a good story told of Jarvis, the painter. Starting out one day, with two or three companions, for a spree, the ever-observing eye of the painter was attracted by some boys, actively engaged at play, and particularly by one of those geniuses "born to rule," who was leading in their evolutions. "Come here my man," cred Jarvis, "what is your name?" "My name is John, and I am not your man," quickly answered the boy. "John? why that is my name," said Jarvis, "what is your other name?" "Wesley." "John Wesley? that is my name too. Any more names?—the more the merrier." "Jarvis," said the boy, "Jarvis? John Wesley Jarvis! Why who was your father?" was the earnest inquiry. "He's Jarvis the painter, and mother says he's a very bad man too."

Lake Superior.—This immense inland ocean is four hundred and ninety miles in length, and is seventeen hundred in circumference; being the largest body of fresh water on the globe. It contains many islands, one of them, the Isle Royale, is one hundred miles in length, and forty in breadth. Upwards of thirty rivers empty themselves into it, and one curious fact in relation to it is well ascertained, that the quantity of water discharged by the Sault St. Marie, is not one tenth of what it receives from its tributary streams. Evaporation must, therefore, be the principal agent in keeping the lake down to its usual level.

High Road to Suicide.—Foppery begat a spruce shop-boy, a spruce shop-boy begat a pair of half boots, a pair of half boots begat a little stick, a little stick and half boots begat ambition, ambition begat credit, credit begat a shop, a shop begat a horse, a horse begat a chaise, a chaise begat a curricle, a curricle begat expense, expense begat a hazard table, a hazard table begat losses, losses begat a bankruptcy, and bankruptcy begat a goal, a goal begat want and misery, want and misery begat a disregard for life, and disregard for life begat suicide.

Painting Houses.—Paint applied to the exterior of buildings late in autumn or in winter, will endure twice as long as when applied early in summer or in hot weather. In the former case it dries slowly, and becomes very hard like a glazed surface, not easily affected afterwards by weather, or worn off by the beating of storms. But in very hot weather, the oil of the paint soaks into the wood at once, as into a sponge, leaving the lead nearly dry and ready to crumble off. [Cultivator.

VARIETY.

Galvanized Iron Wire Beds and Mattresses are becoming fashionable. Within the tick, through which the air freely circulates, are placed upright fifty coils of Iron Wire, each forming an admirable spring and so confined that it can only move perpendicularly and cannot cant on one side or vibrate as former Spring Beds have done. These are fastened at the bottom to open slat-work, and at the top to a strong linen cover, above which is a thin layer of Hair, which might be Cotton, Feathers, or any other soft, elastic substance. Over all is the tick of course, and no one who has not examined it can believe how firm and durable yet soft and easy this bed is. It will apparently last a life-time, needs no shaking, airing or making up, except to spread the clothes upon it, is impervious to bugs, or other vermin, and cannot get musty or offensive.

The following is the inscription on a tombstone in Baltimore:—"Here lies the remanes of a wurthy and respectable sitizin who kept a groceri, and chandleri establishment at the corner of —— and —— st. This stone is erected by his diskonsolate widdow, who takes this opportunity to inform her friends that she intends to carry on her husband's business at the same plase and wants to get the custom and paternage of all her husband's many friends and customers."

Professor Lichenstein remarked, when traveling in South Africa, that if an animal chanced to die in the very midst of the most desert wilderness, in less than half an hour there was seen, high in the zenith, a number of minute objects descending in spiral wheels, and increasing in visible magnitude at every evolution. These are soon discovered to be a flight of vultures, which must have observed from a height viewless to the human eye, the dropping of the animal immediately marked out for prey.

Let us not forget that half the comfort of life depends on things which may be termed trifles. These, regarded properly, lubricate the machinery of society, and make its movements light and easy, while the obstructions of rudeness and vulgarity produce roughness and irregularity in the movements, and tend to derange the conventional system by which social intercourse is kept up without jarring.

The rapidity with which bottles are made is incredible. A workman, with the assistance of a gatherer and blower, will begin and finish one hundred and twenty dozen of quart bottles in ten hours, which averages nearly two and a quarter per minute, and this is ordinarily done; and in some works the men are restricted to two per minute, to prevent the work being slighted.

The neatest way to separate beeswax from the comb is to tie it in a piece of linen or woolen cloth or bag, with a pebble or two to keep it from floating; place it in a kettle of cold water which is hung over the fire; as the water heats, the wax melts and rises to the surface, while the impurities remain in the bag.

An Irishman, speaking of the excellent facilities of traveling in the old country, averred that a man could not only travel from London to Brighton cheaper than he could stay at home, but "an' faith wouldn't take half so long to do it."

Minds capable of the greatest things can enjoy the most trival, as the elephant's trunk can knock down a lion or pick up a pin.

A man who gets through the world without a kick, may rest assured that he is generally considered as not worth kicking.

False bosoms are worn to hide dirty shirts. Yet it is better to put on a clean shirt every day. So in morals, it is better to act always right, than to show the world the whitest side of your character. The false bosoms, however, are universally worn.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institntion, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

DE RUYTER INSTITUTE.

TEACHERS' Classses will be formed at the opening of the fall term, September 16, to continue seven weeks, which will be exercised in practical teaching under the immediate supervision of the Principals, with a thorough review of the common-school studies. Lectures on the theory of teaching, and other important subjects, will form a part of the daily exercises. The Principals will be assisted by Hon. Edward Cooper and the County Superintendents of Madison and Cortland Counties. All the improvements and important suggestions of the day in the art of teaching, will be brought before the class for their consideration.

JAMES OCKFORD.

Among the early advocates of the Sabbath in England, was JAMES OCKFORD, a man who deserved a better memorial than has been preserved him. The perilous times in which he lived, however, though favorable to the memory of those individuals or parties who were successful against all adverse circumstances, were often fruitful of schemes to defeat enterprises really the most worthy of success. Those of the Reformers who are now lauded to the skies for labors performed in favor of religious liberty, were not always more self-denying, or devoted to the great principles of the Reformation, than were some whose names are never mentioned, nor their labors properly appreciated.

> "Full many a gem, of purest ray serene,
> The dark unfathomed caves of ocean bear;
> Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,
> And waste its sweetness on the desert air."

Mr. Ockford wrote boldly against the adversaries of the Sabbath. Traske had several years before been subjected, by the Star Chamber, to the most cruel and relentless sufferings, because he had preached the same truth; and Theophilus Brabourne had been foiled by the wicked snares of the adversary, which had been set for him by the Scribes and Pharisees of his day, although his powerful pleadings for the truth have, even in the opinion of his opposers, never been fairly answered. And now the responsibility of a dispensation was made to rest upon Ockford, who, being dissatisfied with the pretended conviction of Brabourne, adopted the Sabbatarian argument, and, standing upon this vantage ground, turned the weapons of the opposing parties against themselves—the Episcopalians against the Puritans, and the Puritans against the Episcopalians. The Church of England, on the one hand, maintained that the Sabbath was Jewish, and was done away, and that the spirit of the fourth commandment required only obedience in general to the festivals of the church, of which Sunday was one. The Puritans, on the other hand, contended that the fourth commandment was still in force, yet so construed its meaning as to evade its original claims for the particular day of the week named in it, and thus by a false gloss they prepared the way for an amendment, which was the substitution of the first day of the week in place of the seventh. Ockford drew such powerful weapons from the admissions and arguments of the champions of the church—Bishop White, Peter Heylyn, and others—and used them with so much effect against the Puritans, that one Mr. Cawdry, a Presbyterian, and a member of the Assembly of Divines, was induced to publish a Defence; and to this book we are mostly indebted for the account which remains to us of Mr. Ockford's labors. Ockford's book, which must have been published about the year 1642, was too well addressed to the consciences of the leaders of the dominant party to remain long without official notice; but, instead of eliciting an intelligent answer, it was condemned to be burnt, and accordingly was most effectually refuted, so that we do not know of a single copy extant. The following account of it, however, from the work above alluded to—[Sabbatum Redividum, or the Christian Sabbath vindicated]—will give some idea of the book.

In the Preface to the Christian Sabbath Vindicated, it is said:—

"We have not met with any Tract concerning the Sabbath in all these late years, but only one, and that of a Sabbatarian Anabaptist, with this title, THE DOCTRINE OF THE FOURTH COMMANDMENT, wherein he pleads strongly for the Saturday Sabbath. It seems that the Anabaptists, who usually cry down the Sabbath either as Antichristian, or ceremonial, begin to see the necessity of a Sabbath, and will rather return to the old Sabbath, with the Jews, than have none at all. This author was so far unsatisfied with all those answers made to Theophilus Brabourne by the Episcopal party, that he borrows weapons from them to beat down the Lord's Day, our Christian Sabbath."

In page 427 of the same book, it is said:—

"Those very reasons which converted T. B. to relinquish the morality of the fourth commandment, have confirmed the other in his opinion of the Saturday Sabbath. And to say the truth, those who of late years took upon them to confute the Sabbatarians, have not only confirmed them, but also have lent them all or most of their arguments to fight against those that maintain the morality of the fourth commandment, and the divine institution of the Lord's day, for, on the one side, certain it is, that some answers given by the Bishop of Ely, and others of his way, to the Sabbatarian arguments, are so unsatisfying and weak, (we say not false,) that they have gotten strength by their confutation. The Bishop and others, to avoid the force of the Sabbatarian assaults, have affirmed not only the old Sabbath, but the fourth command itself, to be merely ceremonial, and abolished; which their adversaries abhorring and detesting, have fallen upon the old Sabbath, rather than none. For, indeed, it cannot but seem unreasonable to any conscientious man, that one commandment of the decalogue, adorned with so many privileges common to it with the other confessed moral commandments, and so much concerning religion, and the power of godliness, should be cashiered as merely ceremonial in the times of the Gospel."

Mr. Cawdry, after noticing the destruction of Ockford's book, which he calls "a sharp confutation by fire," says, "Yet lest he should complain of harsh dealing, no answer being given him, for his satisfaction we shall give him a brief account of our judgment concerning his whole book." From this are gathered the few particulars below:—

Chapter first contained the proposition, That the decalogue is moral and perpetual, with the argument.

The second Chapter sustained this proposition, That the fourth commandment in particular is moral, in which are also noticed twelve absurdities, which Mr. Cawdry says, as they fall only upon those who say the fourth commandment is ceremonial and done away, let them answer them if they please. This proposition is also discussed, That it is as great a sin to do contrary to the literal expression of the fourth commandment, as to the literal expression of any other commandment.

Chapter third contains ten reasons for the morality of the fourth commandment, which are applied to the seventh-day Sabbath, in which he makes a challenge, "Let him that will oppose me, prove that it is our duty to do servile work on the seventh day, called Saturday, if he can!"

In his fourth Chapter, he treated again of the morality and antiquity of the seventh-day Sabbath; he had five reasons to prove that the seventh-day Sabbath should be observed, as in the time of the law.

His fifth Chapter was spent in proving from testimony, that the church changed the Sabbath into the first day, and when it was done.

It was thought a great show of confidence in the Sabbatarians, that he affirmed this proposition in his 61st page, That it is as great a sin to observe the first day of the week instead of the seventh, as to worship an image instead of God.

Mr. Ockford no doubt felt some satisfaction in having even this notice of his book volunteered, though by his Puritan opposers, as it might preserve, at least, a knowledge of his attempt to vindicate the cause of truth. How dastardly, however, the act of the authorities of the Church and State of England, to burn with fire the pages of a pious laborer, and take thus from the hands of those whom they affected to despise for their obscurity and impotence, arguments which their Bishops could not answer! But such were the times when lived some of the most devout and zealous friends of religious liberty, who, too weak to withstand the powers arrayed against them, yet rejoiced that they were accounted worthy to bear shame for the truth's sake. Ockford probably remembered the fate of poor Traske, who but a few years before had suffered the cruelties of the lash, having been whipped for more than a mile's walk from Westminster through the streets to the prison, whence he never returned, because he had preached the same truth which he now attempted to plead. But he had the consolation, that his book, instead of himself, was the martyr. It is barely possible that a copy may yet be preserved; if so, its appearance would be highly welcome to the shelves of the New York Sabbath Library. What became of Mr. Ockford is not known to us. He was a Baptist, and probably differed from his predecessors, Traske and Brabourne, in this respect; for the Baptists, being generally antinomians, he was thought singular, inasmuch as he, in regard to the Sabbath, contradicted all his masters." Yet there were, about this time, regular Sabbatarian churches, and men of talent and distinction adorning their pulpits.

GOOD FEELINGS.

We know a blunt old fellow in the State of Maine, who sometimes hits the nail on the head more pat than the philosophers. He once heard a man praised for his "good feelings." Every body joined and said the man was possessed of excellent feelings.

"What has he done?" asked our old genius.

"O! in every thing he is a man of fine benevolent feelings," was the reply.

"What has he done?" cried the old fellow again.

By this time the company thoght it necessary to show some of their favorite's doings. They began to cast about in their minds, but the old man still shouted, "What has he done?" They owned that they could not name any thing in particular.

"Yet," answered the cynic, "you say that the man has good fellings. Now, gentlemen, let me tell you that there are people in this world who get a good name simply on account of their feelings. You can't tell one generous action that they ever performed in their lives, but they can look and talk most benevolently. I know a man in this town that you call a surly, rough, unamiable man, and yet he has done more acts of kindness in this country than all of you put together. You may judge people's actions by their feelings, but I judge people's feelings by their actions."

TROUBLE ME NO MORE.

O the sad day
When men shall shake their heads and say
  Of miserable me,
Hark how he groans, look how he pants for breath,
See how he struggles in the pangs of death!
When they shall say of these mine eyes,
  How hollow and how dim they be!
Look how his breast doth swell and rise
  Against his potent enemy!
When some old friend shall step to my bedside,
Touch my chill face, and thence shall gently slide,
And when his next companions say,
How does he do? what hopes? shall turn away
Answering only with an up-lift hand.
Who can his fate withstand?
Then shall a gasp or two do more,
Than all my rhetoric could before,
Persuade the world to trouble me no more!

THE USE OF THE BIBLE.

A little boy had often amused himself by looking over the pictures of a large Bible; and his mother one day said to him, "John, do you know the use of the Bible?" He said, "No, mother." "Then John be sure to ask your father," was the advice his mother gave him. Soon afterwards, when his father came home, John ran up to him, and said, "I should like to know, father, what is the use of the Bible?" His father said, "I'll tell you another time, John." The boy appeared disappointed, and walked away wondering why his father did not answer the question directly.

A few days after, the father took his son to a house where there was a woman very ill in bed, and began to talk to the poor afflicted woman, who said that she had suffered a great deal of pain, but hoped that she was resigned to the will of God. "Do you think," said the father, "that God does right to permit you to feel so much pain?" "Oh, yes," answered the woman, "for God is my heavenly father, who loves me, and I am sure that one who loves me so much, would not permit me to suffer as I do, if it were not for my good." He then said, "How is it that you find your sufferiugs do you good?" She replied, "My sufferings are good for my soul; they make me more humble, more patient; they make me feel the value of the Saviour more, and they make me pray more." John had been very attentive to this conversation, and the tears stood in his eyes while the afflicted woman was talking. His father looked at him and then said to the woman, "My good woman, can you tell me the use of the Bible?" In an instant, John cast his eyes toward the woman, while his face showed that he was extremely eager to hear her answer. The woman, with a stronger voice than before, said, "Oh, sir, the Bible has been my comfort in my affliction." "There, John," said his father, "now you know the use of the Bible; it can give us comfort when we most need it."

THE TRUE PRINCIPLES OF THE PILGRIMS.

We may well pause, for a moment, to consider the principles which the fathers of Massachusetts had incorporated into their Commonwealth, and upon which they had erected the fabric of their society. It is a mistake, as has often been remarked, to suppose that they came to New England with any notions of unlimited freedom of conscience. It was no part of their aim, in bidding farewell to their native island, to build, across the ocean, an asylum for the persecuted of every name. Even the possibility of such a state of society, had never dawned upon their minds. "The emigrants," as has just been said, "were a body of sincere believers, desiring purity of religion, not a universal tolerotion." They had come to "this outside of the world," as they deemed it, to enjoy, unmolested, their own worship, and to practice, without hindrance, or restraint, the principles of their own faith. They were generally members of the established church of England, but desired that the principles of the reformation should be applied still more thoroughly, to purify her doctrines, and elevate and spiritualize her worship. It was to escape oppression for themselves, not to secure the boon of freedom to others, to carry into practice their own views of Christian worship, and their own doctrines of civil liberty, not to open a temple for the disciples of every faith, and the adherents of every creed, that they had braved the ocean and the wilderness, and begun to plant their civil and religious institutions beneath these unpropitious skies.

To secure the accomplishment of this object, the dearest which their hearts could cherish, all their legislation was designed, and all the arrangements of their society were framed. It was in accordance with this, that they reserved to themselves the right of admitting only whom they pleased as freemen of the colony; and within a little more than a year after their arrival, they "ordered and agreed that, for time to come, no man should be admitted to the freedom of the body politic, but such as are members of some of the churches within the limits of the same." It was the aspirations of the Puritans to form a Christian republic, after the model of the Jewish theocracy, in which the laws of Moses should constitute the rules of civil life. Their system thus educed from the highest sources of authority, tolerated no contradiction, and allowed of no dissent. The mandates of public sentiment, not less than the enactments of the General Court, in the infant colony, were as stern and unyielding as had been the statutes of uniformity, from whose tyrannical operation they had fled when they embarked for the shores of the new world. Wrapped in their singular, and somewhat original social system, there lay the germs both of immense good and immense evil; of a moral energy that was to bless the world by the results it has produced, and of dissensions that were to rend their youthful republic, and kindle the fires of intolerance and fanaticism, even upon the spots most sacred to freedom.

Prof. Gammell.

ANECDOTE.

The Rev. Mr. McNeile, of Liverpool, in a lecture recently delivered by him, introduced the following anecdote:

I will tell you a circumstance which occurred lately in this town. A journeyman house-painter, who had long entertained infidel sentiments, and was addicted to corresponding bad practices, was employed in his trade on a house nearly opposite to mine. From his elevated position, he saw over my blind into my study, and he observed me at my work. The next morning, at an early hour, he saw the same. This attracted his attention; and the third morning he came still earlier, but I was before him. He ascertained who I was, and he kept watching me over the blind every morning while his job opposite to me lasted. In the mean time, as I learned afterwards, he began to reason with himself, saying, "This gentleman must be in earnest, however, right or wrong;" and he said, moreover, "The result of all this reading and writing so early, morning after morning, must, I should think, be worth hearing. I will go and hear what he has to say." Accordingly he came to my church. He heard me describe the aching anxieties of the human soul, not to be satisfied with any created thing, but aching still, and longing for repose until it found it in the bosom of the living God. He heard me describe the way in which a God of holiness can admit a sinner to such repose, the way in which a sinner may enjoy that holy communication. His heart was touched; the secret cause of his infidelity was detected; it was not a want of evidence in the revelation of God, but a want of willingness in man to be conformed to the character of God. Before a rising willingness to be holy all the skepticism of his intellect disappeared; and, instead of a sullen infidel, he is, I have reason to hope, a happy, cheerful Christian.

THE BEGGAR.

At the time of a great famine, on a cold wirter's day, a woman came to a village and began begging for charity. Her clothes were very clean but torn, and patched in many places. The snow was falling fast; her head was wrapped in a handkerchief; in one hand she carried a stick, in the other a basket.

From most of the houses she got only a very scanty succor; even some rich persons drove her away with harsh words.

There was but one poor peasant who invited her into his house, where there was a good fire in the grate; and his wife took a cake out of the oven and gave the woman a large slice of it.

The next day every one where this stranger had asked for charity were invited, quite unexpectedly, to sup at the castle. When all the guests were arrived they proceeded to the dining room, where they saw two tables laid out. One was very small, but on it were many exquisite dishes. The other was large and magnificent, and a great number of plates; but they held out scanty nourishment, such as a piece of half musty bread, a couple of potatoes, a handful of bran, and some held nothing at all. While the guests were wondering what this meant, the lady of the castle spoke thus: "The beggar who passed through the village was myself: I disguised myself in order to judge for myself of your charity, in this time of need. The two poor people whom you see here, took me in and treated as best they could. In consequence, they will eat at my table to-day, and I will give them a pension.

As to you, regale yourselves with the offerings which you gave me yesterday; and which you see here upon your plates; I repeat to yourselves, while you do honor to the good cheer that thus you will be treated in the next world."

This story is not fabulous, the heroine of the adventure was called Lady Gray.

INDUSTRY AND INTEGRITY.

There is nothing possible to man which industry and integrity will not accomplish. The poor boy of yesterday, so poor that a dollar was a miracle in his vision, houseless, shoeless, and breadless—compelled to wander on foot from village to village, with his bundle on his back, in order to procure labor and the means of subsistence, has become the talented and honorable young man of to-day, by the power of his good right arm, and the potent influence of his pure principles, firmly held and perpetually maintained. When poverty and what the world call disgrace stared him in the face, he shuddered not, but pressed onward and exulted most in high and honorable exertion in the midst of accumulating disasters and calamities. Let this young man be cherished, for he honors his country and dignifies his race. High blood—if this course not in his veins, he is a free-born American, and therefore a sovereign and a prince. Wealth—what cares he for that, as long as his heart is pure and his walk upright—he knows and his country knows, and his country tells, that the little finger of an honest and upright man is worth more than the whole body of an effeminate and dishonest rich man. These are the men who make the country—who bring to it whatever of iron sinew and uafailing spirit it possesses or desires—who are rapidly rendering it the mightiest, most powerful, as it is already the freest land beneath the circle of the sun.

IS GOD IN THIS HOUSE?—In Greenland, when a stranger knocks at the door, he asks, "Is God in this house?" And if they answer, "Yes," he enters. Reader, this little messenger knocks at your door, with the Greenland salutation, Is God in this house? Were you, like Abraham, entertaining an angel unawares, what would be the report he would take back to heaven? Would he find you commanding your children and your household and teaching them the way of the Lord? Would he find an altar in your dwelling? Do you worship God with your children? Is there a church in your house?

OVERCOME EVIL WITH GOOD.

The late Dr. Bowditch, of Salem, Mass., was a man as eminent for his great and useful talents, as he was beloved by all who were acquainted with him. An instance is related of him, which is a complete manifestation of the command, "If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink; for in so doing, thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head."

"Dr. Bowditch had been preparing a plan of Salem, which he intended soon to publish. It had been the fruit of much labor and care. By some means or other, an individual in town had surreptitiouusly got possession of it, and had the audacity to issue proposals to publish it as his own. This was too much for Dr. Bowditch to bear. He instantly went to the person, and burst out in the following strain: 'You villain, how dare you do this? If you presume to proceed any further in this business, I will prosecute you to the utmost extent of the law.' The poor fellow cowered before the storm of his indignation and was silent, for his wrath was terrible. Dr. Bowditch went home, and slept on it; and the next day, hearing from some authentic source that the man was extremely poor, and had probably been driven by the necessities of his family to commit this audacious plagiarism, his feelings were touched, his heart relented, his anger melted away like wax. He went to him again, and said, 'Sir, you did very wrong, and you know it, to appropriate to your own use and benefit the fruit of my labors. But I understand you are poor, and have a family to support. I feel for you and will help you. That plan is unfinished, and contains errors that would have disgraced you and me, had it been published in the state in which you found it. I'll tell you what I will do. I will finish the plan; I will correct the errors; and then you shall publish it for your own benefit, and I will head the subscription list with my name.'"

This simple fact adds great glory to the memory of this eminent man. It shows that he could command his passions so as to forgive the person who had wronged him, and to overcome him with unexpected kindness. Was not his conduct very beautiful, more noble than though he had exerted every effort to crush the man who was driven by poverty to the commission of a wrong act? Surely it was noble and worthy of all imitation.

THE BEST RECREATION.

The celebrated Hayden was in company with some distinguished persons. The conversation turned on the best means of restoring their mental energies, when exhausted with long and difficult studies. One said he had recourse, in such cases, to a bottle of wine—another, that he went into company. Hayden being asked what he would do, or did do, said he retired to his closet and engaged in prayer—that nothing exerted on his mind a more happy and efficacious influence than prayer. Hayden was no enthusiast. There is much truth in his remark. God is the strength of his people. Luther used to say, that, to pray well, was to study well. The celebrated Elliot left us, as the result of his laborious and useful life, the striking sentiment, "that prayer and pains-taking were able to accomplish all things." I doubt not that a first and leading defect of many, very many Christians, lies in their not praying as they ought—here they are woak, and this weakens them in all things.

A CHRISTIAN HOME.—O! great, unspeakable is the blessedness of a godly home! here is the cradle of the Christian, hence he sallies forth for the encounter with the world, armed at all points, disciplined in all the means of resistance, and full of hope of victory under his heavenly leader. Hither he ever afterwards turns a dutiful and affectionate look, regarding it as the type and pledge of another home; hither, too, when sore wounded in that conflict, he resorts to repair his drooping vigor; here when abandoned by the selfish sons of this world, he finds, as in a sanctuary, the children of God, ready with open arms to receive him, and here the returning prodigal folded in the embrace of those who know not, dream not, of the impurities of the world with which he has been mixing, feels all at once his heart burn with shame and repentance. Merciful God, what a city of refuge hast thou ordained in the Christian home!

THREE WONDERS IN HEAVEN.—"If I ever reach heaven," said the eminently pious Dr. Watts, "I expect to find three wonders there. 1. To meet some I had not thonght to see there. 2. To miss some whom I had expected to meet there; but 3. The greatest wonder of all will be to find myself there!" If such were the views and feelings of such a man as Dr. Watts, who lived so near the verge of heaven, and breathed its holy atmosphere as it were on earth, so as to be able to say with the most cheerful confidence, "I bless God I lie down at night unsolicitious whether I awake in this world or another," how much greater will be the wonder in the case of many careless and almost prayerless Christians, to find themselves in heaven at last.

We shall be judged according to all our works: not with respect to this or that thing only, as men now vainly flatter and judge themselves. A man's being kind to the poor will not then save him from the wrath to come, if he have neglected Jesus Christ and his holy religion; neither will his having done no one any harm be taken in exchange for his want of sobriety and chastity. There will be found in that day but one only reason worthy to be taken in exchange for any sin; the Precious Blood, namely, of our Lord and Savior Christ Jesus—and that ransom will be applied to none of us, except we have seriously applied ourselves here to the serving of him in holiness, according to our baptismal promises, not in one part of our duty alone, but in all.

PERSECUTION FOR RELIGIOUS OPINIONS.

It is no just occasion for surprise, that worldly men are anxious to secure uniformity of religious opinions, and that the governments composed of worldly men have repeatedly enacted laws to secure such uniformity. The consequence has been, that great numbers of good men have been wickedly persecuted from time to time for their opinions. Our Saviour taught his disciples to expect this; and he encouraged them to meet it, by saying, "Blessed are ye when men shall persecute you for my sake." He knew very well, that of all Satan's artifices none had been more common or successful than to incite men to persecute one another under the specious pretence of regard for the truth. Of course it was not to be expected, that what had all along been such a fruitful source of discord, would be driven from the world by the advent of the Gospel. No matter how good the news which men might proclaim, nor how pure and spotless the lives which they might live, the adversary of all righteousness would find some pretext for persecuting them. It does not surprise us, therefore, to find the men of the world, who are acknowledged to be more or less under his control, engaged in efforts to secure uniformity of opinions, and ready to prosecute or persecute those who are so unlucky as to differ from them.

But we must confess that we have been surprised when we have seen professing Christians pursuing this phantom of uniformity, and foremost among the persecutors of the intractable. Such a sight is always astonishing and painful. It shows how the spirit of the Gospel may be mistaken, and its plainest precepts perverted or trampled under foot. Who can look upon it without exclaiming, with the prophet of old, "How is the gold become dim, and the fine gold changed!" The New Testament teaches plainly enough, as has just been stated, that Christians are to expect opposition and persecution for the truth's sake. Surely if there is any position which would justify retaliation, it is when enduring such treatment. But do the Scriptures countenance retaliation? Not at all. Even in these aggravating circumstances, they require us to treat opposers with kindness, and "meekly to instruct them, if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth." Nay, more—if, after much instruction, they reject the truth, and persecute those who proclaim it, the messengers are not to retaliate, but "flee to another city." What language could be used—what instruction given—which would more directly and pointedly rebuke the common custom of urging upon men the religious opinions and practices of the dominant party, and then persecuting those who will not receive them? It is difficult to see how any one acquainted with the precepts or example of Christ and his Apostles can frame the shadow of an apology for such a course. Indeed facts show that enlightened Christians cannot in conscience do it; for the moment that one of their own missionaries among the heathen should be convicted of retaliating or persecuting, he would find no apologist, but would be promptly and universally condemned. But is this manifestation of an unchristian spirit more wicked and hurtful in a heathen land than on Christian ground? We trow not. In respect to principle there is not a whit of difference, while in respect to its practical influence it is certainly not less ruinous.

The religion of Jesus Christ not only discountenances the imposition of pains and penalties upon its opposers, but it never asks for human legislation in its behalf. It is a fact worthy of note, that the only power conferred upon churches in respect to blasphemers and heretics, is that of cutting them off from their communion. The Apostolic direction is, "A man that is an heretic, after the first and second admonition, reject." Here is no provision for bringing him under by fines and imprisonment, or by breaking down his opposition in any other way. If this direction were fully carried out, it would purify the church, and draw forth the admiration of all men for its mildness and consistency. Christians seem slow to learn, that the way to banish error is to publish the truth. Only let truth and error come into fair conflict, and there need be no fear for the result. It is just as certain that truth will triumph in such a combat, as it is that darkness will flee away before the shining light. No doubt many well-meaning people may be found among those who look to human legislation for aid to enforce religious duties. But their course is a practical libel upon the truth. They in effect declare, that it needs aid from without to establish its claims—than which no doctrine is more untrue and degrading. The religion of Jesus Christ is eminently spiritual, and its duties can only be discharged by those who are spiritual. It acknowledges no subjects whose adherence is forced, nor will it be promoted by the legal suppression of opposing errors, or the legal enforcement of its sacred truths.

If we mistake not, the true doctrine upon this subject, and the one which will finally prevail, is, that no man should be persecuted for his religious opinions or creed. This doctrine is undoubtedly susceptible of abuses. In the imperfect state of things which now exists, probably many men will make their religious liberty an occasion of licentiousness. But what of that? Shall we adopt doctrines which endanger the liberties of all good men, because some bad men will pervert the true doctrines? Let us not, by such a course, do evil that good may come. It is always safer, in the long run, to take the right ground. Indeed there is no safety on any other. This doctrine finds a response in the bosom of every noble-minded and true-hearted man. Its opposite does violence to the better feelings of the human heart, is opposed to the precepts and spirit of Christianity, and has often proved most impolitic. Can we hesitate which to adopt?

THE ABOLITIONISM OF OLD TIMES.

It is common for those who oppose "anti-slavery agitation," to refer to the abolition of slavery in the New England States as proving that agitation and severe language are not necessary to accomplish the object. Those who are acquainted with the facts, however, know that there is a remarkable coincidence between the means used by the friends of freedom in New England and those used by anti-slavery men now. Early in the last century, the subject began to be agitated in New England. In 1701 the representatives were desired to use their influence to put an end to negro slavery. In 1710, Judge Sewall published a tract against slavery, under the title of "The Selling of Joseph." A few years later he "essayed to prevent negroes and indians being rated with horses and cattle, but could not succeed." The Revolutionary War gave rise to some regular "fanatics" on this subject. One of these men said, "Shall we, my brethren and fathers, can we lift up our faces with confidence before God, in solemn prayer, that he would remove the yoke of bondage from us, and set us free from the bondage that lays on us, while we keep a ten-fold heavier yoke on the neck of our brethren, the negroes." But the following paragraph, from an appeal of Benjamin Coleman to his slave-holding minister, is the strongest thing we have seen. It does not mince the matter, but tells the offender plainly, "Thou art the man." Read it, you who suppose that "hard language" is peculiar to modern abolitionists:—

"And now, reverend sir, I would humbly ask, have you had no hand in this iniquitous man-stealing? Have you not bought divers of these people for money, people made of the same flesh and blood with your children? Have you not kept them in bondage? one of which you have baptized and received as a member of the church? Pray, sir, is this teaching the way of righteousness? But this wicked practice of yours is not all that I complain of. I entreat you to consider the melancholy consequences. For hereby you have rendered yourself incapable of discharging the duties of a faithful watchman; for your mouth is shut; you can't reprove others, or bear a public testimony against this horrid crime, without condemning yourself and your own practice; so that others by your neglect are emboldened in their sin. O, sir, you are set for a watchman in this place; and have you ever blown the trumpet to give warning of this horrid sin of man-stealing? Is not God's hand lifted up against us, and do you keep silence?"

THE WORLD'S TEMPERANCE CONVENTION.

Among the great meetings held in London during the last month, none has appeared to us to promise greater usefulness than the World's Temperance Convention. It commenced its sessions on the morning of the 4th of August, and terminated them on the afternoon of the 8th. The whole number of delegates present was a little over three hundred, of whom twenty-eight were from the United States, including Drs. Beecher and Cox, E. N. Kirk, W. L. Garrison, Elihu Burritt, J. V. Himes, &c. E. C. Delavan was expected, but did not attend on account of urgent business at home. Father Mathew was also expected, but staid away, it is said, on account of certain religious difficulties which he as a Catholic could not overcome. The question whether slaveholders should be admitted as members of the Convention was discussed at a preliminary meeting, when it was concluded that there should be no test but a pledge of total abstinence from the use of all intoxicating drinks. It was also decided, at the same meeting, that there should be no public religious exercises at the sessions of the Convention, lest the religious opinions of some should be interfered with.

One object for which the Convention was called, was to consider the expediency of forming a World's Temperance Union. The subject was much discussed, but the opinion of the most efficient delegates seemed to be, that such a Union would be attended by so much pecuniary expense, and would be so cumbersome and unwieldy withal, that not enough practical good would grow out of it to warrant the undertaking. A committee was raised, however, to correspond with friends of the cause in different parts of the world upon the subject, and report the result of their correspondence at a future meeting to be called for the purpose.

The following resolutions, which were almost unanimously adopted by the Convention, will give an idea of its principles. Of course many interesting facts were elicited during their discussion, but for these we have not room at present:—

"That in the opinion of this Convention, as a means of extending the Temperance reformation, the following truths should be spread throughout the world; and that Temperance organizations be exhorted to give them the widest possible extension.

"That alcohol, the intoxicating principle, is a subtle poison, at war with the physical, intellectual, social, and religious interests of men.

"That it is generated by the process of fermentation, and is the same, though existing in different degrees, in cider, wines, and malt liquors, as in distilled spirits.

"That it is a perpetual fountain of disease, poverty, crime, temporal and spiritual death, never needful or useful to men in health in any clime, or any employment.

"That total abstinence from it as a beverage, is the only true principle of the Temperance reformation, the only hope for the drunkard, and security for others.

"That the whole manufacture and sale of intoxicating drink as a beverage, though a source of revenue to Government, is a manufacture of human misery, and highly injurious to the souls and bodies of men, and should not be licensed more than other moral evils by human Governments.

"That the word of God often prescribes total abstinence to avoid existing evils, and that the spirit of Christian love directs us to shun wine, or any thing whereby our brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak.

"That a voice comes up from every part of the globe calling upon kings, and all who are in authority, upon reflecting and influential men of all climes, upon parents, teachers of youth, medical men, ministers of religion, and all who love their race, to put forth the hand and stay the plague which is filling our world with woe, and which, unless checked, will continue to sweep thousands of succeeding generations prematurely and wretchedly to eternity."

New Missionary Society.—A highly respectable Convention of the friends of Bible Missions was held at Albany, N. Y., on the 2d and 3d insts. After a full discussion of the subject, it was agreed that the time had come for the formation of a New Missionary Society, in which those who are opposed to close corporations for such purposes, to unwieldy associations, to abstaining from the moral reforms of the age, and to the neglect of a portion of heathen in our own land, could cordially unite. A society was accordingly formed, for home and foreign missionary purposes, to be called the American Missionary Association. It is expected that the New Organization will embrace the Union Missionary Society, the Western Evangelical Missionary Association, and the Committee of the West India Missions—as well as all the friends of Anti-Slavery Missions throughout the country who belong to the Congregational and Presbyterian Churches, some other denominations having already formed such Societies of their own.

Heathen at Home.—One of the colporteurs of the American Tract Society, who has visited the western districts of Pennsylvania, describes places where the Sabbath is unknown, except as a day devoted to hunting, fishing, and "buckwheat threshing;" families that have never heard a sermon in their lives; houses in which not a single book of any kind is to be found; shingle-cutters and hunters, living in houses alone in the woods, or lining the water courses at intervals, where the gospel never comes, and no book is ever bought or read.

Another Victim, almost.—The Granite Freeman says that S. S. Foster and wife were arrested and tried before a Justice recently, in Lake County, Ohio, on a charge of breaking the Sabbath, [Sunday, we suppose he means.] It appeared in evidence that they had sold books on that day, after the manner of most traveling agents. It was also proved that the Justice before whom the hearing was had, had done the same thing himself. They were acquitted, and Stephen poured out a scorching rebuke upon his persecutors, as only he can do it.

The Eastern Monitor is the title of a neat little volume just published by John Eyre. It comprises a series of letters to a Young Emigrant, to which are added Familiar Letters on Various subjects. The letter to an Emigrant contain many valuable suggestions in relation to the dangers which beset that class of persons in a new country, and the way to escape them. There is a vein of pious and moral reflection running through the above volume which must render it acceptable to the religious reader. For sale at Walker's 114 Fulton-street, and by the booksellers generally.

Peace with Mexico.—The New York Tribune of Monday morning last, publishes a letter dated Havana, August 16th, in which the writer gives currency to a reported agreement between Santa Ana and certain agents of the British and American Governments, for securing peace. The arrangement is said to be as follows: "The Mexican Federal Government of 1814 to be re-established under the guaranty of the United States; so that, in case of future pronunciamentos, the United States government shall have a right to interfere in support of the Constitutional Government. The Rio Grande to be the boundary line and the Californias to be organized as a distinct Territory, under the protection of the United States, but not governed by Americans until the inhabitants shall think fit to annex themselves, to favor which purpose the country will be allowed to carry on a free trade with both Republics, and admit colonists from all countries, and of all religious creeds." The writer says he has his intelligence from very respectable authority. There is, however, a suspicious and incredible look about it.

The following article, from "The Occident and American Jewish Advocate," expresses our mind so fully upon the subject of which it treats, that we cheerfully give it a place in our editorial columns. We are glad to see that the Jews are waking up to their claims for complete toleration. Let them but carry out their principles consistently, and there is no fear but what they will in the end be respected.

SUNDAY LEGISLATION.

Our readers will recollect that in our November Number of last year, we announced in our News Items, the passage of an ordinance by the Common Hall of Richmond, Virginia, imposing a heavy fine for infraction of the sanctity of Sunday, over and above the penalty enacted by the State laws. In our February Number we communicated a petition, which was handed in to the Town Council by many Israelites, respectfully asking the repeal of this obnoxious law, which is evidently intended to operate in favor of those who regard the first day of the week as one of religious repose, and must, in consequence, be looked upon as an especial enactment, though against the spirit of the Constitution, giving one class of the inhabitants, and the doctrines professed by the same, a predominance not rightfully belonging to them. It is easily discoverable that no one would enforce the keeping of the first day of the week, unless he thought it possessed of religious sanctity, or else legislation might as well be exerted in favor of the fourth or any other day. But supposing that one would rise in the halls of a State Legislature, and gravely propose a bill compelling factory labor, for instance, to cease on each Wednesday, under a penalty of a fine of ten shillings, or any other sum; would not an outcry be raised at once that this would amount to an unwarranted interference in the rights of each man who ought not to be restrained from laboring when he pleases? And still we are gravely told that the compulsory keeping of Sunday is a police law, which the State or city corporation has a constitutional right to enact, and to exact it by fine and imprisonment! Is it not in effect, whatever may be alledged under the last mentioned flimsy pretext, an unwarranted enactment, giving legislative sanction to a religious observance, not acquiesced in from feeling or conviction by the whole people—but merely adopted, doubtlessly without much reason or knowing why on the part of a majority merely, though we will confess that this be an overwhelming one? No one can therefore expect that persons who conscientiously think the seventh day to be the true Sabbath, will or ought to acquiesce in the arrangement casting aside their right by making special laws for the Sunday; and that, as such laws do exist in most States of the Union, they should seek by lawful means to expunge all such partial legislation from the statute books. Hence the Seventh-day Baptists handed in petitions to the legislatures of New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania, during the last winter, to put them, in the first State, upon a level as regards exemption from arrest, &c., on their Sabbath, which privilege is accorded to others on Sunday; and in the latter States, to do away with the odious feature of punishing for labor on the first day, as though it were an infringement of a law which has a right to exist in the civil code. Neither application has thus far been successful; we think, however, that the matter will be agitated till justice be done in the premises. Lately several Baptists have been informed against in this State [Pennsylvania] for working on Sunday; the fine of course was imposed by the magistrate who heard the case; but we also learn that the defendants mean or have already proceeded to take an appeal to the higher tribunals, to test the constitutionality of the oppressive act in question. As regards the petition which the Israelites of Richmond presented, it was left to lie on the table of the committee to which it was referred during the remainder of the existence of the last council; they did not probably wish to face the question. The new council, however, have taken the subject under consideration, and on the 13th of July last, the committee made at length the following report, which, as will be perceived, was laid on the table. We have not heard since what has been done with it; but we shall report whatever may reach us. We forbear any farther remarks at present, as our readers can judge for themselves of the cogency or otherwise of the report of the learned councellor, and we are truly rejoiced that the good cause of the fullest liberty of conscience has found so able an expounder, as the former District Attorney of the capital of Virginia, a State truly famous for its great and good men, who have done so much for the promotion of human freedom.

"Mr. Mayo presented the following report:

"The committee to whom was referred the subject of an ordinance for the more effectual suppression of Sabbath-breaking, passed the 11th day of August, 1845, with leave to report by ordinance or otherwise, beg leave to report:

"That though the ordinance under consideration may be liable to construction that some have placed on it, as applying to Sunday as a religious Sabbath, your committee believe that this is a misapprehension of the true meaning of the ordinance; for however unguarded the language used, your committee are of opinion that neither the Legislature nor City Council, have any power, or control, over that day as a Sabbath, more than any other day. The government, either State or City, is in no wise responsible for the religion of the community, except so far as they are bound to protect each and every member thereof, peaceably exercising his religious devotions, in such manner as to him shall seem fit, from being disturbed by others. As to what day one shall observe as a religious Sabbath, or what he should do on that day, provided his conduct is peaceable, and neither obstructs others in their religious worship, nor disturbs the good order of society, your committee think should be left to man and his Creator, without any other ordinance than the fourth commandment. The power to regulate Sunday or any other day as a religious Sabbath, so far from being conferred on the City Council, is by the plain understanding of the Constitution and genius of our government, withheld even from the Legislature, who in fact, impliedly permits the dealing with slaves on that day, with the consent of their masters; (Rev. Code C. 305, §20) and if the Council have the power to regulate the conduct of men on Sunday as a religious Sabbath, they have equally the power to establish it as a day of rest altogether. And as the evil which gave rise to the ordinance springs out of the fact that on that day the slaves and free negroes, which constitute the larger portion of our laboring class, are out of employment, and therefore much more liable to commit crime, the argument would tend to abolish the Sabbath as a day of rest altogether. This no citizen, of whatever religion, would agree to.

"If it were the intention of the Council to enforce the observance of Sunday as a religious Sabbath, however vain the effort, it would have been more manly, and less liable to misconstruction, at once to have declared that Sunday should be the only religious Sabbath, and then to have ordained, 'Thou shalt keep holy the Sabbath day;' and appointed some officer (if such could be found) competent to have the same fulfilled and observed. But your committee are satisfied that this is a misconstruction of the ordinance. It convicts the Council of doing that which they are bound to prevent, for instead of protecting all in the peaceable enjoyment of their own Sabbath, it hinders a large and respectable portion of our citizens from doing it. Your committee conclude this branch of their report, by expressing their conviction that this dangerous power of meddling with the Sabbath as a religious institution, was never designed by a Christian community to be conferred either upon the Legislature or any body corporate which it might create.

"Your committee are well aware that upon the Sabbath, as upon every other day of rest, as they have before remarked, a vicious population of slaves and free negroes are let loose upon the community in idleness; and in the present state of our police, with an almost unlimited scope to indulge their illicit propensities, and that adequate means should be adopted by the Council to check them. But your committee are of opinion, that these means should not be in the enactment of ordinances on the subject, but in a more efficient execution of the statute laws of the commonwealth, much more penal and adequate than any ordinance which can be passed by the Council. The great evil which this ordinance was intended to reach, is the illicit traffic on Sunday with slaves and negroes, as appears by the report of the committee who introduced the ordinance; an evil amply provided for by the statute laws of Virginia, as will appear by consulting the edition of Tate's Digest, where they are embodied.

"Your committee are of opinion, that to guard the city from violation of the law from such sources, on Sunday, as well as on every day of rest, or holiday, the city police requires augmentation; and that with such augmentation, if the police efficiently perform the duties prescribed by the acts of the assembly referred to, all will be accomplished that is necessary.

"Although the ordinance now in force finds its precedent in a legislative act, your committee are nevertheless opposed to it, not only as being unnecessary, but because it confers upon the magistrate the arbitrary power of deciding upon the acts of men, not in terms defined and prohibited, but which are made criminal or not, according to the exercise of his discretion, as to what is charitable and what is necessary. Your committee are of opinion that every penal law should clearly, and in terms define, the act to be done or omitted, that constitutes the crime; so that the citizen upon looking at the statute should see clearly what act it is that he is prohibited from doing, or commanded to do. This ordinance, as well as the statute law upon which it is founded, wants this first element of a penal statute. What a citizen may think a very necessary or a very benevolent, charitable act, and therefore very conscientiously performs it on Sunday, may on Monday morning be considered at the Mayor's Court a very unnecessary act, and one not at all benevolent or charitable, and he thereby be made an unconscious victim to a difference of opinion upon a subject of necessity, charity, or benevolence, between himself and tho magistrate. In the opinion of your committee, it would neither be charitable nor benevolent to subject him to any such ordeal; and they conclude with the expression of an opinion, that this ordinance in fact involves in practice all the odious features of an ex post facto law, and of constructive crime.

"Your commttee, with all becoming respect and reverence as they hope for the Sabbath, as claimed by all religious denominations, whether on the use of one day, or the other, respectfully suggest to the Council, that there is no necessity for the continuance of this ordinance; but recommend that the police of the city should be so increased as to have a special police not for Sunday only, as a day of rest, but for any other holidays upon which the Mayor of the city shall think proper to call them into requisition, and that in aid of the general purpose designated, the High Constable of the city be requested to permit the night-watch and all police officers, to qualify as his deputies, for the purpose of aiding more fully in the execution of all the penal laws. It does not occur to your committee, that there is any particular act requiring legislation by the Council, which is not provided for by legislation of the State; but if there be, the committee respectfully suggest to the Council, that the act should be clearly defined by the ordinance prohibiting it.

"Your committee have thought it proper to go more fully into the reasons which have brought them to the conclusion they have aimed at, which is embodied in the following resolutions:

"1st. Resolved, That it is expedient to repeal the ordinance entitled, 'An ordinance for the more effectual suppression of Sabbath-breaking.'

"2d. Resolved, That it is expedient to increase the city day-police to the number of ——, for each ward, whose duties shall be performed on Sundays only, unless, by order of the Mayor, their services shall be required on any other day of rest or holiday.

"3d. Resolved, That the High Constable of the city be requested to permit the night-watch of the city, as well as all the day police officers who may hereafter be appointed, to qualify as his deputies, to aid in the execution of the penal laws of the commonwealth.

"4th. Resolved, That leave be given to bring in an ordinance in accordance with the foregoing resolutions."

General Intelligence.

FIFTEEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamer Britannia arrived at Boston on Thursday last, bringing English news to the 19th ult. We give below the principal items:—

In the manufacturing districts business is by no means active. The news, however, recently received from the United States will give a new impetus to trade.

The produce markets are tolerably active, both as regards the home and the export trade.

There is a good demand for beef and pork, and late prices are fully supported.

Cheese of good quality is very scarce at Liverpool; a few parcels of an indifferent quality have been sold at 35s. to 45s. per cwt.

Iron has advanced in price, and the woollen manufactures of Yorkshire are firm and improving.

In England there have been frequent storms and great falls of rain, which have injured the crops severely.

A regular line of steam communication between England and the Brazilian Empire, is about to be opened, by the sailing of the Antelope from Liverpool for Rio. She sails on the 10th of September.

The contract with the North American Mail Co. for a weekly mail to Boston and New York, has been confirmed by Parliament, and given to Mr. Cunard, notwithstanding the injurious effects to the Great Western Steamship Co.

We have the gratification, says the Times, of announcing the appointment of Lord Eglin as Governor-General of Canada—an appointment which affords the highest gratification in England.

On the 5th ult. the Batavier, Dutch steamship, came into the Thames with 340 emigrants on board from Germany, who intend to emigrate to the United States. They are an instalment of the 80,000 emigrating from the German States during the present year.

The anticipated almost total failure of the potato crop in England, Ireland and Scotland, has caused the price of Indian Corn to rise from 25s. to 32s. a quarter. The quantity in the Mediterranean is said to be very small. We expect that America will reap a golden harvest in the sale of this article in England.

Mr. John Audubon, the son of the distinguished American naturalist, has recently arrived in England, for the purpose of taking drawings of some specimens of American animals, in the collections in that country, in order to complete the work on the quadrupeds of America. The specimens required are principally those from the territories of the Hudson Bay Company, and those brought home by the expeditions in search of a north-west passage. One specimen in the British Museum is supposed to be unique.

Professor Dew, of William and Mary College, Virginia, reached Paris a few days ago, and died the day after his arrival. There is something peculiarly melancholy in a man thus traversing the wide Atlantic, only to leave his bones in a foreign land.

Among the proofs which the new Government is giving of its wish to conciliate the Irish people, may be mentioned the fact that the Repeal Magistrates who were deprived of their commissions on account of their politics during the administration of Sir Robert Peel, are to be restored. Already Mr. O'Connell and French have been re-invested with the commission.

A sum has been appropriated for the employment of the poor in Ireland.

The potato blight is general; east, west, north, south, the cry is, "still it comes." In Ireland the devastation is general. Everywhere the root is rotten, or progressing toward decay. Science is at fault, and alarm is rife.

The rapid progress which cheap postage is daily making astonishes even the most violent opponents to the new system. France, with a view to its introduction in that country, has dispatched one of its principal officers from the post-office department to England, to examine into the working of the penny postage, and report thereon to the French Minister.

The Great Britain, Captain Hosken, arrived at Liverpool on the morning of the 15th, after a passage of thirteen days and eight hours from New York, including a detention at sea of eighteen hours in repairing the driving chain, which had broken on her homeward voyage.

The last homeward voyage of the steamship Cambria was the shortest on record—ten days and sixteen hours—from Boston to Liverpool, including her run into Halifax to land and take in her mails and passengers.

From the Army.—Report says that Gen. Worth, with 2000 men, had left Camargo, and had proceeded 25 miles toward Monterey.

Captain Duncan returned to Camarge on the 11th, from his reconnoisance into the interior. Captain McCullough, who was along with his Rangers, had killed a Mexican, who was on an American horse at the time.

Captain Duncan marched into Putna Aquado in the night and took the place, having killed one Mexican and shattered the arm of another, while they were attempting to escape.

Capt. Duncan next marched to Seralvo, where he arrived and possessed himself without molestation. After reconnoitering he left the town and returned to Camargo, by the way of Agna Segnas and Mier.

General Taylor has had to use harsh measures with some of the rum venders hanging about his camp.

Satan's Progress in Boston.—A writer in the Courier gives a dark but correct picture of the retrograde of virtue in Boston. In Ward 2, he says, the overseer and assessor told me, there were over 200 drinking-places, many of them kept by low and worthless characters. It is computed that from 600 to 800 rum bowling alleys are in operation, to the ruin of many youths, to say nothing of the boys educating for the House of Correction. As to the billiard rooms and gambling places, they occupy the upper rooms of the chief corners of many principal streets, (as can be seen,) and have their bars, as the usual appendages of such vile places. And last, though not least, licentiousness abounds as a common accompaniment of the foregoing.

From our Pacific Squadron.—The following important news from the Pacific was received by special dispatches at Washington:—

It appears that Commodore Sloat entered the harbor of Monterey, on the Pacific, early in July, and on the 7th issued his proclamation to the inhabitants of California, calling upon them to remain peaceful, assuring them that he did not come as the enemy of California, but as their friend; that they are destined to form part and parcel of the great Fedral Union of the United States; to enjoy the same rights and privileges as the citizens of those States.

In addition to this, Captain Montgomery entered the harbor of Yerba Buena, and issued his summons to surrender to the inhabitants of the country, in virtue of instructions from the Commodore.

We have news also that Colonel Fremont's advanced posts had reached Sonora, to the North of San Francisco.

Gen. Castro, the Gevernor of the Province, advanced at the head of his troops to repulse them, but the gallant Colonel meeting him in person, the Mexican forces retreated.

The Californians are greatly divided among themselves. A junta met at Santa Barbara, headed by Governor Pico, proclaiming California an independent Republic; hereupon the Mexican Governor (Castro) declared the province under martial law. [Tribune.

Attempt to Poison.—On Saturday night, August 23d, the water in the well of Daniel C. Hayes, in Granby, Ct., was poisoned with arsenic. But for circumstances apparently trivial and accidental, Mr. Hayes and his entire family must have been victims of the intended murder.

On the morning of Monday, Mr. Hayes' young man, when drawing water to use in horse feed, noticed a slight sprinkling of white substance on the floor of the well-room and on the bricks lining the well, and some unusual appearance on the surface of the water in one of the buckets. This was little heeded at the instant, and a few quarts of the water were used for the purpose. Both of Mr. Hayes' very valuable horses have since died by the poison.

Two families beside Mr. H.'s supplied themselves with water at this well, and but for the timely suspicion caused by the circumstances alluded to, would in all probability have been fatally poisoned.

◆

Death at the Falls.—The Commercial has a letter dated Goat Island, (Niagara Falls,) August 31, stating that a Mr. Smart of this City lost his life on the morning of that day in a very unaccountable manner. It is said that he went with another gentleman into the 'cave of the winds.' His companion 'saw him climbing over a rock near the mouth of the cave; saw his feet slip, and a few moments afterward perceived him lying on his back.' After some time, as he remained in this position, the other gentleman became uneasy and went to a paper mill near by for assistance. Two men came from the mill, and one of them went down to Mr. Smart, whom he found dead. With some difficulty the body was got out, and our correspondent says he saw it; there were bruises on the head, arm and shoulder; but the writer supposes that he was suffocated by a rush of wind from the cave.

The Whortleberry.—The swamp whortleberry is capable of successful introduction into garden culture. A gentleman in Wayne county, Michigan, has a little whortleberry tree growing in his garden which was transplanted from a marsh about ten years ago. It is about ten feet high, and about an inch and a half in diameter at the root. It stands in a rich sandy upland soil. The fruit is improved in size, and is equal in flavor to that produced in the swamps. The yield is said to be more abundant and more certain. The tree is watered daily in very dry weather, and perhaps might not do well without it. If efforts to cultivate in a dry soil be not successful, a more moist one might be tried. The smaller variety, growing on the openings might be tried. They probably would flourish as well, with the same treatment, as currant bushes, and surely this delicious fruit is worth rescuing from the extinction that seems to await it; for it is much more palatable than the currant, and requires less sweetening.

The Lunatic Asylum at Utica bas been for some time constantly full, and very many applications for admission have had to be refused. The number of patients at present in it is about 280, which is more than the building can suitably accommodate. With the additional buildings 600 patients can be received, and so classified as to afford a better opportunity for their recovery than at present. We understand that the appropriation at the last session of the Legislature will be ample for the completion, in all respects, of this noble institution, and that it will in all probability require no farther aid from the State.

The works to supply the Lunatic Asylum at Utica with water are completed. The water is taken from the Chenango Canal, 103 rods from the institute. It is not intended for drinking or cooking, but for other and not less important purposes. The inmates of the institution celebrated the day on which the water was introduced. Dr. Brigham delivered an Address, and this was followed by a poem and Address from members of the institution. Of these latter productions the Gazette speaks in very flattering terms. The scene was enlivened by music from the choir of the institution, and appropriate addresses were made by several invited guests.

A recent letter from an Indiana volunteer to his father, says:—"We are allowed six lbs. of coffee per day to the hundred men—twelve pounds sugar—one pound of pilot bread, or eighteen ounces flour to each man—mess pork more than we can eat—one quart of beans per day for six men—one pint of rice per five days for six men—and vinegar and salt as much as we want—beef about once a week, sometimes more and sometimes less—and molasses occasionally. We sleep on our blankets, and if the wind blows much, pull one side over us, and when musquitoes are bad cover our heads."

Miscellaneous.

JUAN PLACIDO, THE NEGRO POET AND HERO.

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

I have recently been deeply interested in the fate of PLACIDO—the black Revolutionist of Cuba—the acknowledged leader of the wide-spread and well-planned revolt of the slaves in the city of Havana, and the neighboring plantations and villages.

Juan Placido was born a slave on the estate of Don Terribio de Castro. His father was an African, his mother a mulatto. His mistress treated him with great kindness, and taught him to read. When he was twelve years of age she died, and he fell into other and less compassionate hands. At the age of eighteen, on seeing his mother struck with a heavy whip, he for the first time turned upon his tormentors. To use his own words, 'I felt the blow in my heart. To utter a loud cry, and from a down-cast boy, with the timidity of one weak as a lamb, to become all at once like a raging lion, was a thing of a moment.' He was, however, subdued, and the next morning, together with his mother, a tenderly-nurtured and delicate woman, severely scourged. On seeing his mother rudely stripped and thrown down upon the ground, he at first with tears implored the overseer to spare her; but at the sound of the first blow, as it cut into her naked flesh, he sprang once more upon the ruffian, who, having superior strength, beat him until he was nearer dead than alive.

After suffering all the vicissitudes of slavery, hunger, nakedness, stripes; after bravely and nobly bearing up against that slow, dreadful progress which reduces the man to a thing—the image of God to a piece of merchandize, until he had reached his thirty-eighth year, he was unexpectedly released from his bonds. Some literary gentleman in Havana, into whose hands two or three pieces of his composition had fallen, struck with the vigor, spirit, and natural grace which they manifested, sought out the author, and raised a subscription to purchase his freedom. He came to Havana, and maintained himself by house painting, and such other employments as his ingenuity and talents placed within his reach. He wrote several poems, which have been published in Spanish at Havana, and translated by Dr. Madden, under the title of 'Poems by a Slave.'

It is not too much to say of these poems, that they will bear a comparison with most of the productions of modern Spanish literature. Certain it is, that their author is the only Cuban poet. His style is bold, free, energetic. Some of his pieces are sportive and graceful; such is his address to 'The Cucuya,' or Cuban fire-fly.

* * * * * * * *

Some of his devotional pieces evince the fervor and true feeling of the Christian poet. His 'Ode to Religion' contains many admirable lines. Speaking of the martyrs of the early days of Christianity, he says finely:

"Still in that cradle, purpled with their blood,
The infant Faith waxed stronger day by day."

I cannot forbear quoting the last stanza of this poem:—

"O God of mercy, throned in glory high,
  On earth and all its misery look down,
Behold the wretched, hear the captive's cry,
  And call thy exiled children around thy throne!
There would I fain in contemplation gaze
  On thy eternal beauty, and would make
Of love one lasting canticle of praise,
  And every theme but Thee henceforth forsake!"

The disastrous result of the insurrection of the slaves in Cuba is well known. Betrayed, and driven into premature collision with their oppressors, the wronged and maddened bondmen were speedily crushed into subjection. Placido was arrested, and after a long hearing, was condemned to be executed, and consigned to the 'Chapel of the Condemned.'

How far Placido was implicated in the insurrectionary movement, it is now perhaps impossible to ascertain. The popular voice at Havana pronounced him its leader and projector; and as such he was condemned. His own bitter wrongs; the terrible recollections of his life of servitude; the impunity with which the most dreadful outrages upon the persons of slaves were inflicted; acting upon a mind fully capable of appreciating the beauty of Freedom, furnished abundant incentives to an effort for the redemption of his race, and the humiliation of his oppressors. The Heraldo, of Madrid, speaks of him as 'the celebrated poet, and beloved and appreciated by the most respectable young men of Havana.' It accuses him of wild and ambitious projects, and states that he was intended to be the chief of the black race after they had thrown off the yoke of bondage.

He was executed at Havana in the 7th month, 1844. According to the custom in Cuba with condemned criminals, he was conducted from prison to the 'Chapel of the Doomed.' He passed thither with singular composure, amidst a great concourse of people, gracefully saluting his numerous acquaintances. The chapel was hung with black cloth, dimly lighted. Placido was seated beside his coffin. Priests in long black robes stood around him, chanting in sepulchral voices the service of the dead. It is an ordeal under which the stoutest hearted and most resolute have been found to sink. After enduring it for twenty-four hours, he was led out to execution. Placido came forth calm and undismayed; holding a crucifix in his hand, he recited, in a loud, clear voice, a solemn prayer in verse, which he had composed amidst the horrors of the 'Chapel.' It thrilled upon the hearts of all who heard it. I am indebted to a friend for assistance in rendering this remarkable prayer into English verse:—

PRAYER OF PLACIDO.

God of unbounded love and power eternal!
  To Thee I turn in darkness and despair;
Stretch forth Thine arm, and from the brow infernal
  Of Calumny the veil of Justice tear!
And from the forehead of my honest fame
  Pluck the world's brand of infamy and shame!

O King of kings!—my father's God! who only
  Art strong to save, by whom is all controlled,
Who givest the sea its waves, the dark and lonely
  Abyss of heaven its light, the North its cold,
The air its currents, the warm sun its beams,
Life to the flowers, and motion to the streams;

All things obey Thee; dying or reviving,
  As Thou commandest; all, apart from Thee,
From Thee alone their life and power deriving,
  Sink and are lost in vast eternity!
Yet doth the void obey Thee; since from nought
This marvelous being by thy hand was wrought.

O merciful God!—I cannot shun thy presence,
  For through its veil of flesh Thy piercing eye
Looketh upon my spirit's unsoiled essence,
  As through the pure transparence of the sky;
Let not the oppressor clap his bloody hands,
As o'er my prostrate innocence he stands!

But if, alas, it seemeth good unto Thee
  That I should perish as the guilty dies,
That, a cold, mangled corse, my foes should view me
  With hateful malice and exulting eyes,
Speak Thou the word, and bid them shed my blood,
Fully in me Thy will be done, O God!

On arriving at the fatal spot, he sat down as ordered, on a bench, with his back to the soldiers. The multitude recollected, that in some affecting lines, written by the conspirator in prison, he had said that it would be useless to seek to kill him by shooting his body—that his heart must be pierced ere it would cease its throbbings. At the last moment, just as the soldiers were about to fire, he rose up and gazed for an instant around and above him, on the beautiful capital of his native land, and its sail-flecked bay, on the dense crowds about him, the blue mountains in the distance, and the sky glorious with the summer sunshine. 'Adios mundo!' (Farewell world!) he said calmly, and sat down. The word was given, and five balls entered his body. Then it was, that, amidst the groans and murmurs of the horror-stricken spectators, he rose up once more, and turned his head to the shuddering soldiers, his face wearing an expression of superhuman courage. 'Will no one pity me?' he said, laying his hand over his heart. 'Here, fire here!' While he yet spake, two balls entered his heart, and he fell dead. Thus perished the hero-poet of Cuba. He has not fallen in vain. His genius, and his heroic death, will doubtless be regarded by his race as precious legacies. To the great names of L'Ouverture and Petion the colored man can add that of Juan Placido.

FEATS OF EAST INDIA JUGGLERS.

Martin describes many of the feats of the jugglers of the East, which were performed in his presence, but which were more astonishing and incredible than any thing exhibited in this country. One produced a plain, brown, earthen jar, which was frequently filled with water, and on being reversed, no water flowed from it; and it proved to be empty. The audience were invited to fill the jar, which they did many times, but with the same results, although the ground was not wet, nor was there the least appearance of water, when the jar was overturned or reversed. The jar was examined, and by permission, broken to pieces by the people present, but nothing peculiar was discovered about it. A man appeared with a bag of brass balls, which he threw one by one into the air, to the number of thirty-five. None of them appeared to return. After waiting a while, he made some odd motions with his hands, and the balls were seen to fall, one at a time, till he had caught the whole thirty-five, and returned them to the bag. This feat was repeated several times. Another person appeared with a bamboo about twenty feet long; and with a girdle round his body, in which was an iron socket. He placed the end of the bamboo pole on a flat stone, and climbed nimbly to the top of it, and fixed the socket of his breast-plate on its top end; and then, turning his legs backward till his heels touched his shoulders, grasped his ancles with his hands, and spun round with such velocity, as to appear like a revolving ball, while the pole, on the top of which he was whirling, had no apparent support whatever, to prevent its falling.

INGENUITY OF THE CHINESE.

The following descriptions were given by a clergyman who had visited China:—

"A hollow ball was shown him, some inches in diameter, which was divided into two hemispheres, the inside of one which was a representation of heaven, and that of the other of hell. By closely examining the surface with the naked eye, or by drawing his finger gently over it, he could just perceive a slight irregularity—a little roughness—but nothing more. On applying, however, a powerful magnifier, he found one of these hemispheres covered with the forms of angelic beings, all with countenances expressive of the highest happiness; and this was heaven. On the other hemisphere was hell. Each figure was perfect in itself; and the artist had succeeded in depicting the various passions on the countenance, in a wonderful and astonishing manner.

He had also seen a cherry-stone, with a part of it taken off, leaving the remainder in the shape of a small bowl, and looking inside and out not unlike any other cherry-stone, save what appeared to be a quantity of silver filings in its bottom. On having recourse to his magnifier again, he saw no less than a hundred perfectly formed and beautiful silver tea-spoons."

ORIGIN OF THE WORD 'QUIZ.'

Very few words ever took such a run, or were saddled with so many meanings, as this monosyllable, and however strange the word, it is still more strange that not one of our lexicographers, from Bayley to Johnson, ever attempted an explanation, or gave a derivation of it. The reason is very obvious: it is because it has no meaning, nor is it derived from any language in the world ever known, from the Babelish confusion to this day. When Richard Daly was patentee of the Irish theatres, he spent the evening of a Saturday in company with many of the wits and men of fashion of the day. Gambling was introduced, when the manager staked a large sum that he would have spoken through all the principal streets of Dublin by a certain hour next day, Sunday, a word having no meaning and being derived from no known language; wagers were laid, and stakes deposited. Daly repaired to the theatre, and despatched all the servants and supernumeraries with the word, 'Quiz,' which they chalked on every door and shop window in town. Shops being shut all the next day, every body going to and coming from their different places of worship saw the word; and every one repeated it, so that 'Quiz' was heard all through Dublin. The circumstance of so strange a word being on every door and window caused much surprise; and ever since, should a story be attempted to pass current, it draws forth the expression, 'You are quizzing me.'

It was a beautiful thought of a beautiful woman, who was complimented by the inventor of the Telegraph with a request for the first telegraphic dispatch, to dictate the passage, "What hath God wrought?" It was a kind of consecration of the work to God and religion.

CAPTAIN SMITH'S BEAR STORY.—A correspondent of the Newark Daily Advertiser gives the following recipe for getting rid of one's neighbor's hogs:

About the year 1830, I settled at the Lower Peach Tree, in Wilcox county, Alabama, and cultivated a few acres in corn and cotton, besides a small potato patch, and a bit of garden, as was usual in those days. My nearest neighbor, John Champion, being better off than the rest of us, had a nice gang of hogs, and feeling a little above his neighbors on account of his wealth, and being rather an overbearing man too, was not particular whether his stock broke into other people's fields or not. My crop was too small to feed my own family and John Champion's hogs too; so I complained to him several times, but could get no relief, when, being at old Erasmus Culpepper's house one day, I heard him make the remark, that if a foot, or an ear, or even a small piece of bear-skin was thrown down in a place where hogs use, that they would never show their snouts there again. I went home and got the skin of a bear which I had killed some time before, and having supplied myself with some corn I went out and saw about twenty fine year-olds, munching away in my field. I "tolled them up," and catching a good runner, sewed him up in the bear-skin, and then turned him loose, when he ran after the rest, who flew from the supposed bear. The last that was seen of them was at Bassett's Creek, near forty miles from my house, only two being alive—one running from his fellow sewed up in the skin, and he trying to catch the other—the rest were found dead in the road, having literally run themselves to death. It is needless to add that John Champion's hogs staid at home after that.

BLISTERS vs. FLOGGING.—We are informed by Sir C. Napier that blistering was successfully tried as a substitute for flogging in two corps, and he is not aware that this mode of punishment was adopted in any other regiment. The commanding officer of one of the regiments in question, that stationed in Guernsey, where liquor is cheap, determined to try to put a stop to the crime of drunkenness when on duty, by an appeal to the honorable feelings of soldiers, and, at the same time, make drunkenness as unpleasant as possible, but without the lash. He gave out an order to say that he would not flog, but trust to the soldier's self-respect for keeping sober on duty. Next day a man was drunk and confined. The colonel, accompanied by the surgeon, went to the guard-house and felt the drunkard's pulse. He was declared to be in a fever. Nothing could be more true. He was therefore put into a blanket, and four soldiers bore him through the barracks, his comrades all laughing at the care taken of him. On reaching the hospital, the patient was put to bed and blistered between the shoulders, fed on bread and water for a week, and then discharged cured. He was then brought on the parade, when the commanding officer congratulated him on his recovery, and sent him to join his company, where he was laughed at and jeered by his comrades during the space of a week. Many others underwent the same treatment; but the joke, though very amusing to the sober soldiers, soon began to be none to the drunkards. There was considerable pain and uneasiness—some bread, plenty of water; but no pitying comrades—no commiseration—no mercy. The experiment was completely successful. Not a man of that regiment was flogged in Guernsey from the time the men were treated with blisters; and a fortnight after, there was no such thing as a man drunk on guard or parade. Now, this regiment had been in an infamous state.

AN EXCITING SCENE.—The Philadelphia Inquirer tells us that a scene of great panic and excitement occurred on board the steamer "Hendrick Hudson," on the North River, on Friday night last, a few minutes before 12 o'clock. The passengers had all retired to rest, and most of them were in a sound sleep. All was still and calm, save the noise of the engine and the splash of the waters as the boat cut her way toward New York. Suddenly a passenger who had provided himself with a comfortable berth in the gentlemen's cabin, sprang from his place of repose, and exclaimed in the voice of a Stentor, "Fire! fire! fire! We are all gone; we are all lost." In an instant the passengers were awake, and as may well be imagined, in a dreadful state of alarm. Few of them attempted to dress themselves, but as they rushed together into the midst of the cabin, each striving to gain access to the doorway, the confusion and excitement were awful. The hands on deck, knowing that there was no danger, and that the alarm was a false one, endeavored to soothe and prevent the egress of the affrighted crowd; but for a time this only rendered the matter worse. At last, some one with lungs a little stronger than the rest, and who had discovered the cause of the panic, cried out at the top of his voice, that all was safe; and "the cry of panic and fear had proceeded from a passenger who was troubled with the nightmare." The change was indeed a happy one, and the passengers resumed their berths amid roars of laughter.

THE VALUE OF BATHING.—Once on a time a French doctor came to Damascus to seek his fortune. When he saw the luxurious vegetation, he said, "This is the place for me—plenty of fever." And then on seeing the abundance of water, he said, "More fever—no place like Damascus." When he entered the town he asked the people, "What is this building?" "A bath." "And what is that building?" "A bath." "And that other building?" "A bath." "Oh!" exclaimed the physician, "I was mistaken; these baths will take the bread out of my mouth. I must seek fever practice elsewhere."

THE SPIRIT OF LIBERTY.—Soon after the close of the war, a boy was offering some caged birds for sale in a market town, when a sailor came up and inquired the price of them. "Sixpence apice," replied the boy. "I did not ask how much apiece, but how much for the lot?" The boy, after some calculation, answered, "six shillings and sixpence." The sailor instantly handed him the money, and opening the cage door permitted the birds to escape. The boy in astonishment cried out, "What are you doing? you will lose your birds." "Very well," said the sailor, "I have been shut up three years as a prisoner of war, and I am resolved never to see any thing confined in prison that I can make free."

ROUND SHOULDERS.—Persons who carry weights on their heads, as fish women in the street, are remarkable for holding themselves erect and straight, and never have a stoop or curved spine. One of the most effectual means of removing stooping, and even of checking incipient lateral curvature of the spine, is by making the patient carry weights on the head, gradually augmented; this compels all the muscles by which perpendicularity is produced and preserved to exert themselves, and by this exertion they grow; and as the body cannot be allowed either to bend forward or to either side, the muscles gradually pull all the bones and ligaments into their proper position, and keep them, as well as themselves, in due posture. In fact, lateral curvature is caused by disproportioned strength, or exertion of different lateral sets of muscles, and by relaxation of ligaments, and can only be cured by producing a contrary state, by exercise and well-balanced perpendicularity of the spine; never by artificial machines nor by mere rest. The peasantry in those parts of the country where it is customary to carry burdens on the head, are remarkable for their erect statue and ease of motion. This is well seen about Aveyron in France.

IRON PRESERVED BY GALVANISM.—The Minister of the Navy, in France, appreciating the incontestible advantages of galvanism for the preservation of Iron, has just ordered that an iron ship cistern, now in the process of construction at Brest, shall be entirely galvanized, as well as a brig of twenty guns, which is about to be built also of iron. This determination cannot but be applauded, since it will prove an important saving in this department of the navy. It is to be hoped that galvanization will become a regular affair, and articles made of copper may generally as advantageously be of iron, and preserved for the future from oxydation, by the excellent process of M. Sorel.

CHEATING THE LAW.—No matter how carefully a law may be framed, men will always find a way to cheat it. Since the passage of the license law, the most ingenious methods have been devised to continue the meetings at the village taverns, and to take their drinks too—the law to the contrary, notwithstanding. To do this a certain number club together and purchase five gallons of liquor, which they leave in charge of the landlord, and as the law does not say that a man shall not drink his own liquor in a tavern, the party meet there as usual, and every thing proceeds in the same way as though no license law was in existence. A landlord at Flushing was tried last week for this offence, but the jury returned a verdict of "no cause of action."

VARIETY.

The late effort to promote education in Virginia has proved futile. Henceforth there will be double servitude in the 'Old Dominion,'—the blacks being slaves to white people, and white people slaves to ignorance. Strange that the 'Mother of Presidents,' should choose to remain, intellectually speaking, in a condition where

'Darkness might be bottled up,
And sold for Tyrian dye.'

An amusing incident occurred on the 1st of last April, (All Fool's Day.) A young lady promenading Chesnut street was accosted by a small Quaker girl with 'Miss, thy shoe is untied.' Not suspecting a trick, she looked down, but what was her astonishment when the little 'Friend' exclaimed, 'Thee is a Fourth Month dunce!'

Jerrold's Weekly (English) paper, after giving notice that Prince Albert was to lay the foundation stone of the Sailor's Home, Liverpool, with a silver-gilt trowel, elaborately modeled, asks the following question—'Would not charity be better carried out, if the prince were to handle a common trowel, and let the cost of the 'silver-gilt' go to the Home?'

The Courier des Etats Unis states that a son of Sir Robert Peel, who was formerly Secretary of Legation at Madrid, lately received the appointment of First Secretary of Legation in Switzerland; but before going to his new post he went to London for a few weeks, and there lost by gambling 1,500,000 francs, for which he gave bills of exchange. When they became due Sir Robert refused to pay them, and the son was thrown into prison.

'Live on a sixpence a day, and work to earn it,' was the guinea's worth of advice the eccentric Dr. Abernethy, of London, gave to the lazy gormond of a dyspeptic, who wanted of physic, what neither man nor God, except by miracle, could do for him. Nature's laws are never broken with impunity.

The English correspondent of the Atlas wittily says of the monuments and statutes of certain illustrious authors—'Those who often lacked bread have at last received a stone.'

Miss Charity Holmes has been arrested in New York for stealing silver spoons from her mother. In this case "Charity began at home," sure enough.

A shilling in the bathing room will buy a man more good feeling and refreshment than a dollar in the grog cellar.

A Greek, a Persian, and an Indian sage, debated the question, "What is the greatest evil?" The Greek said, "Old age oppressed by poverty;" the Persian said, "Pain with impatience;" the Indian said, "Death without good works before it."

The judgments paid for damages during the Riots in July, 1844, in Kensington, amount to twenty-three thousand four hundred and twenty-one dollars and sixty cents, making in all the enormous sum of thirty-one thousand and eighty-nine dollars and fifty-seven cents.

The St. Louis Organ says, the battle fields of Resaca de la Palma and Palo Alto, are said to be several feet under water since the late rains. Nature, as if indignant at the flow of human blood between the two armies, has sent her genial showers to the plain, to wash from her bright carpet the crimson stain of sanguinary conflict.

A Society in France, have the past year dedicated three ships for conveying Roman Catholic Missionaries to the Pacific and elsewhere. And the London Record states that one is now being built in England for the same purpose.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institution, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25
EXTRAS PER TERM.
Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trustees.

ALFRED, June 23, 1846.

DE RUYTER INSTITUTE.

TEACHERS' Classes will be formed at the opening of the fall term, September 16, to continue seven weeks, which will be exercised in practical teaching under the immediate supervision of the Principals, with a thorough review of the common-school studies. Lectures on the theory of teaching, and other important subjects, will form a part of the daily exercises. The Principals will be assisted by Hon. Edward Cooper and the County Superintendents of Madison and Cortland Counties. All the improvements and important suggestions of the day in the art of teaching, will be brought before the class for their consideration.

OBEDIENT TO, BUT NOT JUSTIFIED BY, THE LAW.

There seems to be a notion abroad, that Sabbatarians are not so evangelical in their views as some other Christians, because they lay so much stress on the law. It may be that they imagine we expect to be justified by the observance of it. Some who call themselves Baptists maintain that the law is abolished altogether—an idea gathered from the Apostle Paul's treatise on justification, in his epistle to the Romans. Some suppose, that there is as wide a difference as this between the old and the new dispensation; i. e., in the old dispensation, justification was by keeping the law, or, in other words, the keeping of it was expected by the great Lawgiver in order to justify them, and in the new dispensation justification is by the merits of Christ without any reference to the keeping of the law. Both of these views are certainly false. The Sabbatarians expect to be justified upon the same ground as all real Christians do, and as the Apostle did. They rest upon his atoning blood for the pardon of their sins, and upon his righteousness for acceptance before God. It is true that they attach an importance to the keeping of the law; but no more than the great founder of our religion did, and those whom he appointed to make known his doctrines to the world. Indeed, what evidence can be given of our being justified, except our conformity to the law of God? It appears evident enough, that all God's people, in all ages, entertained this view of the subject. In the old dispensation they did not look for justification to the deeds of the law, but to the work which the Messiah was to perform, which was typified by the sacrifices and ceremonies appointed by God. The evidence of justification was obedience. It is clear that it was always impossible to be justified by the law, because the law extended to the whole of man's life, and no deviation could be allowed, unless a change could be effected in the character of God. Past offences must be obliterated somehow; but how cannot be devised, because perfection was always required. Something must be done, more than an angel can perform, ere a man can be justified by the law who has in the smallest degree violated it. The law, which consists in loving God with all our heart and soul, the test of which is observing all those particular things laid down in the Word of God in the Decalogue, can be repealed. Though as to the particulars of it there may be a change in another world, yet it will be perfect love to God in an eternal state, and obedience to his will in whatever way he shall see fit to point out.

Many, and indeed most First-day Baptists, lay all this stress upon the law and every item of it, except the fourth commandment. A venerable father in the ministry said in a Seventh-day Baptist pulpit recently, that the law of God could not change. He said it was a perfect law, and hence if it was to change it must be for the worse. He was careful, however, not to touch upon the particular parts of it, but confined himself to the two great leading articles of it, love to God supreme and equal love to man. Most certainly if the two great principles are right, the particulars must be equally right. If the first are binding upon men, the others must be equally binding. Nothing surely can justify our neglect of any part of the law, unless it can be proved by the unerring standard of truth, that a part has been abolished, or another law placed in its room. Before we dare to alter any item in the divine requirements, or practice any thing as contained in the divine Word in any other form or at any other time, we must certainly have an express warrant from heaven, written in such plain characters that we cannot mistake them.

Sabbatarians do not look for justification from the deeds of the law, any more than other Christians. Nor do they attach more importance and value to it than others profess to. There is only one point of difference; they are willing to take the law as they find it, and obey as well as they can every precept it contains, not presuming to make any improvement. They find that one part of it is, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy," and they find it as plainly written as a reasonable creature can require, "The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." Thus it stands, and though thousands have not understood it so, (and the writer among the rest for many years,) yet no argument can overturn it. Many, however, in the churches do understand it so now, and it only wants a greater portion of the love of God in the soul, and more honesty of heart, for them to come out and obey the requirements of heaven. Except they can adduce something more convincing than has ever yet been sent into the world, something which they have not as yet fixed their eyes upon, they are most certainly to be charged with a violation of morals. From this wood, hay, and stuble, let them make an effort to escape lest they suffer loss when the fire of the last day burns up the refuge to which they have been attached. W—R.

FAMILY RECOLLECTIONS.

From Rev. Baron Stow's 'Whole Family in Heaven and Earth.'

Whole Family.—It is not easy to conjoin other two words that would awaken so many tender associations, or furnish so many topics of exhilarating or saddening interest.

'God setteth the solitary in families;' and you can probably recollect when you was a constituent of a whole, and, in some respects, of a happy family. Then you were all, parents and children, sheltered by the same roof, and grouped at the same fire-side. Then, thrice a day, you surrounded the same table, and partook of the bounty of him who 'openeth his hand and satisfieth the desires of every living thing.' Then you 'went to the house of God in company,' and occupied the same pew, and listened to the same expounder of the heavenly oracles. Then, morning and evening, you sat in reverent silence, and heard chapters read from the family Bible—a peculiar book, whose shape and appearance you can never forget, and the like of which you have never yet seen. Then you bowed, an unbroken circle, around a common altar.

> When kneeling down to heaven's Eternal King,
> The saint, the Father, and the husband prayed.

Then, as you had one home, and sought no other. your joys, griefs, and interests were one. You had 'all things common.' Then, as affection bound you together, the thought of separation was inexpressibly painful. You deprecated the rupture of the family tie as an evil of unsurpassed magnitude.

Those days of home comfort—of sweet domestic endearment—are fresh in your recollection, and only by the annihilation of your being can they be extirpated from your memory. Your thoughts love to linger about those sunny scenes, and from them extract the honey that sweetens the bitterness of present cares and disappointments. And the farther you advance in life, the more frequently do your minds recur to them as a fount of solace that the heart knows how to appreciate.

But that circle of home kindred, once and so long complete, has been broken. That family, once whole, has felt the touch of the Breaker's wand, and some of the fragments are mouldering in the tomb where other dead are congregated, or in some country grave-yard, where in summer grow the fern and the wild-brier, and in winter the cold north-wind spreads over them a snow mantle. Other portions, widely sundered, have become centres around which new circles are forming, that are soon, in like manner, to be broken and dispersed. O, how tender and subduing are the reminiscences of family connections and family scenes! Father! Mother!—blessings on their memories—where are they? Brothers! Sisters! where are they? Husband! Wife! Children! where are they? Youthful readers, how little do you know what lies before you in the pathway of life. These touching, melting recollections will be yours. While the family, in whose warm bosom you now nestle, remains whole, prize the blessing as from Heaven, and improve this season as the happiest of your temporal existence.

> We all are here,
> You that I love, with love so dear,
> This may not long of us be said—
> Soon must we join the gathered dead,
> And by the hearth we now sit round,
> Some other circle will be found.
> O, then, that wisdom may we know,
> Which yields a life of peace below;
> So, in the world to follow this,
> May each repeat, in words of bliss,
> We're all—all here!

ANECDOTE OF REV. ROWLAND HILL.

After Mr. Hill preached for the Missionary Society in Prince street Chapel, Davenport, two tall venerable looking men upwards of seventy years of age, appeared at the vestry door. After a short pause, they entered, arm in arm, and advanced towards Mr. Hill, when one of them, with some degree of trepidation, inquired, "Sir will you permit two old sinners, to have the honor to shake you by the hand?" He replied with some reserve, "Yes sir;" when one of the gentleman took his hand, kissed it, bathed it with tears, and said, "Sir, do you remember preaching on the spot where the chapel now stands, fifty years ago?" "Yes, I do;" was the reply. The old man then proceeded to say, "O, sir, never can the dear friend who has hold of my arm, or myself, forget that sermon. We were then two careless young men, in his majesty's dockyard, posting to destruction, as fast as time and sin could carry us thither. Having heard that a young clergyman was to preach out of doors, we determined to go and have some fun; we loaded our pockets with stones, intending to pelt you; but, sir, when you arrived, our courage failed; and as soon as you engaged in prayer, we were so deeply impressed, that we looked at each other and trembled. When you named your text, and began to speak, the word came with power to our hearts; the tears rolled down our cheeks; we put our hands in our pockets, and dropped the stones, one after another, until they were all gone; for God had taken away the stone from our hearts. When the sermon was over we retired; but our hearts were too full to speak until we came near our lodgings, when my friend at my elbow said, 'John this will not do, we are both wrong. Good night.' This was all we could utter. He returned to his apartment, I to mine; but neither of us dared to go to bed, lest we should wake in hell. From that time, sir, we humbly hope we were converted to God, who, in his infinite mercy, has kept us in his ways to the present moment. We thought, sir, if you would permit us, after the lapse of half a hundred years, to have the pleasure of shaking you by the hand before we go home, it would be the greatest honor that could be conferred on us." Mr. Hill was deeply affected; the tears rolled down his cheeks in quick sucession; he fell on the necks of the old men, quite in the patriarchal style; and there you might have seen them, locked in each other's arms, weeping tears of holy joy and gratitude before the Father of mercies.

THE HEBREW PROPHETS.

From the first appearance of Hebrew Prophets on the stage of action down to Malachi, the last of the series, prominent traits of character mark them as a distinct clsss of men. One sees in them, at all times and places, an animated zeal for the worship of the only living and true God, and a correspondent, inextinguishable, irreconcilable, steadfast hatred and contempt of all idols and false gods, of their worship, their worshipers, their rites and ceremonies. Conscious of the integrity and uprightness of their own designs, the Prophets never shrink from urging their views upon all around them. Do threats of violence, persecution, or even martyrdom, ensue, they never shrink back from their undertaking. It matters not with them whom they are addressing, be they kings, princes, nobles, priests, Levites, or common people. They have but one and the same message for all, and that is, the necessity of sincere and hearty obedience to the laws of God. Their courage and resolution never fail, or even seem to abate. Whether Nathan appears before David to accuse him of adultery and murder; or Elijah before Ahab to remonstrate against his oppression and idolatry; or Jeremiah before Jehoiakim or Zedekiah to admonish them and their corrupt courtiers; or Urijah before Jehoiakim, who persecuted even unto death; it matters not as to the fidelity, boldness, zeal, and constancy of the Prophet. They do not appear even to have asked themselves, whether they might not avoid persecution, or danger, or death, by withholding their message. Enough that they felt commissioned to say: Thus saith Jehovah. With them it seems to have made no practical difference, whether the message connected with their commission was to be addressed to the king on the throne, or to the beggar on the dunghill.

On the side of right, justice, humanity, uprightness, sincerity, true kindness, we are always sure to find them. The widow, the orphan, and the oppressed, they are ever ready to succor. They spare none who violate the sacred principles of the moral virtues; surely not those who hanker after idols. On the side of the law, order, decorum, peaceful demeanor, we never fail to meet with them. Their zeal for the only living and true God—his honor, his worship, his ordinances—never cool, and never permits them to temporize or hesitate when any of these are in jeopardy. We always find them, moreover, to possess rational and spiritual views of religion. Rites and ceremonies they regard as only subordinate means to an ultimate and higher end. Bigotry and superstition form no ingredients to their character. The Mosaic rites with them are but rites, and nothing more. That these were only the shadow of good things to come, is the sum of all they ever said, or would say respecting them. [Stuart.

MR. ROGERS' PERSONATION.

Dr. Thomas Goodwin, such time as he was President of Magdalene College, Oxford, told me, that in the time of his youth, being then a student at Cambridge, and having heard much of Mr. Rogers, of Dedham, in Essex, purposely he took a journey to hear him preach on his lecture-day, a lecture, then, so strangely thronged and frequented, that, to those who came not early, there was no possibility of getting room in that very spacious church. Mr. Rogers was, as he told me, at the time he heard him, on the subject of the Scriptures. And in that sermon he falls into an expostulation with the people about their neglect of the Bible. He personates God to the people, and tells them, "Well, I have trusted you so long with my Bible; you have slighted it, it lies in such houses, all covered with dust and cobwebes; you care not to look into it. Do you use my Bible thus? Well, you shall have my Bible no longer." And he takes up the Bible from his cushion, and seemed as if he were going away with it, and carrying it from them; but immediately turns again, and personates the people to God, falls down on his knees, cries, and pleads most earnestly, "Lord, whatever thou doest to us, take not thy Bible from us; kill our children, burn our houses, destroy our goods, only spare us thy Bible—only take not away thy Bible." And then he personates God again to the people: "Say you so? well, I wil try you awhile longer; and here is my Bible for you, I will see how you will use it, whether you will love it more, whether you will observe it more, whether you will value it more, practice it more, and live more according to it." But by these actions, and this discourse (as the Doctor told me) he put all the congregation into so strange a posture, as he never saw any congregation in his life; the place was a mere Bochim—the people, generally as it were, deluged with their own tears, and he told me, that he, himself, when he got out, and was to take horse again to be gone, he was fain to hang a quarter of an hour upon the neck of his horse weeping, before he had power to mount; so strange an impression was there upon him, and generally upon the people, upon having been thus expostulated with for the neglect of the Bible. SMYRNA.

There are few, if any, of the eastern cities more deeply interesting than Smyrna; the very name must at once suggest its principal claim for a more than ordinary share of attention; and in fact it is only in reference to it, as one of the seven churches of Asia, that the more prominent features of its present condition become so remarkable. From its central, as well as from its commercial influence, it is the resort of persons of every country and denomination, besides being the resting-place of travelers to many different quarters; and, in consequence of this, I believe there is no place where so many different religions are not only tolerated, but firmly established, and flourishing, in perfect harmony with each other. Mohammedanism is of course the religion of the country, but its various sects are here more than usually distinct. Judaism greatly prevails—the Hebrew population being numerous, and the members of the American church scarcely less so. Then there is the Gueber, or fire-worshiper, whose adoration of the sun is at least less astonishing here than it would be in England; the Greek; the Roman Catholic; the Nestorian; and many others, which I have neither time nor space to enumerate; besides a considerable number of Protestants from all parts of the globe. There are several European families which have become naturalized at Smyrna; and notwithstanding the lapse of a generation or so, they cling with the greatest tenacity to the manners and customs of their countries, and in many instances have preserved the purity of their faith, both in doctrine and ritual, far more perfectly than it now exists in the lands whence they brought it. Besides all this, Smyrna is, as it were, the focus of numerous branches of missionary societies in the East, and it is consequently inhabited by a vast number of Americans. [Chambers' Journal.

THAT TIME WILL COME.

That time is coming. That month, that day, that hour, that moment is coming on apace, and draws nearer, with every rising and every setting sun. What time, do you ask, reader? It is the time most solemn, most important, and full of surpassing interest to you, reader, of any moment of your existence. It is the time when you will die. It will be the end of time to you. Then you will pass out of time. You will then cross the last boundary of time. You will have done with time. At that time you will change your mode of existence. You will enter on new and untried scenes in a world of spirits, and become the companion of good or evil angels. That hour, that moment will stamp on your destiny the seal of eternity. What a time that will be to each individual! How near and full of interest! And yet how little think the gay and pleasuring-loving people of that coming hour! Could they lift life's spyglass and look away into the coming future, and see that messenger on the pale horse approaching with every passing hour, how different would be the conduct of many from what it is now! Yet that hour, that moment is coming. The time to die will come.

Death is to every man a serious matter. It makes us serious to think of it amidst the gayest and most trifling scenes. Reflections on death have no affinity for light and vain amusements. Mirth flees instinctively at the very mention of the name of death. If but one thought of the future would come in amidst the thoughts of vanity, it scatters them as the tempest scatters the chaff. The two kinds of thoughts, the serious and the vain, cannot exist together. And since the one must exclude the other, it becomes a solemn question, which of the two are for our happiness? How often and to what extent will it be more profitable to cherish mirth than solemnity? Which may be most safely established with the habits of the mind? Which will most confirm your peace, most elevate your character, and lead you most directly to holiness and heaven?

When will men find time to think of death and eternity? What occurrences of their life call them naturally to reflections upon Jesus Christ as their Saviour, and to seek their comfort by the exercise of faith and hope in him? There is a time for all things. This is their motto. But when is there time for prayer to God; for confessing their sins, and imploring pardon; for giving thanks to the Giver of innumerable mercies and commending themselves in humble confidence to preserving and redeeming love?

THE PLACE OF THE BIBLE.

The Bible must be all or nothing. If it once be placed an a level with the tradition of man it is taken down from its high place and degraded, and will be soon forgotten. So it was in the dark ages. The sacred volume might be found in monasteries and palaces beautifully written and adorned with silver and gold. But it was a splendid curiosity, a costly ornament, to be exhibited and admired, but not used. If here and there a wealthy nobleman owned a copy of the precious book, it by no means followed that he knew any thing of its contents. A large number of the priests themselves were enwrapped in the same ignorance. All their knowledge from the word of God was derived from the selections contained in the breviary and missal; and even these were imperfectly understood by many of them, their acquaintance with the Latin being frequently very slender. The mind of the common people was dark as midnight.

THE UNDECIDED MAN.

A man may think of some desirable alteration in his plan of life; perhaps in the arrangements of his family, or in the mode of his intercourse with society. Would it be a good thing? He thinks it would be a good thing. It certainly would be a very good thing. He wishes it were done. He will attempt it almost immediately. The following day, he doubts whether it would be quite prudent. Many things are to be considered. May there not be in the change some evils of which he is not aware? Is this a proper time? What will the people say? And thus, though he does not formally renounce his purpose, he shrinks out of it, with a wish that he could be fully satisfied of the propriety of renouncing it. Perhaps he wishes that the thought had never occured to him, since it has diminished his self-complacency, without promoting his virtue. But the next day, his conviction of the wisdom and advantage of such a reform comes with great force. Then, is it so practicable as I was at first willing to imagine? Why not? Other men have done much greater things; a resolute mind is omnipotent; difficulty is a stimulus and a triumph to a strong spirit; "the joys of conquest are the joys of man." What need I care about people's opinion? It shall be done. He makes the first attempt. But some unexpected obstacle presents itself; he feels the awkwardness of attempting an unaccustomed manner of acting; the questions or the ridicule of his friends disconcert him; his ardor abates and expires. He again begins to question, whether it be wise, whether it be necessary, whether it be possible; and at last, surrenders his purpose, to be perhaps resumed when the same feelings return, and to be in the same manner again relinquished. INSCRIPTION ON A MINISTER'S STUDY DOOR.

Rev. Mr. Dilserr, a distinguished and devoted pastor at Nurenburg, who died in the year 1669, and who is known as the author of various excellent devotional works, wrote, for the information of his visitors, the following inscription above the door of his study:—

"Stand still, dear guest!—do not knock or disturb me, unless the highest necessity requires it. Know that the morning hours are dedicated to my God and to the business of my office. But, if thou art desirous of conversing with me on a subject that is worthy of any consumption of the precious time, then call in the afternoon; but remember! we must render an account to God for every hour."

If every pastor does not write and fasten this admonition on his study door, how often is he prompted to utter it, when hour after hour is stolen from him by impertinent intrusion! Let his good friends and parishioners remember his morning hours are for God and study, and all other hours only for worthy subjects of conversation.

A Missionary of Meal.—The Bangor Whig says:—"Our whole-hearted friend Elihu Burritt says, in his last letter from England, that he had been exceedingly busy for ten days, working night and day with his arms up to the elbows in Indian meal, instructing the natives in the mysteries of 'corn-fixings.' With the assistance of the good woman of the house, he brought out a capital edition of puddings and johnny-cakes. A great many of the poorest class of the people there are determined they wil not eat it, especially those confined in the work-houses, but when they find it is used as an article of luxury on the tables of the rich, it will remove their squeamishness. They have got the idea fixed in their minds, with all the obstinacy of ignorance, that corn meal in its best estate is mere swine's food.

"Mr. Burritt has resolved to make it a condition upon which only he will consent to be any man's guest, that his wife shall serve up a johnny-cake for breakfast or an Indian pudding for dinner. He had been invited to a tea party where about thirty persons were to be present, and accepted the invitation with the johnny-cake clause, which was readily agreed to by all parties. So the virtues of corn meal will be tested by some of the best livers in Birmingham."

Modesty.—Who shall win the prize? There was as a meeting of the flowers, and the judge was appointed to award the prize of beauty.

"Who shall win the prize?" asks the Rose, proudly rushing forward in blushing beauty, with full assurance of its winning worth.

"Who shall win the prize?" asked the rest of the flowers, as they came forward, each conscious of its attraction, and each equally sure of receiving the reward.

"I will take a peep at the assemblage," thought the Violet, not intending to make one of the company, "and see the beauties as they pass."

Just as it was raising its modest head from its humble and retiring corner, and was looking in upon the meeting, the judge rose to render his decree. "To the Violet," said he, "I award the prize of beauty, for there is no trait more rare, none more enchantingly beautiful than—Modesty."

The Prophetic Dew-drops.—A delicate child, pale and prematurely wise, was complaining on a hot morning, that the poor dew-drops had been to hastily snatched away, and not allowed to glitter on the flowers like other happier dew-drops that live the whole night through, and sparkle in the moonlight and through the morning onward to noon-day. "The sun," said the child, "has chased them away with his heat, or swallowed them up in his wrath." Soon after came rain, and a rainbow, whereupon his father pointed upwards: "See," said he, "there stands the dew-drops glorious roset—a glittering jewelry—in the heavens; and the clownish fool tramples on them no more. By this, my child, thou art taught that what withers upon earth blooms again in heaven." Thus the father spoke, and knew not that he spoke pre-figuring words; for soon after the delicate child, with the morning brightness of his early wisdom, was exhaled, like a dew-drop, into heaven. A Shower.—A merchant was oue day returning from market. He was on horseback, and behind his saddle was a valise filled with money. The rain fell with violence, and the good old man was wet to the skin. At this time he was quite vexed, and murmured because God had given him such bad weather for his journey.

He soon reached the border of a thick forest. What was his terror on beholding on one side of the road a robber, who, with leveled gun, was aiming at him and attempting to fire! But the powder being wet with the rain, the gun did not go off, and the merchant giving spurs to his horse fortunately had time to escape.

As soon as he found himself safe, he said to himself, "How wrong I was not to endure the rain patiently, as sent by Providence. If the weather had been dry and fair, I should not probably have been alive at this hour; the rain which caused me to murmur came at a fortunate moment, to save my life and preserve to me my property."

It is always important to be firm and decided in the Lord's cause.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New-York, September 17, 1846.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

The Seventh-day Baptist General Conference convened with the Church in Shiloh, N. J., on fourth-day, Sept. 9, 1846. The delegation was tolerably numerous, but did not represent the different sections of the denomination so generally as could be desired. It was large enough, however, to make a very interesting and useful session.

The Introductory Discourse was preached by Eld. Wm. B. Maxson, from 1 Corinthians 10: 31, "Whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." The exhortation or injunction of the text was represented as growing out of the doctrine that we are not our own. It naturally suggests the thought, that the religion of Jesus Christ is a matter of fact religion, requiring of its subjects not merely feeling, but action. A religion of faith and feeling alone, is dead. The Gospel requires an operative faith, and those who receive it are required to be a working people. A church, or association of churches, acting in accordance with this requirement, cannot fail of success. There may be a great variety of ways in which to perform their labor, both at home and abroad. But in whatever station an individual may be placed, or under whatever circumstances a religious body may be formed, some kind of work to be done must be set up and pursued. This doctrine was applied particularly to the Conference; and the necessity of setting before it some definite and worthy object to pursue, as a means of advancing Christ's kingdom, was clearly presented and forcibly urged.

The Introductory Discourse was followed by a short intermission, after which the Conference was organized by the appointment of Wm. B. Maxson, Moderator, and Solomon Carpenter and Darwin E. Maxson, Clerks.

The Letters to the Conference were quite meagre and unsatisfactory in their account of the actual state of religion among the churches. But from what they did contain, we judge that little addition has been made to the number of members during the year, and that the standard of religious feeling is altogether too low. Although the same is true to a great extent of the churches throughout the country, this of course affords no justification. Indeed, the letters generally spoke of the condition of things as calling loudly for humiliation and reformation.

At an early stage of the proceedings, a report was presented from a Committee appointed to prepare business. It stated that there were three subjects which seemed to demand the particular attention of the Conference during its present session. The first related to the question whether the Conference should be continued; and if so, in what manner. The second related to the publication of a Hymn Book which should meet the acknowledged wants of the denomination. The third related to the subject of Sabbath Legislation, upon which it was thought desirable to have an official expression of opinion. By a vote of the Conference, the time was so appropriated as to give sufficient opportunity for a full consideration of each of these questions. Upon the last named, a lengthy but exceedingly interesting discussion arose, which occupied nearly all of the third day of the session. We give below the resolutions presented by the Business Committee, and finally adopted by the Conference:—

1st. Of the Conference.

Resolved, That we recommend the continuance of the General Conference in its present character as an advisory council, and a medium for collecting the statistics of the denomination; that its meetings be held once in three years; that we respectfully invite each church, either directly or through the Association with which it is connected, to make a report of its statistics, together with the changes which may have taken place during the three years; and that the Constitution be so amended, that if the benevolent societies shall at any future period see fit to hold their anniversaries in connection with the Conference, the time shall be so appropriated as to give the first two business days to the Conference, the second two to the societies, and the following days alternately to the societies and the Conference.

This resolution was under consideration for portions of two days. There seemed to be, on the part of the delegates, a conviction that the question was one of uncommon importance, in deciding which, personal preferences ought to be laid aside for the purpose of meeting the wishes and necessities of the denomination at large. Opportunity was given for every delegate who desired it to express his opinion upon the subject, and state his reasons for the same, without the embarrassment of being regarded as taking sides either for or against the Conference. There were some who at first expressed a decided preference for the discontinuance of the Conference; but after the subject had been more fully considered, they either waived their objections to it, or seemed less anxious to urge them. There were others whose preferences were strong for an annual Conference. They regarded the body as important, not only as a means of cultivating and strengthening attachments between brethren from different sections of the denomination, but as a medium through which the voice of the denomination might be given forth. And they judged that to accomplish these objects, a session was needed as often as once in a year. To their honor, however, it ought to be recorded, that they manifested a readiness to hear and weigh what could be said on the other side, and to fall in with the plan which seemed most likely to secure the desired objects. There were others who thought it important to have an association of some kind—(whether it was called a Conference, or something else, they were not particular)—which should have an eye to the religious interests of the whole denomination, to which questions of a denominational character might be referred, and to the proceedings and statistics of which the world might turn for information concerning the numbers and condition of the people. In their opinion, a session once in three years would be quite sufficient for these purposes, and they therefore advocated a triennial Conference. After a lengthy, careful, candid, and interesting discussion of this whole subject, the resolution was passed without a dissenting voice.

2d. Of the Hymn Book.

Whereas, the Eastern Seventh-day Baptist Association, at its last session, appointed a Committee, consisting of Lucius Crandall and Thomas B. Brown, to procure the publication of a new selection of Hymns for the use of the denomination, and requested the appointment of brethren from the other Associations to co-operate with them; and whereas, in consequence of the non-appointment of such brethren by the Associations, the Committee, feeling their incompetency for the task, desire the counsel of other brethren, therefore—

Resolved, That this Conference heartily approves of the Committee appointed by the Eastern Association, and requests Elds. Eli S. Bailey, Wm. B. Maxson, Nathan V. Hull, and Sherman S. Griswold, to co-operate with them in the preparation and publication of said book—it being understood, that by this vote the Conference does not assume any financial responsibility, but promises to use its influence to secure for the book as extensive a circulation as possible.

This resolution speaks for itself, and needs no explanation. It may be well to state, however, that the only difficulty in securing a Hymn Book seems to be, to get it arranged in such a way as to meet the approval of the whole denomination. It was hoped by the framers and advocates of this resolution, that Brn. Crandall and Brown would take upon them the principal labor of revising and preparing the work for the press; that it would then be forwarded to the other members of the Committee, for their examination, and amendment if thought necessary; that it could then be published with the sanction of the whole Committee, and would be received by the denomination as a book adapted to their wants. If this plan can be carried out, there will probably be no trouble or expense to the Committee about getting the work printed.

3d. Of Sabbath Legislation.

Resolved, That it is the settled conviction of this Conference, that all legislation designed to enforce the religious observation of any day for the Sabbath, thereby determining by civil law that such day shall not be used for labor or judicial purposes, is unconstitutional, and hostile to religious freedom.

The third day of the session was appropriated to the consideration of this resolution. There was some difference of opinion as to the propriety of sending it forth with the sanction of the Conference at the present time. A lengthy discussion arose, which was participated in by brethren Crandall, Clawson, Maxson, Gillett, Coon, Davison, V. Hull, P. Stillman, and others. Our limits will not permit us to give the remarks of the different speakers; but the following we believe to be a fair statement of the views of the majority.

In respect to the constitutionality of Sabbath laws, it was agreed, that the Constitution of nearly every State in the Union contains a clause guarantying religious liberty, and denying the right of the legislature to enact laws which shall give preferences to any form of religion. Now it is well known, that many persons feel as much bound, in view of the necessities of themselves and their families, to labor six days in the week, as to rest on the seventh. For the legislature to enact laws requiring them to rest on a day on which their consciences permit—or, in view of their circumstances, require—them to work, thus robbing them of one sixth part of their time because they differ from the majority as to the day to be observed, is an infraction of that provision of the Constitution which guarantees religsous equality. It is certainly conceivable, and indeed has been proven in practice, that such laws may infringe upon the rights of conscience as truly as would a law requiring a man to be immersed whose conscience was satisfied with sprinkling—the unconstutionality of which every body would acknowledge.

In regard to the bearing of Sabbath Legislation upon religious freedom, it was maintained, that of the duties required by the law of God there are two classes, one of which may properly be enforced by legislative enactments, and the other not. All the laws of God which so affect the civil condition of men, that obedience to them is necessary to secure equal rights and the public safety, may properly be enforced by civil rulers. Such are the laws respecting murder and theft, which rulers may enforce, not exclusively because they are the laws of God, but because they are necessary to the safety and equality of men. But those divine laws which relate alone to the religious conduct of men in their relation to God, the legislator or civil ruler has no right to meddle with. Such is the law of the Sabbath. It is designed to secure the good of man and the worship of God, by affording an opportunity for rest and devotion. It is therefore a matter between God and individual men, which does not need the aid of civil enactments. It is true, as is often urged, that the observance of the Sabbath is the duty of all men, and exerts a good influence upon society. But if this be a good reason why legislators should enforce it, then it is equally a good reason why they should enforce all the laws of God, since they are all useful to society. Nobody doubts, for instance, that it is the duty of all men to love God with all their hearts, and that a compliance with that duty would greatly promote the interests of society. Yet who will maintain that it is for this reason the right of legislators to enact laws to whip, fine, or imprison men for not loving God with all their hearts. Again, it is the duty of all men to repent and believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and society would be the better if this duty were discharged. Yet who believes that the interests of society or religion would be promoted by laws to enforce repentance and faith? Nay, more—who doubts that the enactment of such laws would lead to abuses and evils innumerable? It is just so in respect to the Sabbath; all attempts to enforce its observance by law, must be liable to abuses which are inconsistant with religious freedom and equality. If the whole world were agreed as to the particular day to be observed, the danger would be less, although even then, from the diversity of opinions which might exist as to the manner of observing it, and kindred questions, there would be multiplied occasions for litigation and oppression. But as circumstances now are, it is dangerous for legislators to touch the institution at all, and dangerous to allow that they have any right to do so. Indeed, if we acknowledge their right to legislate at all upon the subject—(except to protect men in the enjoyment of their religious opinions)—there is no end to the consequences of such acknowledgment. There can be no legislation which will secure the observation of any one day, without dictating which day it shall be. And if we concede that the legislature may dictate which day shall be kept, we may as well acknowledge at once, that whatever day they see fit to fix upon is the right day, and so save ourselves the persecutions and persecutions even unto death, which have overtaken some of our brethren in times past.

As to the expediency of sending forth this resolution at the present time, the prevailing opinion seemed to be, that there never was a time when it was more needed or when the occasions for it were greater. But the argument which had most weight was, that it is always safe to take the true ground, and always unsafe to abandon it for fear of opposition. In taking this position, we only do what consistency requires, and what our opponents will in heart approve.

After the passage of the above resolution, a Committee was appointed, consisting of Samuel Davison, Nathan Wardner, and Geo. B. Utter, to prepare and report an Address upon the subject of Sabbath Legislation. This Committee presented an Address, which was approved by the Conference, and referred to the Board of Managers of the American Sabbath Tract Society with a request for its publication.

The same Committee who reported the Address were requested, by a vote of the Conference, to prepare a form of petition, stating our civil grievances, and adapted, with proper modifications to suit the laws of the different States, for presentation to the various legislative bodies which we may have occasion to address. They were directed to request the publication of the same in the Sabbath Recorder.

A Central Corresponding Committee, consisting of Samuel Davison, Eli S. Bailey, Thos. B. Brown, Wm. M. Fahnestock, and Nathan V. Hull, was appointed to attend to any case of civil prosecution for labor on Sunday which may occur, in which it may be deemed advisable to apply to the highest authorities for redress on behalf of members of the denomination.

The following resolution, presented by Samuel Davison, was unanimously passed:—

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Conference, that all resistance to State laws or municipal prosecutions for labor or business on the first day of the week, should be conducted alone by and at the expense of those who reside in that State where the same occurs; but that in every case where it shall be judged proper to carry the same to the Supreme Court of the United States, it then becomes a denominational measure, and calls for general co-operation. We therefore advise the appointment of State Committees having this matter in charge, and for correspondence with the Central Committee appointed by the Conference for that purpose.

Geo. B. Utter was appointed Corresponding Secretary of the Conference; and brethren N. V. Hull and Walter B. Gillett were appointed to act with him as a Corresponding Committee in any matter relating to the Conference.

The Conference adjourned on first day, Sept. 13, at 12 o'clock, to meet again with the first Seventh-day Baptist Church in Hopkinton, R. I., on the fourth day of the week before the second Sabbath in September, 1849.

Jews in Bohemia.—The Emperor of Austria has just issued two ordinances in favor of the Israelites of Bohemia. The first of these ordinances prescribes that from the first of January, 1847, tthe tax of he Jews shall be decreased a seventh every year, so that at the end of seven years, this odious tax, which in the method by which it is collected, is vexatious in the highest degree, will be entirely demolished. By the other ordinance the Emperor has created at the University of the Prague, a professorship of languages and rabbinical literature, and Doctor Samuel Isaac Wessely, the first preacher in the Synagogue of Prague, has been nominated to fill it. This last measure has been received with especial enthusiasm by the Israelites, it being the first time that in the Austrian States a Jew has been appointed a Professor of a University, to the functions of which many prerogatives are attached, especially the enjoyment of the rights of nobility.

◆

Christ-ian.—The Christian Palladium, a paper of the Christ-ian denomination, gives the following account of decline in that body:—"That there has been a great loss of churches for the last twenty years, no one acquainted with the history of the connection will deny. Between twenty and thirty years ago, large sections in the State of Maine were dotted over with Christian churches, not one of which now remains. Of about thirty churches, in a direct line from Augusta, Maine, to Fairhaven, Massachusetts, an extent of less than 250 miles, which were in existence twenty years ago, only five now remain. Some of these churches became extinct. Others of them have been carried over to the Free Will Baptists, and other denominations. Whether out of New England the loss has been as great, is left for others to decide."

THE QUESTION OF THE AGE.

The Boston Alliance and Visitor says that the leading question of the age is, "whether we shall return to Rome, or whether we shall still hold on to the doctrines of the Reformation, defend them, and deliver them from every shadow of corruption, so that they shall be as the unadulterated truths of God." This statement of the case takes for granted that there are shadows of corruption resting upon the doctrines of the Reformation—a truth which too many Protestants have been slow to confess. If we mistake not, some doctrines taught by the Reformers will need essential modifications before they will be as the unadulterated truths of God. In respect to the Sabbath, it is well known, that some of the leaders of the Reformation denied its continuing obligation, because of the inconsistency of professing to hold to the fourth commandment, and yet refusing to keep the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath. Those who claim to be descended from the Reformers, however, do not stumble at this inconsistency, but boldly attempt to vindicate it. For pursuing this course, they are not unfrequently rebuked and put to shame by the minions of Rome. Before they will stand upon safe ground, they must bring their practice in this respect to conform to the Word of God. Until they do so, they may expect to hear from Romanists the withering rebuke, "Physician, heal thyself."

CHANGE OF THE SABBATH A CAUSE OF UNBELIEF.

We have in times past given repeated proofs, that the inconclusiveness of the reasoning for a change of the Sabbath encourages unbelievers in their opposition to that institution. Another illustration of the truth of this position has just come before us. It seems that some time ago, Mr. O. S. Fowler, the distinguished Phrenologists, published an article on the subject of "Religion," which many persons understood to contain a distinct denial of all obligation to keep what is popularly termed the Christian Sabbath. More recently, however, he published another article showing the social benefits of a day of rest, as affording a time for men to wash their persons, change their dress, &c. A correspondent of some newspaper hereupon charged him with inconsistency, and with making an "advance backward." The following is a part of his reply to the charge. It shows that the inconsistency of professing to keep the Sabbath and yet refusing to keep the seventh day of the week, furnishes him with a refutation of all the arguments which can be presented by those who observe the first day. Read and be instructed:—

"But I protest that, such alledged difference is more apparent than real. That article was directed mainly against the groundless but general belief, that God commands us to observe the Christian Sabbath; whereas no such command exists, either in the Bible or out of it. Or if it does, quote chapter and verse. The Bible commands the seventh day, and no other; nor gives any countenance to any change to the first day. The only authority ever claimed for the change is, the example of Christ and his apostles; whereas it requires that same express divine edict to revoke or alter the day which established it. Yet no such edict exists; so that the example of Christ, though it might, perhaps, justify the institution of a new Sabbath, leaves not the shadow of ground for changing the old. To argue that God commands the observation of the first day, is to trifle with the intellects of those addressed. Nor can the Christian Sabbath be sustained by Bible authority, but is left to our phrenological argument for intellectual proof. And that article on 'Religion' was penned to refute the idea so pertinaciously insisted on, that the Bible absolutely demands our observance of the Christian Sabbath, which is so flimsy an argument as to be ridiculous. It was not then our purpose to discuss the whole subject of a Sabbath as such, but this was our object in these articles. And a rigid comparison of the two will show that scarcely a point adduced in 'Religion' is contradicted here—only an enlargement of views.

"A little personal history will show that my present sabbatical views are an actual advance forward, not backward, on those in 'Religion.' My father—an eminently religious man—though pleased with most of my religious doctrines, has always opposed that article on the Sabbath. In a recent visit to me we had many arguments—he for the Christian Sabbath, I maintaining the views there expressed. He would argue the obligation of all mankind to keep a Sabbath—formerly the Jewish Sabbath, in commemoration of the creation, but now the Christian. I would reply, that geology showed conclusively the intervention of ages between the commencement of the earth's formation and the creation of man, which he knew too much of geology to deny; yet rebutted by arguing that Christ changed the Sabbath. I required 'chapter and verse,' which of course he could not produce, because no express declaration requiring such change occurs in the New Testament; I meanwhile arguing, that the mere example of the Apostles was of no account—that nothing but an express command would warrant our keeping any but the seventh day. Obliged thus to fall back on the seventh day, which neither he nor I pretended to keep, he could only reply that we should keep some day, it matters little which, so that we keep one day in seven right. To this I would reply, that the Bible required not any day but the seventh day; and 'nothing else.'"

BUSH ON SWEDENBORGIANISM.

Prof. Bush has recently published, in a number of the "Swedenborg Library," a statement of his reasons for embracing the doctrines of Emanuel Swedenborg. It contains a very distinct account of the principal points of difference between his doctrines and those of the Christian Church generally in regard to the Trinity, the Atonement, Justification, the Nature of the Soul, the State of the Earth, Heaven and Hell, &c., together with a view of his philosophy of creation and the connection between the natural and the spiritual world. Much as we differ from the Professor in the conclusions at which he has arrived, we can but respect him for adherence to his convictions of truth. He is evidently under the control of upright motives and deep religious feeling. For many years past he has been devoted almost exclusively to the writing of books in defence and elucidation of the commonly-received doctrines of Christianity, upon the profits from the sale of which he has been dependent for a livelihood. By embracing the views of Swedenborg, he of course condemns his past labors to a certain extent. Besides this, he connects himself with a very small sect, in which there are no high places to tempt his ambition—that people having already nearly as many authors as readers, and as many speakers as congregations. It must require a good deal of moral courage, and strong convictions of duty, for a man, with such prospects before him, to throw in his lot with those who are generally regarded as little better than visionaries or madmen. The following is the concluding paragraph of Prof. Bush's Statement:—

"On the whole, I venture to entertain a hope, that the verdict pronounced upon the foregoing recital will not be, that I have exchanged the substance for the shadow of truth. In receding from the ground formerly occupied in respect to the tenets of my religious faith, I have been governed by evidence which has been to my own mind ample and imperative. The result has cost me a struggle which it is not easy for another to appreciate, unless he has been made the subject of a similar experience. The firmness which is requisite to enable one to act out fully his fidelity to truth, does not annihilate the susceptibilities of the heart to the revolted sympathy of friends, to the withdrawal of confidence, to inunendos of a mind unhinged, to harsh imputations, and to pity misplaced. Yet in the midst of all I am sustained by the consciousness, that in every step I have taken the actuating motive and the consequent course have been such as, if rightly appreciated, to entitle me to the continued respect of every lover of truth. It is impossible for a fair and generous mind to look with unfeeling eye on the struggles of an honest spirit pressing to the attainment of divine knowledge, and making a willing sacrifice of friendship, reputation, gain—every thing that flesh holds dear—in proof of the sincerity and sanctity of its promptings. For every expression of kindly sentiment evinced by liberal minds, I am bound to be, and am, truly grateful. But I need it not for the sustaining of my own spirit in the sphere of faith into which it has come. My confidence has a higher patronage. The attainment of sublimer views of truth, witnessed to consciousness by their own intrinsic light, cannot well fail to be accompanied by a peace flowing down from its eternal fountain, and richly compensating all inferior losses and regrets. To the consolation arising from this source I would be devoutly thankful to the Divine Goodness for being able to say that I am not a stranger."

Commencement at Brown University.—The seventy-seventh commencement of Brown University was celebrated on Tuesday, 8th inst. Thirty-two young gentlemen took the degree of "Bchaelor of Arts." On the day before, the celebration of the "Philermenian" and "United Brothers" societies was fully attended, and the exercises were highly satisfactory. The Providence Journal says:—"The oration was by Mr. E. P. Whipple, and no oration has been received in this city with more favor by the audience. The subject was 'the selection of authors to their age, to the public, to booksellers, and to domestic and social life.' The conception of the oration was appropriate, and the execution was worthy of the subject. It secured the undivided attention of a large audience, and this is a rare merit." No poem was recited, and the Journal thinks it a matter of congratulation that such was the fact.

◆

Andover Theological Seminary.—The commencement took place on Wednesday. The graduating class this year is small, there being only 22. The present number of students in the Seminary is 66. The whole number of students who have been educated in the Seminary, since its foundation, is 887. Number that have deceased, 129. Whole number now living, 748. Number who have been, or who are, Foreign Missionaries, 83. Number connected with Theological Seminaries and Colleges, as Presidents or Professors, 44.

New Definition of Religion.—The editor of the Boston Yankee gives the following new definition of religion: "Injuring your neighbor for keeping his shop open on Sunday." That man must be in a bad way, and we bespeak for him the immediate attention of some of the Divinity Doctors, particularly the Doctor who devotes his attention exclusively to such cases.

General Intelligence.

IMPORTANT FROM THE ARMY.

Dispatches from Washington, dated Monday night, Sept. 14, state that the steamship McKim, Capt. Page, arrived on the 5th inst. at New Orleans, from Brazos Santiago, which place she left on the 2d inst. She brought several sick volunteers and some discharged soldiers. Col. Hayes, with his Rangers, had been heard from. They had scoured the country and returned to Camargo, without doing any thing of note. Most of the army remained at Camargo.

A great riot among a company of Irish Volunteers, and some others, took place on the 31st, at an encampment opposite Burita. Guns were fired, and 15 or 20 men are reported to have been killed or wounded. Besides the killed and wounded seen or shown, 8 or 10 are said to have been pushed from a steamboat (lying by the shore) overboard, and were drowned. The Colonel of the Georgia regiment attempted with swords and pistols in hand, to quell the riot. He shot down one man, and wounded several others.

Col. Baker, of the 4th regiment Illinois Volunteers, repaired to the scene, and ordered two of his companies, A and C, to assist in quelling the fight, and went in person with 20 chosen men to the steamboat. He commanded peace as soon as he got on board, but was attacked by the rioters and had a desperate conflict, in which he defended himself bravely for some time against swords, bayonets and shot, but was finally shot in the neck, the ball entered behind, passing out through his cheek or mouth.

Of the twenty men who accompanied Colonel Baker, eight were wounded, six with bayonets and two with balls. On the arrival of companies A and G, Capt. Roberts of the former ordered his men to charge on board, and led them to the steps, where he received a severe wound from a bayonet, which entered near the shoulder-blade and passed through his back. The boat was so well defended by the rioters, that the Illinoisians had to retreat, not having cartridges with them. Ammunition was soon furnished them, however, and on again approaching the boat, every thing was quiet.

Forty miles above Reynosa on the 21st of August, the steamboat Enterprise burst her boiler, and blew up; five persons were killed instantly and several wounded.

TERRIBLE STEAMBOAT DISASTER AND LOSS OF LIFE.—At 5 o'clock on Thursday evening last, as the Steamboat Excelsior, Captain Nelson, which plies between this City and Coxsakie, was leaving the dock foot of Cortland-st. her boiler exploded with a terrific concussion, killing and scalding several of her passengers and crew. The boat immediately took fire from the effects of the explosion, drifting at the will of the elements, and for a moment it was feared that those on board her, who had escaped the original calamity, would be engulfed in the flames. She drifted down the stream as far as Cortland-st. when the steamboat Columbus took her passengers off and towed her up nearly to the wharf from which she had started, when the steamboat Fairfield going up the river, went between the Excelsior and Columbus. The stern of the Fairfield was brought in contact with the burning vessel, and those on board the F. cutting the tow-line, the wreck was adrift again. As the wreck drifted down stream great fears were entertained that she would run foul of some one of several ships which lay at anchor in the stream. This was prevented, however, by her coming in contact with a small sloop, setting her bows on fire, and then veering round and setting fire to her whole broadside. After a hard fight the blazing wreck was beaten off and pursued her course down the river. She had not proceeded far, however, before she was overtaken by the steamer John Fitch, which grappled with the fiery fugitive and conveyed her over to the Jersey shore. The boat was burned entirely to the water's edge, and the skeleton of the boat, half seen through clouds of smoke and flame as she swept down the stream, was grand and sublime. The shore was lined with dense masses of people and the river was crowded with boats. The boat was new and put on the route in June last, but was not of the first class. She was engaged principally in cheap passenger business between New York, Catskill and Coxsakie, was owned by Hunt Nelson & Sons, of the latter place. She was valued at $35,000, and was but partially insured. The whole number of passengers on board probably did not exceed forty. The boat, at the time of the explosion, had just left the wharf, and the passengers, as is usual when the boats pass up the river, moved over to the starboard or City side. The boiler which burst was on the larboard side. The explosion shook the large steamers Hendrick Hudson and Empire, lying at the Cortland-st. piers. The timbers were thrown high up into the air, and the body of at least one person was seen falling with the timbers. The boiler was not seen after the explosion. The part of it not broken to pieces went immediately to the bottom. The sufferers were carried to the Hospital and taken care of. The number of lives lost is unknown.

The cause of the explosion is as yet unascertained. There are various rumors about it, but we cannot state any thing as positive. The 1st Engineer says that there was only about eighteen inches of steam on just before the explosion. There must be a searching enquiry instituted as to the causes of this sad catastrophe. and let the public know whether or not it is the result of carelessness.

The Coroner, Dr. Rawson, and his excellent deputy, Wm. Cockefair, are very busily engaged in obtaining testimony in relation to the cause of the explosion of the steamboat Excelsior, in order to lay the whole matter before the Grand Jury—when the matter will be investigated according to law.

SYNOD OF GENESEE.—This body, composed of 150 ministers, and nearly the same number of churches, has under consideration a project for establishing a College in Western New York, and the citizens of Alexander have offered to give $18,000 to have it located in their village. The Synod at its last meeting adopted resolutions against secret societies, declaring them to be wrong in principle, and urging the members of the church to keep aloof from them; also, a resolution approving the course of the General Assembly (U. S.) on Slavery.

HONOR TO GERRIT SMITH!—A Utica correspondent of the Herald, Sept. 5th, says:—

"I have just seen a copy of a deed of some forty acres of land in Hamilton County, New York, given by the celebrated landholder, Gerrit Smith, Esq., to a colored man residing in that county. He has made out two thousand deeds of a similar character to the one I saw, conveying lands, from forty to fifty acres to each, as gifts to industrious colored men in this State, and designs, I am informed, to make out one thousand more. The considerations in the deeds are as follows: 'For and in consideration of the sum of one dollar to me in hand paid, and being desirous to have all share in the subsistence and happiness which a bountiful God has provided for all, has granted, sold, &c.'

"What the value of these lands may be per acre, and whether sufficient to make all these two or three thousand men voters or not, I am unable to state. That it will make some of them such, there can be no doubt.

"You are aware, that, during the past season, Mr. Smith has been selling off large portions of his vast landed property at auction. The present movement reduces his 800,000 and upwards of acres considerably, an object which he has long desired to accomplish."

NEW METHOD OF PROPELLING VESSELS.—The N. Y. Tribune says, We had an opportunity a few days since of seeing a model of a new propeller invented by S. R. Parkhurst of this City, with whom Mr. Jas. M. Hale is associated. The propelling power consists of a series of partially encased upright submerged wheels, constructed to run each in a separate closely-fitting casement. The wheels are 30 to 36 inches in diameter and 8 to 12 feet in length vertically, according to draft of water, each wheel containing nine flutes 9 inches wide, only two flutes on each taking effect on the water at the same time, this effect being direct with no loss of power for back water, lifting, &c. A sufficient number of wheels can be placed on a vessel to overcome the resistance of the water and force her to move with the same speed as the wheels. It is calculated that 30 miles per hour can be obtained. It is proposed that vessels with this propeller should not be encumbered with masts and rigging, but carry spars to be used in an emergency. Much less expensive engines will be needed than with the old paddle-wheels, and it is proposed to use three or four small horizontal engines rather than one large one. We are not sufficiently adept in mechanics to give an opinion of the feasibility of this method of propulsion, but it has been examined by the most distinguished engineers and naval architects of both England and the United States, and without one exception they have declared that they can see no reason why, when practically tested, this propeller should not give the results expected by the inventor. We understand that an experimental vessel is now being built in England, when the value of this discovery will be settled.

THAT LONG, LOW, BLACK-LOOKING SCHOONER.—About two years ago a suspicious looking craft lay off our coast some weeks. No one was permitted to board her. After her departure several colored persons were found to be missing, and no tidings have ever reached us of their whereabouts. That same schooner, or one very much like it, has of late been seen lying off Rockaway Beach. Only last week, three colored women, and two colored men, had, it is said, absconded. But their well known habits, and their attachment to Jamaica, the place of their birth, forbids the belief in such a report. They have been forcibly abducted—yes, stolen by southern dealers in human flesh, and ere this have been sold like cattle in the southern market. In the vicinity of the colored camp meeting, last week, two suspicious men were seen, armed with pistols and bowie knives, who pretended to be officers from the city. No doubt they were hired ruffians, under pay from the Captain of the Slave Schooner. We have among us, too, men who are suspected of aiding in this nefarious business. The darkness of night is the favorite time for these dark-visaged fiends in human form to track the footsteps of our industrious and respectable colored population, seize and secretly convey them on board this suspicious vessel. Can any one explain the agonizing screams heard in the vicinity of Rockaway about 3 o'clock on Sunday morning last?

We urge all of our industrious, respectable colored people, for their own safety, to keep within doors after sunset. What a horrible state of things! [Jamaica (L. I.) Farmer.

TELEGRAPH TO CANADA.—It affords us great satisfaction, says the Montreal Herald, to learn that there is a great probability of the "lightning lines"—the electric telegraph—being extended from the great cities of the United States to Montreal and Quebec. A gentleman is now in town, and has submitted proposals to the Board of Trade for making an immediate commencement with this most important public work. We believe that the principle upon which he wishes to construct it, is, that a certain bonus should be paid him, amounting to about half the cost, by the citizens of Montreal. This sum would be, according to his calculation, from £3,000 to £5,000. The line will connect the cities throughout this vast continent in such a manner, that the news may be conveyed instantaneously between the most remote of them.

THE CALIFORNIA REGIMENT.—This Regiment which has been encamped on Governor's Island for some weeks past is now about to sail. Three Companies embarked on board a vessel on Wednesday. The remaining Companies in the course of a week. There are about eight hundred men, including officers. They carry with them 800 percussion muskets, 800 flint muskets, 200 rifles, and 6 pieces of light artillery, with all the necessary equipments.

The Stores are extensive and various, including not only all that is necessary for a military expedition but also such as would be required for a military colony, such as machinery for saw and grist mills, machine shops, mechanic's tools, &c. &c.

Among the soldiers are quite a number of skilful mechanics, and among the officers are eight or nine graduates of West Point, and the Lieut. Col. and Major have held important stations at that place as military instructors.

Of the graduates of Harvard University in 1776, there is only one survivor, the venerable James Lovell, of Orangeburgh, S. C., aged 89.

ATTEMPT TO MURDER.—The Lancaster (Mass.) Courant of the 11th says:—Our citizens were thrown into the greatest consternation this morning, by the fact that an attempt had been made to rob and murder the Cashier of the Lancaster Bank, Mr. C. Symmes. It appears from the testimony of Mrs. Symmes, that about two o'clock she was awakened by her husband, who spoke to her, when by a light which the burglar had brought into the room, they both perceived a man, with his back toward them, at work at the bureau. The villain immediately turned and caught Mr. S. by the throat, telling him to give him that hundred dollars. [Deacon Parker of Southboro,' had paid Mr. Symmes this money the previous evening, and in the presence of the assassin.] A violent scuffle ensued between them, which lasted some ten minutes, during which time the burglar made an attempt to kill Mr. S. with a razor, by cutting his throat. He succeeded in inflicting a very severe wound in the right side of the throat, about three inches long, striking the windpipe, barely escaping the jugular vein and carotid artery. Mrs. S. also received a cut upon the throat, about two inches long, as well as several others of slight nature about her arms and person, from which there is no danger of loss of life. Mr. S. is very much exhausted, but will probably recover. Mr. S. succeeded in getting one or more of the villain's fingers into his mouth, which he bit with such force as to loosen all his front teeth. This is the only clue to his detection, as yet.

The scoundrel is well known to both Mr. and Mrs. S., but neither of them will now tell his name, as they both took a solemn oath not to say who it was, if he would spare their lives. We trust they will yet be led to a sense of their obligation to society—to the well-being and security of the world—and not thus stand as a shield between the criminal and that punishment he so richly merits.

The Boston Atlas states that the name of the assassin is Otto Sutor, a young German, who formerly resided in Lancaster. He is 21 years old, about 5 feet 6 inches high, stout built, florid complexion, sunburnt, light-colored hair and eyes. He wore, at the time, a light-colored plaid frock coat, dark pants, and a cap. A reward of $500 has been offered for his arrest, by the President and Directors of the Bank. [Sutor has been arrested, and is in jail.]

SUMMARY.

The Albany Evening Journal says, we are informed that peaches were sold in New York, on Saturday, at 8 cents a basket. In July, 1843, we saw peaches sold in London at ten shillings a piece. We dare not ask any body to believe this statement—and yet it is made upon the evidence which our eyes and ears furnished.

The State of Louisiana contemplates presenting a sword to Gen. Taylor, and have given the order for it to Ames & Co. of Cabottville, Mass. It is designed to engrave on the sword a representation of the battles of the 8th and 9th of May, taken from the frontispiece of the Rio Grande Quick March published by Firth, Hall and Pond.

The Picayune of the 2d inst. says, that of the 735 patients admitted to the Charity Hospital during the month of August, 116 were sick volunteers! We would like to know what they volunteered for—the Army or the Hospital?

A shocking accident occurred in one of the carpet factories at Thompsonville, Ct., on the 3d inst. A girl named Hamilton, aged 18 years, while aiding in the operation of a carpet loom, was caught in the neck by a part of the harness, the sharp points of which cut and tore open her throat so much that she soon bled to death.

Every farmer and others keeping horses or cows, should have a straw-cutter. We are now, and ever have been, of the opinion, that from a fourth to half the food usually consumed by our animals in winter, might be saved by chopping. Corn butts, straw, and refuse hay, if cut, moistened with hot water, and sprinkled over with a handful of meal and a little salt, answers the purpose of the best hay, and is much cheaper.

In 1783 a terrible earthquake destroyed numerous towns and villages in Calabria, and more than 100,000 of the inhabitants. The same year, the Skaptar Jokul, one of the volcanic monntains of the island of Iceland broke forth in terrible convulsions. Mount Hecla, one of the mountains of Iceland, was, at the last accounts, in a state of great activity, discharging a volume of flame extending to the height of 14,000 feet into the atmosphere.

The alarm in regard to the extensive prevalence of the potato disease, seems to be subsiding. The Maine Farmer says:—As yet we have heard but little complaint in our neighborhood in regard to the potato rot. Occasionally a hill or two may be seen affected, but it is nothing very alarming. It came on last year, in this section, before this date. It may come on yet, but we feel encouraged that it will not to so great an extent as last season.

In Ohio, the Cincinnati Gazette says, the rot has made its appearance in some of our potato fields. The crop is abundant this season, and we hope this disease may not be found very extensive.

The number of bushels of wheat raised the last year was 106,548,000, which is equal to 21,309,600 barrels of flour, or a barrel of flour to each man, woman and child, in the United States.

In consequence of the drought and heat in Canada, the mill streams have become dry, and farmers who have plenty of wheat on hand are compelled to buy flour for their families, subsistence.

The Milton Chronicle says the corn crop in North Carolina promises to be the largest within the memory of our oldest men. We never beheld such promising prospects.

By actual enumeration lately made, the Cambridge College Library consists of 51,000 volumes, exclusive of eight or ten thousand pamphlets. The department of American history is supposed to be the largest in the world, being 5,000 volumes. The eldest work on American history known to exist is a letter from Columbus, translated from Italian into Latin, and published in 1494.

The potato rot has done, and is doing much injury in the region of Wilkesbarre, Pa. An intelligent farmer states, that discovering his crop affected last year, he left his potatoes in the hills as late as it would do—then dug them and spread them on the floor. After drying a few days he removed them to the cellar, where they kept well. He suggests this as the best way to manage with potatoes this year.

The Corner Stone of a new Episcopal Church in Norwich, Ct., was laid last week, Bishop Lee of Delaware (a native of Norwich,) officiating in the devotional exercises. The Address was made by Rev. F. A letter from Ex-Gov. Seward has been addressed to Gov. Wright, setting forth his belief "that Freeman is absolutely and hopelessly insane," and on that ground commending him to the mercy of the Executive. Gov. Wright replies, after a full examination of his case, he has come to the conclusion, "that there is nothing in the evidence to warrant him in overruling the verdicts which have been given against him." The law will therefore doubtless take its course.

A Southern paper says, that in Tallahassee the crops are suffering from the caterpillar. The cotton crop of the prairie region of Alabama is in a bad state, from the great rains. In Louisiana, where the prospects were bright, within a few days the army worm has commenced its ravages. In the neighborhod of Red River, it is thought scarcely a leaf of cotton will escape the worm. At Baton Rouge the fields present a gloomy appearance, from the same cause. The planters of Bayou Sara have no prospect beyond a half crop. At Marion, although the cotton gave fine promise, the worm is cheating their hopes. Such also, we hear, is the state of things below Natchez, to twenty-five miles above Vicksburg, a distance of 140 miles.

At the Circuit, Court at Ithaca, the cause of Mary Conrad against Josiah B. Williams, for breach of promise occupied the entire week. This cause has been tried twice before. In 1843, a verdict for plaintiff of $8,000 was rendered, subsequently set aside by the Supreme Court, and a new trial ordered. The cause was tried a second time in 1844, in which the jury disagreed. The jury on this occasion rendered a verdict of no cause of action.

DIED,

In Westerly, R. I., on the 24th of August, of bowel complaint, LUCY CATHARINE, only daughter of Welcome and Harriet M. Stillman, aged 1 year 10 months and 13 days.

We gazed upon her lovely brow, white as the first pure snow,
And felt that o'er her couch of rest no bitter tear should flow—
That not one heart should wish to lure her young freed spirit back
From that bright world, the spirit land, to life's ensnaring track.

Though sad the parting, well we know our child is happy now,
And every trace of pain and grief has fled her cherub brow;
Sure she has left our fond embrace, yet she is there at rest,
Folded within the Saviour's arms, upon his loving breast.

A little harp of purest gold, by angel hands is given,
And its melodious strains are heard throughout the courts of heaven;
List! we can almost hear the sounds of our sweet infant's lyre,
As her soft hand, with gentlest touch, sweeps o'er each quivering wire.

God gave—God taketh—let thy will, thy holy will be done,
Be this our prayer, above the dust of our departed one;
Oh! stay our aching hearts on Him who knoweth all our woe,
And he will bear our spitits up—our tears will cease to flow.

BE ACTIVE.

Be active—be active—
Find something to do,
In digging a clam-bank,
Or tapping a shoe.
Don't stop at the corners,
To drag out the day—
Be active—be active—
And work while you may.

'Tis foolish to falter,
Or lag in the street—
Or walk as if chain-shot
Were bound to your feet—
Be active—be active—
And do what you can;
'Tis industry only
That maketh the man.

'Tis industry makes you—
Remember—be wise—
From sloth and from stupor
Awake and arise.
You'll live and be happy,
And never complain
Of the blues or the dumps,
Or a dull, heavy brain.

A TRUE STORY.

In the evening of the day Alice arrived at S——, a great experience meeting was to be held in one of the churches. Her friend, who had become enthusiastic in the cause, urged her to go to this meeting, which Alice did, although with a feeling of reluctance. The house was crowded above and below. The preliminaries usually appertaining to such meetings having been arranged, a brief opening address was made by one of the ministers. A reformed man then related his experience with great effect. After he had finished there was a pause of nearly a minute. At length a man, who had been seated far back, with his face partly turned from the audience, rose slowly and moved to the front of the stage.

A half-suppressed exclamation escaped Alice, as her eyes caught the well-known features of of him who had been her husband, while a quick thrill ran through her. Then her frame trembled in accord with her fluttering heart. The face of Mr. Delancy had greatly changed since she had last looked upon it. Its calm, dignified elevation had been restored, but with what difference! What before was cheerful, was sad, very sad. "Mr. President," he began, in a broken voice, "although I had consented to your urgent solicitation, to address this large assembly to-night, yet I have felt so strong a reluctance to doing so, that it has been with the utmost difficulty I could drag myself forward. But I had passed my word, I could not violate it. As to relating my experience, that I do not think I can venture upon. The past I dare not recall. Would to heaven that just ten years of my life were blotted out."

The speaker paused a moment, already much affected. Then resuming in a firmer voice, he said:—

"But something must be said of my own case, or I shall fail to make that impression on your minds that I wish to produce.

"Pictures of real life touch the heart with power, while abstract presentations of truth glitter coldly in the intellectual regions of the mind, and then fade from the perception like figures in a diorama.

"Your speaker once stood among the first members of the bar in a neighboring State—nay, more than that—he represented his county for three years in the Assembly of the Commonwealth. And more than that still—occupied a seat in Congress for two Congressional periods.

At this announcement the stillness of death pervaded the crowded assembly.

"Yet more than all that," he continued, his voice sinking into a low, thrilling tone, "he once had a tenderly-loved wife and two sweet children. But all these honors—all these blessings have departed from him," he continued, his voice growing louder and deeper in his efforts to control himself. "He was unworthy to retain them! His constituents threw him off because he had debased himself and disgraced them. And worse than all—she who had loved him devotedly—she who had borne him two babes, was forced to abandon him and seek an asylum in her father's house. And why? Could I have become so changed in a few short years? What power was there to abuse me that my fellow beings spurned, and even the wife of my bosom turned away heart-stricken from me? Alas! my friends, it was a mad indulgence in mockery! A very demon—a Circe, changing the human into a bestial. But for this, I were now an honorable and useful representative in Congress, pursuing after my country's good, and blest in the house circle with wife and children. But I have not told you all. After my wife separated from me, I sank rapidly.

"A state of perfect sobriety brought too many terrible thoughts; I therefore drank more freely, and was rarely, if ever, from under the bewildering effect of partial intoxication. I remained in the same village for some years, but never once saw her during that time—nor a glimpse of my children. At last I became so abandoned in my life, that my wife, urged on by her friends, no doubt, filed an application for a divorce, and as cause could easily be shown why it should be granted, a separation was legally declared. To complete my disgrace, at the next Congressional canvass, I was left off the ticket as unfit to represent the district. I left the county and State where I had lived from my boyhood up.

"Three years have elapsed since then. For two years of the period I abandoned myself to to the fearful impulse of the habit I had acquired. Then I heard of this new movement—the great temperance cause. At first I sneered, then wondered, listened at last, and finally threw myself upon the great wave that was sweeping onward, in the hope of being carried by it far out of the reach of danger, and I did not hope with a vain hope. It did for me all and more than I could have deemed. It set me once more upon my feet—once more made a man of me. A year of sobriety, earnest devotion to my profession, and fervent prayer to Him who alone gives strength in every good resolution, has restored to me much that I had lost—but not all—not the richest treasure that I proved myself unworthy to retain—not my wife and children. Ah! between myself and these the law has laid its stern impassable interdiction. I have no longer a wife, no longer children, though my heart goes out towards these dearly beloved ones with the tenderest yearings. Pictures of our early days of wedded love are ever lingering in my imagination. I dream of the sweet fireside circle; I see ever before me the once placid face of my Alice, as her eyes looked into my own with intelligent confidence. I feel her arms twine about my neck—the music of her voice is ever sounding in my ear."

Here the speaker's emotions overcame him. His utterance became choked, and he stood silent, with bowed head and trembling limbs. The dense mass of people were hushed into an oppressive stillness, that was broken here and there by half-stifled sobs. At this moment there was a movement in the crowd. A single female figure, before whom every one appeared instinctively to give way, was seen passing up the aisle. This was not observed by Delancy until she had come nearly in front of the platform on which he stood. Then the movement caught his ear, and lifting his eyes they instantly fell on Alice—for it was she that was pressing onward—he bent forward towards her with sudden uplifted hands and eager eyes, and stood like a statue until she had gained the stand and advanced quietly to his side. For a moment the two stood thus, the whole audience, thrilled with the scene, were upon their feet, and bending forward. Then Delancy opened his arms, and Alice threw herself upon his bosom with a quick, wild gesture.

Thus for the space of a minute they stood—every one fully, by singular intuition, understanding the scene. One of the ministers then came forward and gently separated them.

"No, no," said Delancy, "you must not, you cannot take her away from me."

"Heaven forbid that I should do that," replied the minister. "By your own confession, she is not your wife."

"No she is not," returned Delancy, mournfully.

"But she is ready to renew her vows again," Alice said, smiling through her tears that now rained over her face.

Before that large assembly, all standing, and with few dry drops, was said in a broken voice, the marriage ceremony that gave Delancy and Alice to each other. As the minister, an aged man, with thin white locks, finished the rite, he laid his hands upon the heads of the two he had joined in holy bonds, and lifting up his aged eyes, that streamed with drops of gladness, he said, in a solemn voice:—

"What God hath joined together, let not RUM put assunder."

"Amen!" was cried by the whole assembly, as with a single voice.

THE ALPACA.

A work has recently been published in England, upon the Alpaca, or South American sheep, which sets forth the value of this animal in a very striking light. The Springfield Republican has collected several facts from this work, from which we derive the following. The author says, that the Alpaca is found amongst the mountains of Peru, usually along the middle declivities of the Andes, at an elevation of from 8,000 to 12,000 feet above the level of the sea. This appears to be its peculiar range; but it has been seen on the hot deserts near Northern Chili, where the climate is excessively dry, on the borders of perpetual snow, and on rocky and bare mountains; showing that they are adapted to great varieties of climate.

They were first imported into Europe in 1808, by Napoleon Bonaparte, at the suggestion of the Empress Josephine; and from that period have been raised in France, England, and the low lands of Spain. Frequent importations have been made into England and Scotland within the last thirty years; but as yet it is not known that there has been any extensive formation of flocks. The wool, which is remarkable for its length, softness, and pliability, is converted into fabrics of the finest texture. Its length is nearly double that of the ordinary sheep, and in some instances grows to the length of twenty inches, possessing uniform strength, without deteriorating into coarseness. The fleeces range from ten to twelve pounds, and in England they have gone as high as seventeen pounds, where it seems to be ascertained that there is an improvement both in weight and quality. The weight of the Alpaca is about 180 pounds. The quality of the meat is highly spoken of, and is compared, for flavor, to American venison. The sheep itself is said, for habitual cleanliness, to surpass every other quadruped, and the meat is represented as not being greasy, but juicy and easily digested.

The hardiness of the Alpaca is very remarkable; no animal is less affected by changes of climate and food; and no one is more easily domiciliated. It is freer from constitutional diseases than ordinary sheep; and less subject to those arising from exposure to rain; from its peculiarly cleanly habits and its not transpiring much, the fleece does not require washing before it is taken from the back. Nor is this sheep subject to catarrhs, so common ordinarily amongst sheep, nor to disorders disabling the limbs; and it has greater power of extricating itself from accidents, and of relieving itself from the deepest snows. The highlands of Scotland and the mountainous tracts of Ireland are regarded as peculiarly adapted to the Alpaca.

The business of importing Alpaca wool into England for manufacturing purposes commenced in 1834, with an importation of 5700 lbs; in 1835, there were imported 184,400 lbs. at $18 the quintal (100 lbs.); in 1838, 459,300 lbs. at $25; in 1840, 1,650,000 lbs., and about the same in 1843.

The work above alluded to says, that no doubt exists as to the entire feasibility of naturalizing and very much improving the Alpaca in Great Britain. If this is so, not the least doubt can exist as to its complete success in the United States. The hills of Vermont and New Hampshire, and in fact all the high lands of New England must be congenial to the habits of this animal. The Alleganies and the uncultivated mountains in Virginia, where land is held at a price nearly nominal, and where tens of thousands of acres may be had for almost nothing, might be turned to good account by the introduction of the Alpaca. It prefers the coarse grass, ferns and brakes of the mountains, to the finer feed of cultivated fields. We are glad to learn from a gentleman who has taken a lively interest in the matter, that several small companies have been formed for the purpose of introducing these animals into the United States. The investment cannot be heavy, and we entertain but little doubt that it will eventually prove to be a profitable enterprise.

AVARICE OUTWITTED.

The case of John Eyre, Esq., who, though worth upwards of £30,000, was convicted at the Bailey, and sentenced to transportation, for stealing eleven quires of common paper, was rendered more memorable by the opportunity it gave Junius to impeach the integrity of Lord Mansfield, who is supposed to have erred in admitting him to bail. An anecdote related of Mr. Eyre, shows in a striking manner the depravity of the human heart, and may help to account for the meanness of the crime of which he stood convicted. An uncle of his, a gentleman of considerable property, made his will in favor of a clergyman who was an intimate friend, and committed it, unknown to the rest of his family, to the custody of the divine. However, not long before his death, he made another will, in which he left the clergyman only £500, leaving the bulk of his large fortnne to his nephew, Mr. Eyre.

Soon after the old gentleman's death, Mr. Eyre, rumaging over his papers, found his last will, and perceiving the legacy of £500 in it for the clergyman, without any hesitation or scruple of conscience, he put it in the fire, and took possession of the whole effects in consequence of his uncle's being supposed to have died intestate. The clergyman coming to town soon after, inquired into the circumstance of his old friend's death, and asked if he had made any will before he died. On being answered by Mr. Eyre in the negative, the clergyman very coolly put his hand in his pocket and pulled out the former will, which had been committed to his care, in which the old gentleman had bequeathed him the whole of his fortune, amounting to several thousand pounds, excepting a legacy of £500 to Mr. Eyre.

THE ECCENTRIC LORENZO DOW.

In 1807, at a camp-meeting held at Niskeuna, between Troy and Schenectady, I first became acquainted with the eccentric Lorenzo Dow, who was at that time, I think, in possession of a truly Christian spirit, though extremely odd and and exceptionable in his manners. He seemed to possess the ability or art to transform himself into almost any and every human character. He could become ludicrous in the extreme—could satirize, or speak ironically to admiration, and yet I have heard him deliver some of the most solemn discourses to which I ever listened. At this camp-meeting, he had given offence to some of the multitude, by his cutting remarks, and a number had associated together without the camp, and formed a company of from fifty to one hundred, and chosen a leader or captain, and having armed themselves with clubs, were preparing to march into the camp-ground, and take Dow by force, and carry him off and punish him at their leisure, for the insult which he had offered them.

Dow got information of their movements, before they were ready to enter the camp, and determined to go out and meet them. Several friends strove to dissuade him from this, but he had made up his mind, and taking Peggy, his wife, by the arm, he immediately started for the road, which was some fifty rods distant. I immediately followed, to see what would be the result. On coming to the highway, where were hundreds, perhaps thousands of people, he asked leave of the owner of a huckster's establishment to stand in the door of his shanty, and address the people. But the occupant objected, saying that should he do it, his building would be torn down at once, and his goods destroyed. He then made application to one or two others who had similar establishments, but being refused by all, he went to a stump where a large oak tree had lately been fallen, and there taking his stand, commenced addressing the multitude, who immediately gathered around him. Presently, the hostile band were seen approaching and pressing through the crowd, preceded by their leader, a large and lion-like looking man, whose mouth, like that of many who followed him, was full of cursing and bitterness. They pressed on until the leader stood directly facing Dow, at the foot of the stump.

He there paused for a moment or two while the speaker looked him full in the face and continued his discourse. Some one of the band from the rear, called out with an oath, "Why don't you knock him down?" "Pull him down, knock him down!" But the speaker continued, and the leader stood silent and almost motionless, when some who were in the rear attempted to press through to the stump, being impatient at the delay of their leader. But on their coming up, and making an attempt to pull Dow from the stump, the leader called out, "Let him alone until he has finished his speech!" But many voices replied, with awful oaths, that they would have him down at once. Their captain then raising his club, cried ont in a threatening voice, "Let him alone until he has finished his discourse," and added, "I will knock down the first man that attempts to disturb him until he has finished his speech." This brought them to a full stand; for I suppose they knew the man whom they had chosen as their leader, and did not think it safe to provoke his wrath against themselves.

Dow went on with a solemn address for the space of thirty minutes or more, and when he had closed, this captain or leader offered him his hand to assist him down from the stump, and asked him in a very civil manner, where he wished to go. Dow informed him that his design was to return to the camp-ground. The other replied, "here are men that will injure you if they can, but if you will accept my services I will not leave you until I see you safe among your friends." Dow thanked him, and he then called out, "who of you will unite with me to see this man safe among his friends on the camp-ground?" Some twenty voices responded, "I will." Dow then took his wife by the arm, and these volunteers formed around them, and in that order they marched to the ground, the leader having notified all, that if any one offered any violence, it would be at his peril.

An ingenious device in machines for ruling paper, has recently been patented at Washington, by which the ruling may be stopped at any desired distance from the edge of the paper, the edge of the paper itself performing the part of a cam, and operating to raise the pens from the paper at any desired point. The thickness of a sheet of paper is a very slight thing to depend upon for operating machinery, but there is no doubt of the successful operation of the invention, as the model furnished the office, though imperfect, demonstrated the fact

VARIETY.

It is related that a lady in Hungary, who was annually accustomed to visit Pesth on the Fete de Dieu, bringing with her an only daughter, a lovely child of seven or eight years, missed her in the crowd, and after a fruitless search was compelled to return without her. Another year had elapsed when, on another visit to the place she discovered the child blind and in rags, bitterly crying and holding out a wooden bowl for alms. It appeared that she was in charge of an old woman, or hag, who sat behind her, and who had decoyed the child from her mother and put out her eyes for the purpose of employing her the more successfully at begging. The old woman was arrested, but the broken-hearted mother was inconsolable.

One of the large shipping houses in Boston was applied to a short time since, when lading a ship to China, to take out as freight a quantity of ardent spirits.—"No, sir," said they to the applicant, "we don't carry that article to China." "But we are willing to pay large freight!" "No, sir, we do not carry rum to poison the heathen." The gentleman retired, posed at this unexpected temperance lecture.

Everybody, perhaps, is not acquainted with the etymology of the word humbug. It is a corruption of Hamburg, and originated in the following manner:—During a period when war prevailed un the continent, so many false reports and lying bulletins were fabricated at Hamburg, that, at length, when any one would signify his disbelief of a statement, he would say, "you had that from Hamburg," and thus, "that is Hamburg," or "Humbug," became a common expression of incredulity.

Different nations have different kinds of loafers. The Italian loafer spends his time in sleeping; the Turkish loafer in dreaming; the Spanish in praying; the French in laughing; the Enlish in swearing; the Russian in gambling; the Hungarian in smoking; the German in drinking; and the American in talking politics.

Two learned physicians, and a plain, honest countryman, happening to meet at an inn, sat down to dinner together. A dispute presently arose between the two doctors, on the nature of aliment, which proceeded to such a height, and was carried on with so much fury that it spoiled their meal, and they parted extremely indisposed. The countryman, in the mean time, who understood not the cause, though he heard the quarrel, fell heartily to his meat, gave God thanks, digested it well, returned in the strength of it to his honest labor, and at evening received his wages. Is there not sometimes as much difference, between the polemical and practical Christian?

The Voice of Jacob, an Anglo-Jewish periodical, announces a loss which the cause of Hebrew literature has sustained, at Hamburg, in the sudden death of Heyman Joseph Michael, a celebrated collector of works relating thereto. Dr. Isler, of that city, says the paper in question, "afraid lest his magnificent library should be lost to Germany, even as that of the celebrated Oppenheim (now in Oxford) was lost, has issued an appeal to his Jewish townsmen, calling upon them to preserve this treasure to their city."

Bishop Doane is the head of the new College at Burlington in the state of New Jersey. In a letter to the Editor of the "Banner of the Cross," he says, "From the first moment the Burlington College had a corporate existence, I determined, that by the help of God, tobacco, in all its forms and uses, should be excluded from its precincts, so long as my connection with it lasts."

The eye has five tunics to guard it against danger. The first is like a spider's web; the second is like a net; the third is like a berry; the fourth is like a horn; the fifth is the cover or lid of the eye. Here is guard upon guard, resembling the various ways Providence hath to secure us from harm.

If there is a man who may eat his bread in peace with God and man, it is that man who has brought the bread out of the earth by his own honest labor. It is cankered by no fraud, it is wet by no tear, it is stained by no blood.

Cows will show their pleasure at seeing those who have been kind to them, by moving their ears gently, and putting out their wet noses. My old horse rests his head on the gate with great complacency when he sees me coming, expecting to receive an apple or a piece of bread. I should even be sorry to see my poultry and pigs get out of my way with any symptoms of fear.

An almost instant cure for bloody flux, disentery, cholera-morbus, and all ailments of that class, will be found by taking a large spoonful of common table salt, and two tea-spoonfuls of vinegar. Put into a half pint of hot water and drink as warm as possible. Although unpleasant to drink, you will find relief as soon as the nauseousness of the draught has passed.

A bookseller of Dusseldorf, Germany, is publishing a book which contains a particular account of eighteen veritable and genuine "seamless coats," all affirmed, on the authority of the church, to be the coat of Christ, and by all of which undoubted miracles have been wrought!

Mirabeau said, "that to succeed in the world, it is necessary to submit to be taught many things which you understand, by persons who know nothing about them."

When Cromwell made his public entry into London, his companion remarked to him the concourse of people who came from all parts to see him—"There would be just as many," said he, "if I were going to the scaffold."

Oh, how many have been wheeled to hell in the chariot of earthly pleasures, while others have been whipped to heaven by the rod of affliction.

Afflictions come not by casuality, but by counsel.

Afflictions are God's workmen on our hearts to pull down the pride and carnal security of them; and being so, their nature is changed; they are turned into blessings and benefits.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.
Board of Instruction.
W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant andeconomical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institntion, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

DE RUYTER INSTITUTE.

TEACHERS' Classses will be formed at the opening of the fall term, September 16, to continue seven weeks, which will be exercised in practical teaching under the immediate supervision of the Principals, with a thorough review of the common-school studies. Lectures on the theory of teaching, and other important subjects, will form a part of the daily exercises. The Principals will be assisted by Hon. Edward Cooper and the County Superintendents of Madison and Cortland Counties. All the improvements and important suggestions of the day in the art of teaching, will be brought before the class for their consideration.

From the Providence Journal of September 7.

RESPONSE OF THE SEVENTH-DAY BAPTISTS TO THE ADDRESS OF THE R. I. SABBATH UNION.

To the address lately published over the signatures of a committee, recently appointed by the "Rhode Island Sabbath Union," in which they ask the "co-operation of the pastors, church members, magistrates, and people generally, in promoting a better observance of the Sabbath throughout the State," we respond as follows, in behalf of several Seventh-day Baptist Churches situated in the towns of Westerly and Hopkinton, by which we have been appointed for that purpose.

The expressed object of the address is verily a great and a good one; and we heartily concur with the committee, in the importance which they avow to be involved in their subject.

Besides this, we accept as wholesome counsel, the advice apparently intended for us, contained in the eleventh paragraph of the address. We acknowledge, as those persuaded of the claim of the seventh day not only to be observed as a Sabbath, but to be the Sabbath, that we ought to maintain such observance, in strict accordance with the Bible exposition of its sanctity; and wherein we may have failed to do so, we wish to confess our sin against man and a just and a kind God; and in future, so strive to obey his holy law in this respect. We approve as sound, logical, and scriptural, what is presented in the addres upon "The Claims" of the Sabbath, except the following quotation, where, in reference to our Lord's words, "The Sabbath was made for man," they say, "He says not—the Jewish Sabbath—or the Christian Sabbath—but the Sabbath, the common, the universal one, which belongs to mankind."

To these terms, Jewish and Christian, as here introduced to qualify the word Sabbath, we object, for they are not found in the Bible; and as here used, these expressions substantially deny that the Savior meant the Sabbath of the seventh day in the passage in question, but affirm that he meant some other Sabbath, which was and is emphatically "the Sabbath, the common, the universal one, which belongs to mankind." Now, we affirm, that Christ did mean that the rest, or the Sabbath of the seventh day, was made for man, and we deny that he meant any thing else. We say, in support of our position, that it was an alledged violation of the seventh day weekly rest, or Sabbath observed by the Jews, (by the committee called the Jewish Sabbath,) which the Savior was repelling, when he uttered the words under consideration, and therefore, as that Sabbath and no other was embraced in their accusation, of necessity, his reply was predicated of that and nothing else. But the committee have in substance affirmed and proved that the Saviour's words were not true, unless the Sabbath spoken of by Him was made and given to the first man; and in order to prove the truth of what the Saviour said, they have proved that this very same Sabbath was made and given to Adam, as soon as he was created; but they have not shown that Adam ever had any other Sabbath made for him.

But still, if they feel prepared to enter on the proof that Christ meant some other Sabbath than the seventh day, we will consider what they have to offer when they see fit to present it. Again, in the eleventh paragraph of their address, the committee assume that the Christian world generally, has regarded the first day to be the true Sabbath for eighteen centuries. We think the committee were mistaken on that point. They did not distinguish properly between the fact that the day has been regarded in some way, and the assumption of its having been regarded as the true Sabbath, all the while. We are aware that the first day has been extensively regarded for many years in the church, but have never been able to find that the church, or any portion of it, regarded it as the true Sabbath, or as the Sabbath at all, until since the Reformation. But if the committee can prove their assumption, we hope they will do so, though we do not accept as conclusive the edicts of the church, and much less do we regard its practices as constituting a test by which we can learn what we ought to practice. In connection with the foregoing assumption, the committee add, that "it cannot be expected that they (meaning the church,) will change it back, (meaning the day they keep,) till they are clearly shown to be in the wrong." We reply, that is as it should be; and if the church will change it back when they are clearly shown to be in the wrong, it is all we ask of them; providing they will allow a fair opportunity for their wrong to be shown them. But, it cannot be expected that the church, as a body, can be shown to be in the wrong, even supposing it to be so, while, as the case almost universally is, their Pulpits, their Presses, and even their so-called Sabbath Conventions, are fast closed against all attempts to do so. And more than this, what confidence can we have that the church will change its course on this subject, even when their wrong shall be clearly shown, since there are multitudes of its members, who having had the claims of the seventh day presented to them, confess that they are in the wrong? This confession they make, and still, on account of the difficulties which prevailing customs of society present, they continue to excuse themselves from conforming their practice to what they regard as a scripture requirement, and give their example and support in favor of keeping the first day, for the temporal, social, or religious advantages which they say they expect from that course. As touching the call upon the magistrates, presented in the Address, that they should "maintain the honor of those civil enactments which," as the committee say, "were wisely intended for the protection of God's Holy day," observe, we do not believe that there was any wisdom in the intention of the case, nor that there would have been, even if the first day had been God's holy day, or even had the same enactments been intended to favor the seventh, which we maintain is God's holy day; for it partakes of the nature of force or coercion in respect to a religious duty, which we regard as not only not being wise, but as being actually unwise, and an infringement upon both the rights of God and man in the same act. It is the province of Magistrates and Legislators to secure to all the entire amount of liberty to worship God, or perform the duties of religion, which can be procured, or exercised without sacrificing the rights of one, in partiality to another, for of course no profession of conscientiousness in religion can claim any respect from civil authorities to indulge which would sacrifice the natural or equal rights of citizens. But it is not the just province of civil authorities to enforce the religious duties even which God has enjoined, and much less is it to be borne, that they should enforce in His name what he has not required, or forbid what he allows; which they do when they require the first day to be kept, as by the command of God, free from labor, and inflict pains and penalties on men for refusing to comply with their enactments. There is a general feature of the Address, (and one which marks almost all that is said or written to promote the observance of the first day,) against which we feel bound to protest solemnly and without disguise. We refer to that feature in which is seen that continued and free use of all parts of the fourth commandment,—together with repeated references to the original institution of the Sabbath in Paradise,—and an unrestrained appeal to the law of God, just as if those scriptures did not absolutely enforce and command the keeping of the seventh day holy, in express distinction from all other days, and even with the unblushing pretence that they enforce and command the keeping of the first day. This we solemnly believe to be a most flagrant perversion of the plain and express word of God; that such a course provokes to infidelity, and that unless it is desisted from, it must result in the consummation of that very atheistic state of things which it is professedly employed to prevent.

We know it is asserted by some, that God, in resting on, blessing and sanctifying the seventh day, commanding the Sabbath day to be kept holy, and declaring the seventh day to be the Sabbath, for reasons which are connected with no other day, and prohibiting work to be done on that day, has simply ordained that a day of rest shall be observed after six days' labor, or that one seventh part of time is thus required for rest and worship. We know, too, that on this pretext, a claim is set up for the first day, as if for the above reason we might select for ourselves. But, we maintain that God has done nothing of this kind—that he has never fixed "the order in which the world should go," as the committee say, six days labor, one day rest, over and over forever, only as in blessing the seventh day, sanctifying it, and commanding it to be kept, he has incidentally, (that is aside from the main design,) embraced that proportion of time, yet has no where intimated that that was his object; and to assume that it was the design of God to specify the proportion of time which should be had for rest, and which for labor, is, we think, not only charging God foolishly, but even with foolishness; for it attributes to him the stupidity of making the seventh day the declared object of his commands, when he intended all the while not to embrace any particular day or time, but on the contrary a particular proportion of time indifferently to be selected by individuals according to their pleasure. But after all this, which is clearly embraced in their address, for the committee, with the confessed design of enforcing the first, in preference to any and every other day, as by divine authority, to speak of the everlasting claims of God's law—to call on "the occupants of the pulpit" to "speak forth without fear or favor the thunders of God's dishonored law," and "finally" to profess, with an air of sanctity, "humbly to call on God, to crown with the continual dew of his blessing, every well-directed effort to honor his own institutions," as if Sunday was the Sabbath; to do this in the face of an enlightened community—to do this to restrain the wicked—this is one of those amazing inconsistencies, which overwhelm us as often as exhibited. The reasoning of the address, and views expressed in it generally, other than what we have objected to, we consider sound and correct; and should be happy if our Bibles and our consciences would allow us to co-operate in the plans proposed in the address, but such is not the case. We dare not call the first day the Sabbath, or seek to promote its observance in such respect, either as citizens or Christians; but on the contrary, we should deem it to be our duty to persuade to the keeping of the seventh day instead thereof, and to use our influence with magistrates and legislators rather to seek the repeal of those enactments intended for the protection of the first day as the Sabbath, than to enforce them.

And now we ask the committee and members of the so-called "Rhode Island Sabbath Union" to reflect whether it is not their duty in the fear of God to cease their efforts for the observance of the first day; and especially we ask them to reflect upon the spectacle which they present of Protestants invoking civil authorities to enforce compliance with their religious tenets, in which, if they should succeed, as they seem to wish, hundreds of the citizens of this State would be forced from the pursuit of their honest and inoffensive callings, when and where they are firmly persuaded that REASON, RELIGION, and GOD, not only justify, but require them to persevere.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN.

[The following beautiful hymn was written by Dr. Bowring, for the Annual Meeting of the London Domestic Mission Society, in April last.]

There is a tale by Jesus told;
It charmed the listeners round of old—
A tale of that benignant man,
Who, when the crowd passed heedless by,
Supplied what kindness could supply—
The good Samaritan.

Robbed, naked, wounded, by the way,
The suffering, sinking traveler lay;
Swift to his aid his helper ran,
Bound up his wounds with tender care,
Food, raiment, home provided there—
The good Samaritan.

And still that tale of pathos fills
The awakened heart; still touches, thrills,
With sympathy's own talisman,
The springs of generous thought to move,
And bids us imitate and love
That good Samaritan.

A wider field is ours; not one
Stripped, wounded, destitute, alone;
But man in crowds neglected, man
In congregated wo, doth call,
That each should be to each—to all,
A good Samaritan.

SUFFERINGS OF THE JEWS.

An able writer in the Portland Christian Mirror, is publishing a series of numbers on the sufferings, condition, and conversion of the Jews. We subjoin his third number, which will be read with interest.

The Turks, throughout Syria, may compel the Jews to work without pay, and administer the bastinado if they refuse. The lowest fellah [native inhabitant] will stop a Jew whom he meets traveling, and demand money as a Mussulman's right, or compel him to dismount and give up the animal that carries him. All over the East, the Jews are obliged to affect poverty, in order to conceal their wealth; what is exposed to view, is never safe from Mussulman rapacity. At Damascus, in February, 1840, a Capuchin friar, named Father Thomas, having suddenly disappeared, the seven wealthiest Jews in the city, with the three chief rabbins, and some others of the nation, were tortured almost to death, with the bastinado, and other cruel inflictions, to compel them to confess themselves guilty of his death; of which, it afterwards appeared, they were wholly innocent.

Even in Germany, though the governments are favorable to them, the Jews have within a few years suffered greatly from popular violence. In the great trading cities, especially Hamburg, Lubec, Bremen, and Frankfort, there is much jealousy of them. At Prague and other places, there have been violent outbreaks of popular fury against them. In Russia, the Jews are subjected to severe oppression. The government is employing its colossal strength to crush out their national spirit, and amalgamate them with the mass of its subjects. The present Emperor, Nicholas, on his accession to the throne [1825,] banished them from St. Petersburg and Moscow, and by an imperial ukase three years ago, commanded all the Russian Polish Jews to remove 50 versts—about 33 miles—from the frontier, within a limited time; under which order, it is said, 500,000 Jews were compelled to leave their homes.

These are but specimens of the sufferings to which the Jews have been subjected. Every where during these 1800 years, they have been exposed to countless vexations, to inconceivable indignities, to unparalleled miseries. How strangely, how mournfully, have they fallen from their former state of glory and privilege!

I have gone into this recital, that my readers might be moved to pity and compassion for the poor, degraded, oppressed, suffering Jews; and might be led to inquire, whether they ought not to pray for their recovery, and stretch out their hands for their relief? There are multitudes in our own land, who have fled from the oppressions of the old world; they are fit objects for our Christian benevolence. Let us not, like the Priest and Levite, 'pass by on the other side.'

THE FREEDOM OF THE CHURCH OF CHRIST.

Of all the analogical reasoning from the ancient dispensation to the new, that which respects the rights of kings and priests has been the most mischievous, and is the most fallacious. Constantine paved the way for all that has been assumed by civil potentates since his time. The dark ages concentrated all power, civil and ecclesiastical, in the Roman pontiff. Luther, that morning star of the Reformation, dissolved the spell of false doctrine, which laid to sleep the spiritual energies of all the churches. The political relations of the church, however, he never touched. He left her with as many popes as there were kings and petty princes in Germany, or elsewhere. Zuingli and Calvin and Knox understood this matter much better, but were able only partially to effect what they wished. Another Luther is needed in Europe, not merely to free the church from the spirit of rites and ceremonies, and penances and pilgrimages, and self-righteousness and formality, but to free it from all that domination which has no right to control it. Am I reproached with being republican in these views, and with proclaiming my own particular politics rather than the New Testament? My answer is, that I belong to a commonwealth, where "all are kings and priests;" to one also, "where there is neither Jew nor Greek, bond nor free, Barbarian nor Scythian," but where "all are one in Christ Jesus." I belong to a republic, one of whose fundamental laws is, that I "should call no man Master on earth." We are not forbidden to do this in a civil sense; such is the Saviour's meaning. It is in a religious sense, that we are to acknowledge no supreme head of the church, except him who redeemed it.

It is true, I am a republican even in matters of civil government. But I am no bigot to this or to any other particular form of civil government. All governments cannot be alike in all respects, so long as nations differ so much from each other in cultivation, habits and manners. I believe, too, that in general the best government is that which is best administered. I speak disparagingly of no monarchist, provided he is not a sycophant to those in power. But I do not envy him his opinions, and cannot gratulate him on the ground of his political relations.

But to my immediate object. All claims on the Old Testament for the support of civil domination over the spiritual kingdom of Christ, are futile. How can the king of one country, be king over the Christian church, since this church belongs to all countries? The claim is groundless; it is utterly without any good support. God speed, then, to the noble advocates of "the glorious liberty of the children of God," wherever they are or may be! God speed to the noble movement in the Scottish Church, to the new race of Zuinglis and of Knoxes! No movement since the days of Luther has promised so much to the liberty of the churches in Europe, as this. In fact, it is an effort at Reformation such as Luther never made. He left this great point untouched. Ten thousand thousand voices on this side of the Atlantic, in accents which I would hope will reach even across the mighty deep, bid the advocates of church freedom in Scotland, God speed! The experiment is, as our political fathers judged theirs to be when they met to declare and defend their liberties, worthy of pledging "their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor." May those engaged in making it succeed as well as our ancestors! The time has come to avow their principles, in the face of heaven and earth. The time, as I would hope in God, has come, in which they may successfully defend them. If my feeble voice could reach across the Atlantic, I would say: All hail! ye noble soldiers of the cross! Fight manfully the battles of the Lord. Stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made you free! [Stuart.

ONLY A TRIFLE.

"That's right," said I to my friend Simpkins, the baker, as the sickly-looking widow of Harry Watkins went out of his shop door, with a loaf of bread, which he had given her; "that's right, Simpkins, I am glad you are helping the poor creature, for she has had a hard time of it since Harry died, and her own health failed her."

"Hard enough, sir, hard enough, and I am glad to help her, though what I give her don't cost much—only a trifle, sir."

"How often does she come?"

"Only three times a week; I told her to come oftener, if she needed to, but she says three loaves is plenty for her and her little one, with what she gets by sewing."

"And have you any other such customers, Simpkins?"

"Only two or three, sir."

"Only two or three! why, it must be quite a tax upon your profits."

"Oh, no, not so much as you suppose; altogether it amounts to only a trifle."

I could not but smile as my friend repeated these words, but after I left him, I fell to thinking how much good he is doing with "only a trifle." He supplies three or four families with the bread they eat from day to day; and though the actual cost for a year shows but a small sum in dollars and cents, the benefit conferred is by no means a small one. A sixpence to a man who has plenty to "eat and drink, and wherewithal to be clothed," is nothing, but is something to one on the verge of starvation. And we know not how much good we are doing when we give "only a trifle" to a good object.

A DYING MOTHER'S LOVE.

The plague broke out in a little Italian village. In one house the children were taken first; the parents watched over them, but only caught the disease they could not cure. The whole family died. On the opposite side of the way lived the family of a poor laborer, who was absent the whole week; only coming on Saturday nights to bring his scanty earnings. His wife felt herself attacked by the fever in the night; in the morning she was much worse, and before night the plague spot showed itself. She thought of the terrible fate of her neighbors. She knew she must die, but as she looked upon her dear little boys, she resolved not to communicate death to them. She therefore locked the children into the room, and snatched her bedclothes, lest they should keep the contagion behind her, and left the house. She even denied herself the sad pleasure of a last embrace.

O think of the heroism that enabled her to conquer her feelings, and leave her home and all she loved, to die! Her eldest child saw her from the window. "Good by, mother," said he, with his tenderest tone, for he wondered why his mother left him so strangely. "Good by, mother," repeated the youngest child, stretching his little hand out of the window. The mother pauses; her heart was drawn towards her children, and she was on the point of returning back; she struggled hard, while the tears rolled down her cheeks at the sight of her helpless babes. At length she turned from them. The children continued to cry, "Good by, mother." The sounds sent a thrill of anguish to her heart; but she pressed on to the house of those who were to bury her. In two days she died, recommending her husband and children to their care with her last breath.

O that mothers were as careful not to impart the worst contagion of sin to their children!

◆

The day of Judgment will be more awful to us than the descent of God on Mount Sinai was to the Israelites. The next time the trumpet of the Lord sounds, every one of us will be obliged to go up to Judgment.

Let parents be careful to serve God, for they know not what evil they may bring upon their children by refusing God's mercy. How happy must those parents be who love God, for their children are gainers by it.

ATTACHMENT TO EARTHLY TEMPLES.

The groves were God's first temples. Ere man learned
To hew the shaft, and lay the architrave,
And spread the roof above them,—ere he framed
The lofty vault, to gather and roll back
The sound of anthems,—in the darkling wood,
Amidst the cool and silence, he knelt down
And offered to the Mightiest, solemn thanks
And supplication. [Bryant.

The temples in which we worship deserve our attachment and respect; but we may overrate them. We do this whenever we forget that their institutions and services are not to be regarded for their own sake—they are not ends, but means—they are not religion, but the instrumentalities of religion, and these temples, therefore are not in all respects essential to religion even here. We read of no temple in the world before the flood, though we do read that men began to call on the name of the Lord in the family of Seth. Adam and Eve had no temple in paradise, and Milton beautifully represents them as always performing their morning and evening devotions in the open air. Isaac went out into the field at evening tide to meditate. And all through the book of Genesis, though you constantly read of offerings, you never read of the temple. The broad heaven was their temple, consecrated by their offerings. The tabernacle indeed was a temple, but it was for the ark, and not for the people; they worshiped in the outward court with no covering over them. But you say Solomon built him a house; but God said it was more than he expected or wished, and that he never said any thing of the kind from the beginning to any of his servants. And this temple too, after a time, was profaned and consumed. And during seventy years, while the Jews were in Babylon, they had no temple or synagogue, though there were many men peculiarly pious, as we see in the case of Daniel, and Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, and Ezra, and Nehemiah, and Joshua, and Zerubbabel, and others. The first Christians, towards the close of the third century, had no temple, properly so called, but they worshiped wherever they could obtain accommodation; they never attached holiness to walls, and to mortar, and to timber. The Arian emperor established Arianism, and the godly said to them, "You have the temples, but we have the truth." If we come down to our forefathers—O how we revere their memories! O ye men of God, we continue to repair to your tombs, and where the letters begin to be erased, we inscribe them afresh, and say, "of whom the world was not worthy"—when they were banished, not only from their homes, but from their temples, how was it with them? They assembled in corners, private rooms, and in woods—unconsecrated? No; they were consecrated by their presence, or rather by the presence of their Lord and Saviour, who had said, "Where two or three are gathered together, there am I in the midst of them." Yes, and you make too much of temples now when you think of confining God to them. "The Most High dwelleth not in the temples made with hands," saith the prophet, "heaven is my throne, and earth is my footstool; what house will ye build me," saith the Lord, "or what is the place of my rest?" Set not undue value, therefore, npon mere earthly temples, but prize them only as a means by which you may be profited, and instructed in the Lord.

HONESTY.

A certain poor widow, one winter's day, had just consumed her little stock of wood, without knowing where she could obtain any more. She put her children to bed soon after, and sat shivering over a few dying embers, in full view of a large wood pile belonging to her rich, hard-hearted neighbor. The thought darted into her mind, "Had I but one handful of that wood to keep me from freezing, how glad I should be; he has enough, and would never miss it." After many struggles, she concluded to go, after her neighbor had gone to bed, and get one handful, that she might be able to get herself some breakfast. She went and picked up the wood, but the thought of stealing so overwhelmed her, that forgetting where she was, she spoke aloud—"Have I come to this? Must I steal? O, I cannot. But if I don't I must freeze." She threw down the wood and walked away. Again the horrors of winter drove her back, and again she picked up the wood, and again she threw it down, saying, "I can't steal, and if I perish I will perish." She went home and went to bed. The rich man stood at his door and heard all that the poor woman had said, and it softened his heart. Early next morning he sent her eight loads of wood, ready cut, and other articles, telling her that she was welcome—adding, "You fairly beat the devil out of me last night."

TOUCHING INCIDENT.

It was but yesterday that a friend, a young gentleman of fine intellect, of a noble heart, and one well known to many of our readers, was suddenly snatched by the hand of death from all the endearments of life. Surrounded by every thing that could make existence pleasant and happy, a wife that idolized him, children that loved him as they only can love, and friends devoted to him, the summons came, and he lay upon the bed of death. But a few short years ago, she to whom he was wedded, placed a bridal ring upon his finger, upon the inside of which he had a few words privately engraven. The husband would never permit the giver to read them, telling her that the day would come when her wish should be gratified, and she would know the secret. Several years glided away, and a day or two since, when conscious that he must soon leave his wife forever, he called her to his bed-side, and with his dying accents, told her that the hour had at length come when she should see the words upon the ring she had given him. The young mother took it from his cold finger, and, though heart-stricken with grief, eagerly read the words—"I have loved thee on earth—I will meet the in Heaven."

THE OUTCRY AGAINST POPERY.

A great deal is said at the present day about the danger to our religious and political institutions from the zeal of the Roman Catholic Church to extend its borders. We are sometimes told that the papal power is plotting the subversion of our liberties, and that the Pope of Rome has his secret emissaries scattered throughout the country, to watch all the movements of our government, and to exert an influence in favor of establishing here his civil and religious supremacy. In view of these considerations, the pulpit and the press teem with popular appeals, urging the people to strengthen the defences of Protestantism, and guard against the insidious wiles of Romanism. The consequences of this course might be easily imagined, if they were not already plainly seen. A wall of partition is raised between Protestants and Catholics; the latter are shut out from the sympathies of the former, and a spirit of hatred and contempt is engendered towards them, which paralizes all efforts for their improvement, and occasionally leads to most fatal and unjustifiable outbreaks.

Now, we must confess ourselves unable to sympathize with all which is said upon this subject. We no not doubt that the Catholics are very zealous, and have contributed large sums of money to disseminate their religion. But is that a good reason for denouncing and traducing them? If it is, then might we with equal reason condemn the course of Protestants, since they are now engaged in efforts to disseminate their views, with a zeal which scarcely has a parallel in the history of the church. In Protestants, this is considered a great virtue; and it is difficult for us to see how that which is a virtue in one class of persons, becomes in another a crime deserving of condemnation and persecution. Again, we do not doubt that the Pope of Rome would be delighted to possess some temporal authority over this country; it would be very natural. But what reason there is to suppose he will ever possess that authority, it is impossible for us to conceive. The history ot the church in past ages shows clearly, that just in proportion as light and intelligence have increased, the papal authority has declined, until nearly every government in Europe has now ceased to respect it. It is much easier to retain authority which has long been acknowledged, than to obtain such authority where it has always been denied. If Romanism cannot retain a foothold in Europe, where the civil and religious institutions are most favorable to its existence, why should we fear that transplanting it to a new and free soil will at once impart to it vigor and influence? For our part, we cannot believe such will be the result. We see much more reason in the conclusion of an eminent clergyman in England, who, in contrasting Protestantism with Romanism, says: "If the Protestant religion could have originally worked its way in this country against numbers, prejudice, bigotry and interest; if in times of its infancy, the power of the prince could not prevail against it; surely, when confirmed by age and rooted in the affections of the people, when invested with authority and in full enjoyment of wealth and power, any attack upon it must be contemptible, any alarm of danger must be imaginary."

Many persons seem to suppose, that the spirit of religious persecution has always been co-extensive with the prevalence of Catholicism, and that nearly every case of persecution may be traced to that source. No doubt the Romish Church will have sins enough of this kind to answer for. But it is a mistake to suppose that such sins are confined to that church. The history of our own country disproves such a supposition. The Puritans who landed upon Plymouth rock professed to found their government upon the broad principle of civil and religious equality. So did the Catholic colonists of Maryland. And yet it is a notorious fact, that when our Puritan ancestors were prompted by the spirit of intolerance to persecute unpopular sects, even unto death, the Catholic colony of Maryland furnished an asylum in which many a Protestant found rest from his pious pursuers. If we look impartially into the histories of the old world, we shall find similar facts. They tell us, it is true, of innumerable instances in which Protestants were persecuted and put to death by Catholics. But they tell us also of instances in which Catholics received the same treatment at the hands of Protestants. If a balance-sheet were to be struck, we doubt not it would show greatly to the disadvantage of the Catholics. Nevertheless, we cannot agree with those who make this an occasion for crying out indiscriminately against all Catholics, and representing them as almost the exclusive persecutors for religion's sake.

—As has already been hinted, we have no great fears for the result of a crusade against Protestantism by the papal church. On the contrary, we believe that the influence of such a movement would be salutary upon both parties. But there is a species of popery developing itself among those who are loudest in their denunciations of Catholics, from which we do fear. We refer to that disposition to domineer over and dictate to others, which characterizes the leading "orthodox" denominations of this country—the denominations most noted for their professions of hostility to all prelatical pretensions. This disposition manifests itself in a great variety of ways, but in none more repulsive or oppressive than in the attempt to force upon the public the popular day of religious rest. The day which owed its first notoriety to the edicts of a Christian Emperor, and which was all through the dark ages a favorite of papal church, is now taken under the protecting wing of the dominant sects, and by them its reception is made a sort of test of orthodoxy. Of such a measure, by whomsoever advocated, we have our fears. It contains all that is evil in Popery, without the frankness to confess it. Wherever it prevails, the spirit of Popery will live, though its name may be repudiated.

THE PROSECUTIONS IN PENNSYLVANIA.

The following letter respecting the prosecution of the German Seventh-day Baptists in Pennsylvania, was written by the Attorney in the case to Dr. Wm. M. Fahnestock. It shows that the course of our persecuted brethren has been marked by moderation deserving of great praise. Whether as much can be said of the course of that portion of the Christian community who remonstrated against the Legislature's granting them relief, we leave the reader to decide.

Chambersburg, Sept. 9th, 1846.

Sir—At the request of my Seventh-day Baptist friends at Snowhill, in this county, I write to you, for the purpose of giving you some account of the proceedings against them since the prosecution of certain evil persons for disturbing their religious meetings. This prosecution, as I presume you are aware, occurred in August, 1845. Immediately after the conviction of the rioters, suits were instituted against a number of the Baptists, under our statute for working on Sunday. They were all convicted, and all paid the fine, four dollars, except John Monn, Jr., who, by certiorari, removed the proceedings of the Justice of the Peace to the Court of Common Pleas, where the conviction, on account of informality, was reversed. The others would have shared a similar fate, had certioraris been issued. This was in the fall of 1845. The Baptists then ceased working on Sunday, and applied to the State Legislature for relief, with what success your are doubtless aware.

Having failed in their application to the Legislature, they again commenced working this summer, and in the month of June last fourteen were returned to a Justice, who acquitted six and fined eight. In the eight cases, certioraris were issued, and at the August Term of our Court, the convictions were reversed on account of errors which the Justice had committed. This so much incensed the prosecutors and their counsel, that suits were again immediately instituted against the hands of John Monn, Jr., Esq., and four of them fined. In these cases certioraris have have been issued, and will be decided about the first of November, and I am fearful the decision will be against them. Should this be the case, then I presume they will have to cease working on Sunday, unless the Legislature will grant them relief, of which I confess I do not feel sanguine.

These prosecutions against the Baptists have in every instance been instituted by some of the rioters, or by some persons friendly to or connected with them. They boldly acknowledge that it is not because they care about the sanctification of a Sabbath, that they commenced proceedings, but because they wish to revenge themselves. Indeed, in every case that has occurred, the prosecutors themselves violated the first day of the week by riding about the country spying out the Baptists who were at work. In June last, they were intoxicated, and were running horses. Now, you will doubtless conclude, that the conduct of these individuals would meet with the disapprobation of a religious and moral community. To a certain extent this is so, yet there are those who profess to be the followers of the meek and humble Redeemer, who countenance those evil persons in their persecutions. I confess I am wholly at a loss to account for the opposition to the Baptists, by some persons among us, unless I ascribe it to sectarianism and religious bigotry. But it is certain that some individuals who seemed to be the most anxious for the conviction of the rioters, are now equally as anxious for the convictions of the Baptists.

I have been a practicing attorney for upwards of twenty years, and have seen and participated in the trial of several interesting and exciting cases, and I think I can safely say, that I never knew one which so deeply interested the community, and particularly the religious part of it, as the case of the indictment of the Snowhill rioters. During its progress, the Court Hall was constantly crowded. The clergy of the town, of all denominations, and professors of religion from different parts of the County, attended for no other purpose than to hear the trial. By several persons apprehensions were expressed to me, that the rioters would be acquitted. I was told by one individual from the immediate neighborhood of Snowhill, that unless they (the rioters) were convicted, it would be impossible for any religious denomination to worship in that neighborhood in peace. Every step in the trial was watched with intense anxiety, and when the jury gave a verdict of guilty, it was received by a large crowd with deep and heartfelt satisfaction. After all this feeling, you may well judge my surprise to find among those very persons the most ardent and bitter opponents of the application of the Baptists to the Legislature for relief. Among them were the getters up of the remonstrances, copies of which have, if I mistake not, been published in the Sabbath Recorder, and they even give countenance to the prosecutions against them. Still I have no doubt that a very large majority of our community are opposed to the prosecutions of the Baptists, and a decided majority in favor of granting them relief; but I am fearful that such is the power and influence of religious prejudice, that their application will not prevail.

Respectfully yours, &c.,

[Signed] J. E. BRADY.

THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.

The conference, preparatory to the organization of an Evangelical Alliance, was held in London during the last month. It was attended by delegates from the Free Church of Scotland, the Wesleyan Methodist connection, Presbyterians of all descriptions, some from the Established Church of England, from France, Italy, Germany, and Russia, while sixty came from America. Among the delegates, those from the Wesleyan Methodist body and the Free Church of Scotland were the most numerous. The deliberations were conducted with closed doors, a proposition for the admission of reporters having been formally discussed and negatived by a large majority. From the official report of the proceedings, we learn that various committees have been appointed to carry on the preliminary business for the formation of the "Alliance."

Into this alliance only those persons are to be admitted who hold what are generally understood to be Evangelical views; but these are not to be regarded in any strict sense as a creed or confession, nor is the "Alliance" to be considered an alliance of denominations, but of individual Christians, each acting on his own responsibility; neither is it contemplated that it should assume the character of a new ecclesiastical organization. Branches are forthwith to be established for: 1. The United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, exclusive of the British colonies. 2. The United States of America. 3. The Kingdom of France. 4. The North of Germany. 5. The South of Germany and German Switzerland; and additional branches are from time to time to be recognized as such by the concurrence of any two previously existing branches. Among these branches official correspondence is to be maintained, and annual reports of their proceedings mutually exchanged. Conferences are to be held every seventh year, or oftener, at the call of two branches, one on each side of the Atlantic.

Resolutions were adopted, recommending that the first Lord's day in each year should be observed by the members and friends of the Alliance throughout the world as a season for concert in prayer on behalf of the objects of the Alliance; that orthodox Christians of all sects should exercise Christian charity towards each other, pledging themselves in their controversies to avoid all rash or groundless insinuations, and to maintain the meekness and gentleness of Christians by speaking the truth only in love.

The conference refused to receive as a member Johannes Czerski, the ex-Roman Catholic priest and ex-colleague of Ronge, on account of doctrinal errors on his part, considered so heterodox as to preclude brotherhood. "Czerski," says the Morning Advertiser, "has been suffered to walk the streets of London without recognition. The Evangelical Alliance had no welcome to offer him. But for the friendly offices of Rev. Mr. Herschell, a converted Jew, who statedly preaches in the Edgeware road, this eminent man would have left our land, and returned to his country, a broken-hearted man."

AMERICAN BOARD OF MISSIONS.

The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions held its thirty-seventh annual meeting in the city of New Haven, commencing on the 8th inst. This has become an immense body, and one of great liberality and efficiency. The whole continent of Asia, and the Islands of the sea, have for years been feeling its influence, and the last year appears to have been one of great prosperity.

The increase of their numbers has been wonderful. Dr. Allen, of Mass., speaking of the first meeting of this Board, twenty-five years ago, said that there were but twelve persons present at that time, eight of whom were now dead, and now the Board consisted of two hundred corporate members, and about five hundred honorary. At this annual meeting towards one thousand clergymen were present, besides several hundred other philanthropists.

From the Treasurer's Report it appears that the receipts of the past year were $262,073, and the expenditures for the same $257,605, showing an excess of receipts of $4,468. Of these receipts $93,436 were from legacies, and $40,000 a bequest of the late Mr. Waldo, of Mass. In addition to this, $4,000 were received from the American Bible Society, and $7,500 from the American Tract Society.

Seven missionaries have been removed by death; thirteen missionaries and assistant missionaries have been released at their own request from their connection with the Board; thirty-seven have been appointed; twenty-six have gone out to different missions; twenty-seven are now under appointment, most of whom are expecting to embark at an early day for the missions in India, China, and South Africa. An unusaal number of young men preparing for the ministry have their minds turned towards missionary work. The increase of this feeling the past year has been remarkable. Large conventions of the friends of missions for conference and prayer, have been held in various places in different States with happy results. An uncommon measure of health has been enjoyed by the laborers abroad—only six out of about three hundred and fifty having been removed by death. No uncommon obstacles have impeded the progress of their work; but on the contrary, increased facilities have been enjoyed for the propagation of gospel truth. In no previous year have the influences of the Holy Spirit been granted to a greater number of missions, nor clearer evidences given of the progress of the work of salvation.

The number of missions under the patronage of the Board is 26, embracing 93 stations, at which are 134 missionaries, 10 of whom are physicians, 5 not ordained, 7 school masters, 7 printers and bookbinders, 14 other male, and 175 female assistant missionaries—in all 342 laborers sent forth from this country—associated with whom, or at out-stations under their care, are 20 native preachers, and 132 other native helpers, (exclusive of the native teachers of the free schools) raising the whole number of laborers to 494. The number of preachers is 3 more, and the number of laborers 5 less, than last year. Number of churches gathered 73; additions more than 1,500; whole number (exclusive of some hundreds of hopeful converts now in Western Asia) 24,824; number of Seminaries for educating native preachers 7, with libraries and apparatus, embracing 487 pupils; 34 boarding schools, in which are 854 male, and 533 female pupils, making a total of 1,874 under constant Christian instruction and influence on their connections and associates; number of free daily schools 602, with 28,171 pupils; total, including those at the Sandwich Islands, 31,045; printing establishments 15; 32 presses, 40 fonts of type for printing 27 languages; five of the missions provided with type and stereotype foundries; whole number of languages in which printing is done, inclusive of English, 37; copies of works printed during the year, including tracts, more than 460,000.

☞ The following communication should have reached us in time for publication last week. The suggestions contained in it, however, are not too late to be of service, and we therefore give it a place this week.

Alfred, Sept. 7th, 1846.

To the Sabbath-keepers of Rhode Island:—

Dear Brethren—I trust that you will not regard the undersigned as acting improperly in making the suggestions contained in this communication. To "discern the signs of the times," and act accordingly, is to hear and obey the voice of wisdom. The committee of the "Rhode Island Sabbath [Sunday] Union," have addressed the people of your State on the subject of Sabbath profanation and Sabbath reform. Now, taking into account the singularly contradictory character of that address—its high authority—its anti-republican spirit, (invoking the civil power to sustain a religious rite)—its anti-protestant feature, (in abandoning the Scriptures and cleaving to the practice of the church)—and in view of the agitated state of the public mind, and the sensation likely to be produced by said address, I suggest that you follow it by another, fully exposing its errors, and showing that it is not of God but of man! Let this be done immediately; let it be done thoroughly, and in the spirit of the Gospel, and I verily believe the blessing of the Lord of the Sabbath will rest upon your labor. Yours in hope of eternal life,

N. V. HULL.

Ordination.—In the haste with which the proceedings of the General Conference were prepared for our last week's paper, we omitted to mention the ordination of Bro. George R. Wheeler to the work of the Gospel ministry. Bro. Wheeler was many years ago licensed to preach, while living in England. Since he came to this country, and united with the Sabbath-keeping church in Shiloh, N. J., he has frequently exercised his gift to the edification and satisfaction of the people. The letter of the Shiloh Church to the Conference, requested his ordination, if deemed expedient. After due examination, and approval, he was solemnly set apart to the ministerial work on first day, September 13th.

Take Notice.—The Secretaries of the General Conference are anxious to secure as exact statistics as possible of all the churches. They therefore request the Secretary of the South-Western Association, or whoever may have in his possession the statistics of that Association for the last year, to forward the same immediately. Will Bro. Wm. F. Randolph see that this request is attended to? Will Bro. James Bailey also forward a copy of the Minutes of the Central Association? Direct in both cases to Solomon Carpenter, Plainfield, N. J.

The Death of a Missionary.—The Rev. David Abeel, late Missionary to China, whose health has been feeble for some time, died on Friday morning, at the Manor Rensselaerwyck, are Albany. His funeral services took place in the North Dutch Church, on the following Sabbath at 5 o'clock. He endured great physical suffering, but was greatly sustained by the presence of his Saviour, for whose cause he had done a great deal, and whose rewards he has gone to share.

Attempt to kill Dr. King.—A recent letter from Greece, received at the rooms of the American Board, states that Dr. King, having been condemned by the Holy Synod, was sent to Syra, there to be tried by the criminal court, July 22. As the vessel in which he was conveyed reached the wharf at Syra, a crowd on shore had assembled to seize him, and he would have been put to death had he been landed. Those having him in charge returned to Athens, where he placed his house in a position of defence against popular violence. The British Ambassador waited upon him with an offer of special protection.

Man's Ruin and Recovery; or, Paradise Lost and Restored In Four Parts. By John Eyre, author of the Christian Spectator, Two Years in Ohio, Travels in America, &c.

Such is the title of a little work before us which has reached its third edition. It contains much valuable religious matter, presented in a very plain and easy manner. Published by Piercy & Reed, No. 9 Spruce-street, and for sale by the principal booksellers.

The Youth's Cabinet for October, bears marks of industry on the part of both editor and publisher. It deserves a liberal support. D. A. Woodworth, 135 Nassau-street.

State Temperance Convention.—A New York State Temperance Convention was held in the village of Auburn, on the 15th and 16th insts., during the week of the State Agricultural Fair. Over two hundred delegates reported themselves. The Business Committee presented a series of resolutions for the consideration of the Convention, upon which an interesting and animated discussion arose. The following is the last of the series, and marks out work for every temperance man in the State to do:—

Resolved, That the people of this State are earnestly entreated to petition the next Legislature unitedly for the following things, and that the State Central Committee be requested to prepare the memorial:

1. To preserve the present Excise Law in its main features, as it now is.
2. To repeal that section which excludes the City and County of New York from its wholesome provisions.
3. To do what is necessary to inhibit the sale of liquors without a license in canal boats and other vessels in any of the navigable waters under the jurisdiction of the State.
4. To amend the law so as to allow any person to prosecute for infractions, in his own name, and to receive on conviction one-half of the penalty.

Important from Mexico—The Proposal for Peace Rejected.—Letters just received state that the new administration under Santa Ana has begun auspiciously. Almonte is Secretary of War, and Rejon of Foreign Affairs. A letter has been received at Washington from the United States Squadron in the Gulf, which gives the substance of the Mexican Government's response to the peace proposition. They refuse to enter into negotiations until the American land and naval forces have been withdrawn from the territories and harbors of Mexico!

Fire at Niblo's Garden.—A fire broke out in the Green Room at Niblo's Garden in this city, on Friday morning last. There was much combustible material near where the fire originated, on which account it spread rapidly, and soon enveloped the whole establishment in flame. Before the conflagration could be checked, not only Niblo's buildings, but several others in the vicinity, were burnt to the ground. The whole loss is estimated at about $50,000. One unpleasant result of it will be to deprive the American Institute of its usual grounds for the National Fair, which is soon to open. No doubt another place, perhaps equally convenient, will soon be secured.

Trouble at Nauvoo.—The Mormon City is in trouble again. The Nauvooites having been repeatedly threatened with an attack, built a breastwork for their defence, which they mounted with six pieces of cannon. Their enemies came upon them, when a desperate battle ensued, in which several persons were killed, and many others seriously wounded. Another battle was hourly expected.

American Baptist Missions.—From the Annual Report of the American Baptist Missionary Union, it appears that this body has under its direction, 16 missions, embracing 56 stations and 87 out-stations; 99 missionaries, native preachers and assistants; 82 churches, having more than 5,300 members, more than 600 having been baptized during the last year; and 50 schools, with about 2,000 pupils.

More Relics.—A correspondent of the New York Sun, who writes from Berlin, July 18th, 1846, thus alludes to some fresh relics on exhibition at Aix la Chapelle:—

"I do not know whether it was jealousy of the success which two years ago attended the exhibition of the 'Holy Coat at Treves,' or whether it is all regular and in order, but a similar exhibition of holy relics has just been commenced at Aix la Chapelle. Thousands and thousands are journeying from every part of the world toward the place of exhibition, to let their eyes receive the holy blessings of beholding these few rags, which can only be seen once in seven years. It is said that the number of visitors will be no less than that of the visitors to Treves. The relics in this exhibition consist of the Lintenum de nive, (the Lord's apron) the Sindon munda, (the linnen dress) and the Sudarium domini, (napkin or handkerchief of the Lord.) Infamy and shame upon the State which thus dares to increase, nourish and protect ignorance and superstition among the lower and more ignorant of the people."

Accidents on the Sabbath.—The following accidents, of recent occurrence, are placed together for the benefit of those who think that Sunday is the principal day for such occurrences:—

The Kingston (Canada West) Argus, of Sept. 15th, says that on Saturday evening twenty-four of the workmen engaged in the construction of the Redoubt on Cedar Island, crowded into a row-boat for the purpose of crossing to Point Frederick. About the middle of the channel the boat was struck by a wave and upset. Eighteen of the twenty-four were drowned. Seventeen of the bodies have been recovered. The deceased had almost all of them large families. Upwards of seventy children, it is said, have been by this distressing accident rendered fatherless.

On Saturday, two lads, Horatio, aged 10 or 12 years, son of Robert Carman, and Jeremiah, aged 13 years, son of John McGowan, of Binghampton, Broome, county, N. Y. were drowned while bating in the Susquehana river.

A French woman, named Labeau, was instantly killed on Saturday night week, on board the line-boat Wolf, a short distance from Buffalo. Her death was occasioned by passing under a low bridge, which caught her upon the deck and crushed her.

General Intelligence.

FIFTEEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamship Cambria arrived at Boston on Friday last, with fifteen days later intelligence from Europe. She brought 133 passengers, among whom were Hon. Washington Irving, our late Minister to Spain, and D. Maynard, Esq, bearer of dispatches, Rev. E. N. Kirk, Rev. Dr. DeWitt, and the celebrated "Cruikshank," the caricaturist.

The grain crops have been gathered in on the British Islands, and the general impression is that wheat will be an average yield. Oats the same. Potatoes, owing to disease, are every where a failure.

The news from America announcing that the American Government had made overtures of Peace to the Republic of Mexico, caused a great change in the aspect of Mexican affairs, and produced quite a revolution in the market value of that stock.

The Cambria brings the important intelligence that Mr. Packenham, the British Minister at Washington, has been instructed to offer the mediation of his Government, with a view to the settlement of our difficulties with Mexico. This fact was disclosed in Parliament by Lord Palmerston on the 24th ult. in response to inquiries from Lord Bentnick. The avowal appears to have given general satisfaction.

The British Iron trade has improved, in view of the opening of the markets of the United States, under the new American Tariff.

The American Provision Market was in a buoyant state.

The Parliamentary session had been brought to a close.

The accounts from the English manufacturing districts are more cheering.

The subscription to the Cobden Testimonial amounts to £70,000.

Hostility continues among the Irish people toward Indian Corn, but increasing intelligence is gradually removing the prejudice. Turnips are in a sound state, and will compensate for the loss of the more popular esculent.

Joseph Henri, who fired at the King of France on the 29th of July, has been tried by the Peers, found guilty, and was condemned to work in the galleys for life. No doubt is entertained that the fellow is insane.

The Queen of Spain has got a husband—at last! Isabella is to marry her cousin, the Duke de Cadiz, eldest son of Don Francisco, Duke de Montpensier.

One of the largest freights of specie on record, amounting to six millions of dollars, has arrived in England, in H. B. M. ship-of-the-line "America." It was collected on the West coast of Mexico and in Peru aud Chili, on account of British merchants,

On the 16th ult. the celebrated composer Rossini, led to the hymeneal altar at Bologna, Mademoiselle Olympe Pelissier, very well known in Paris. This lady, after rather a gay life, was introduced to the Grand Maestro about sixteen years ago. She was pretty clever, and accomplished, became much attached to Rossini, and has never left him since.

From the Cape of Good Hope we have advices to the 28th of May. Ten thousand Kaffirs, who had swarmed round Fort Peddie, were dispersed by artillery and rockets, and retreated, leaving considerable dead behind them. The firing having frightened the cattle, which were gathered under the walls of the Fort for protection, the beasts broke loose, and were carried off by the Kaffirs, to the number of four or five thousand head. On the 8th of June a thousand Kaffirs unexpectedly found themselves wedged in between two parties of the British forces, (Capt. Rifle's drogoons, mounted men,) fought gallantly, but they were galloped over and cut down in the retreat, to the number of some hundred.

STEAMER SUNK AND SEVENTEEN LIVES LOST.—A slip from the Mobile Tribune of 10th inst., gives an account of the loss of the steamship New York, on the 7th inst. in a severe gale from the northeast. Seventeen persons were drowned, including twelve passengers and five of the crew. Capt. John D. Phillips, of the lost New York, states that he left Galveston Saturday evening, the 5th inst., for New Orleans; and in that night, finding the wind blowing very hard from the northeast, with a heavy sea running from eastward, he got back into 11 fathoms water. On Sunday morning at ten o'clock, the wind having lulled, he weighed anchor and proceeded on his course. Soon after, the wind increased, and he came to anchor in ten fathoms water. The wind then commenced blowing a perfect gale, and held on until Monday morning. He attempted to slip out of the troughs of the sea, and before the wind, when a very heavy sea struck her larboard guard, carrying it away, and straining the vessel so much as to cause her to leak considerably. At four o'clock A. M. a heavy squall carried away the smoke pipe, lifted the promenade deck, stove in the starboard guard and wheel house, causing the vessel to leak in such a manner as to extinguish the fires in the furnace, and at six o'clock she went down in ten fathoms water, the wind blowing a perfect hurricane. The captain and eighteen of the crew were saved.

THE SANTA FE TRADE.—A correspondent of the St. Louis Republican, writing from Independence, Missouri, gives some interesting statistics of the overland trade to Santa Fe and the Southern Mexican Provinces, from which it appears that there are thirty-nine firms engaged in the trade, employing 351 wagons. Together with these there were about twelve smaller wagons, called kitchen wagons, and about forty-eight or fifty carriages, from common to those of the very finest kind, imported. The men employed to take charge of them will average about two to each wagon, thus making from 750 to 800 men who have gone out. The most of these goods were baled up, and the number of bales, so far as I can ascertain, is 9,588. These, if averaged at from ninety-five to one hundred dollars per bale, which is about their value, will amount to $30 or 950,000, and perhaps the whole, in round numbers, might safely be extended to a million of dollars.

In connection with this, as far as can possibly be known from our Custom House officer and others, of the amount of merchandize stated above, their out fit consisted of debenture goods 1,187 packages; value, as stated in invoices, about $91,700; also 2,586 packages not valued, but which, from the character of the goods they contained, might be set down very properly at $75 per package, making $193,950; and in all, of goods subject to drawback, $289,650.

We are scarcely able, at this juncture of affairs, to tell what must be the result of so many goods going into the Mexican country by the present route. Many think it impossible for them to be sold—others have a different opinion. The amount is certainly unusually large, and perhaps not demanded in the present or in any emergency.

SURGICAL OPERATION.—A late number of the Boston Medical and Surgical Journal contains an account of a remarkable surgical operation performed on a lady, the wife of a clergyman at Easton, Pennsylvania, by Dr. E. H. Dixon, of this city, in the presence of Drs. Cooper, Sloan, and Inness. In the case alluded to, the lady had received a contusion from a window-sash falling on the top of the skull, no less than seventeen years before. This was followed by severe and constant pain, till life became a burthen too great to be endured. What the cause was it seemed impossible to say, as there was not even an eschar to direct the surgeon. In this emergency Dr. Dixon performed the operation for trepanning, being guided by the seat of the pain only. A piece of the skull, one inch and a half in diameter, was removed, when the cause at once came to light. A projection had grown from the bone and pressed upon the brain—causing years of distress, and withdrawing a most estimable lady from society and usefulness. The case is published in connection with another, in which Dr. D. had removed a part of a rib for a similar injury and affection from a fireman in this city, in 1839.

PHILANTHROPY IN LONDON.—The subscription toward the Asylum for affording temporary food and shelter to destitute females, on their discharge from jail—the form given to a testimonial in honor to the philanthropic efforts of the late Mrs. Fry—has nearly, we understand, reached the amount of £5,000. The Common Council of London have voted 200 guineas to the fund; and the King and Queen of Denmark are added to the list of royal subscribers. We hear, with regret, among the reports which relate to the proceedings and prospects of the various metropolitan establishments, that the Association for Promoting Cleanliness among the Poor have exhausted their funds. It is a valuable feature of this society's doings, that in addition to their free baths and wash-house at Glasshouse-yard, near the London Docks, they are at the expense of cleansing and whitewashing the dwellings of the poor in that neighborhood. Many thousand rooms, staircases, passages, and entrances have, it is said, been cleansed and whitewashed by them since spring, and the applications for this purification are steadily increasing. For such purposes, in a season of heat and epidemic like the present, the wealthy public have a direct personal interest, beyond the gratification of their benevolence, in not suffering the Association to want ample means.

SUMMARY.

The whole amount of appropriations made during the last session of Congress was about $51,144,000, of which sum at least $38,000,000 was appropriated for warlike purposes; being nearly four millions more than two thirds of the whole appropriations of the session.

A slip from the office of the Norfolk Herald, dated Sept. 15th, says that the gale of the previous week was exceedingly disastrous in its effects on the coast. Scarcely any vessel out at the time escaped without damage, many went entirely to pieces, and great loss of life must be the consequence.

Mr. Richard Flint, of Meriden, Ct., has invented a mode of manufacturing round or rat-tail files, of superior quality. The teeth of the file are cut in a lathe on the principle of screw-thread, the cutting tool being guaged and graduated by nicely adjusted machinery. Of course the files thus made are more uniform and perfect than can be made by any other process.

The Courier de Lyons announces an important discovery in the art of dyeing. A dyer of Vienna, but resident of Lyons, has found out a process of obtaining a superior yellow orange color, by the employment of quercitron, and with a single dip. This process dispenses with the use of fustic, cochineal, cream of tartar and compound of tin, which upon the common method are necessary. It is stated that a considerable saving, both of time and expense, results from this invention, with a superior product.

Dr. Sherwood, a few years ago, broached the theory that climate changed every 666 years. He also announced that our climate, in conformity to his system, would become milder, while that of Europe would become colder, during the present and succeeding centuries. Observations on temperature in this country and Europe confirm this theory, so far as to convince many persons that it is well founded.

The ship Helena, on her late passage from Batavia to Canton, when in latitude 16 N, longitude 125 E, fell in with immense fields of floating pumice stone, apparently not having been long erupted, as samples that were picked up were perfectly clear of slime or grass, which would not have been the case had it been long afloat. They are supposed to have been recently thrown up by a submarine volcano.

Hon. Samuel A. Foot expired at his residence in Cheshire, Conn., on the 16th inst., after an illness of some month's duration. Gov. Foot had served the State, with great fidelity and integrity, for many years, having been often a Representative in the Legislature, Speaker of the House, a Representative and Senator in Congress, and Governor of the State. He was a man of warm and generous feelings, and highly esteemed by all who knew him, and most loved by those who knew him best.

Since the use of water from the river Jordan in the baptismal ordinance of one of the Princes Royal, there is such a demand for the article, that the London Punch gravely recommends the formation of a company with a heavy capital for the purpose of bottling and importing the Jordan water for the use of the churches.

Two men were near losing their lives on the Baltimore and Susquehanna Railroad. They were on their way home from a friend's, where they had lost considerable sleep by sitting up all night. Feeling fatigued, they laid down with their heads on a switch of the Railroad track, and there fell asleep. The train came along, and they were undiscovered. A prong of the cow-catcher struck one of them in the face, and almost tore off his nose, besides injuring him otherwise. His companion was also considerably hurt. This was inexcusable carelessness upon the part of these men. Such stupidity could scarcely expect so fortunate an escape.

A stout Irishman came to the Tombs and requested to be shown to the office of the Chief of Police. He said his name was John McCullen—he had been five days in the City, and he came out on the suggestion of his friends, who informed him that policemen were in demand here. He had, he said, served eight years on the Dublin Police, and had no doubt he could do up the job in fine style.

Efforts are being made to establish an abolition or anti-slavery semi-monthly paper in Washington. At a convention in Illinois, more than two thousand copies were subscribed for and the cash collected. A gentleman has made an estimate of the cost of printing, and says that he is not afraid to undertake the work.

A paragraph has been going the rounds of the newspapers to the effect that Kirkham recently died of delirium tremens at Hickman, Ky—a vile slander on the character of the distinguished grammarian. Mr. Kirkham died of pulmonary consumption at 103 Third Avenue, 19th of May, 1843, and was buried in Trinity Church Cemetery on the East bank of the Hudson, a few miles North of this city, For several years previous to his death he was a member of the Total Abstinence Society.

By the Brewster, at Boston, from Rio Janeiro, July 30, we learn that on the 29th, the Empress gave birth to a princess, on which occasion there were great public rejoicings, and business was suspended for the space of five days, the custom-house and other public offices being closed.

The Mayor of our City was arrested on Friday last and held to bail in the sum of $500, damages being laid at $2000, at the suit of Mr. Pollard, No. 180 Broadway. The Mayor had ordered a man to pace in front of Mr. P.'s Mock-Auction Store with a large placard 'Beware of Mock Auctions!' The consequence was that the Peter Funks could do no business, and the suit is brought to recover damages on the ground of the Mayor's interference. We are happy to say, however, that Mayor Mickle still keeps the men in front of these stores, and if any person is cheated by these polite salesmen, he has only to apply at the Mayor's Office.

By the arrival at Boston, on Saturday, of the ship Augustine, Heard, from Valparaiso, information has been received, that the whaling ship Pantheon, Capt. DIED,

At Richfield Springs, Otsego Co., N. Y., on the 12th inst., HULDAH EUPHROSAYNE, youngest daughter of A. Frink, Jr., of Clarksville, Madison Co., N. Y., aged 16 years, 2 months and 17 days.

In Hopkinton, R. I., Sept. 7th, HARRIET L., daughter of Horace and Lovina Maxson, aged 3 months and 20 days.

In Hopkinton, R. I., Sept. 11th, of a complication of diseases, LOVINA, wife of Horace Maxson, in the 33d year of her age. Sister Maxson has been for a number of years a member of the 1st Seventh-day Baptist Church in Hopkinton. During her lingering and distressing sickness, she gave cheering evidence that the hope of the Gospel is, even in affliction, as an anchor to the soul both sure and steadfast. She had obtained, by the exercise of faith in God, the victory that overcometh the world, and was enabled to triumph in God in the midst of extreme bodily sufferings. At one time, having been engaged in prayer with her, as we rose, she exclaimed, "O how refreshing! I feel as though I could not consent for you to stop praying." In conversation with one of the family, a few hours previous to her death, speaking of some of her friends whom she should not see again, she remarked, "Bid them all farewell for me, and tell them that I die in the faith." The loss which the affectionate husband, and tenderly-cherished daughter, have sustained by this Providence, is irreparable. The church has lost a praying sister, and the poor and distressed a sympathizing friend. A discourse was preached on the occasion of her death, by the writer, from Eccles. 12: 5. "Because man goeth to his long home, and the mourners go about the streets." A. B. B.

In Johnstown, Rock Co., W. T., on the morning of the 25th ult., of cholera morbus, LOIS, wife of Elder Daniel Babcock, in the 58th year of her age. Sister Babcock embraced religion in early life, became a member of the 1st Seventh-day Baptist Church in Brookfield, N. Y., removed her standing to the 1st Alfred church at its organization; thence to the Milton church, whence she departed to join the church triumphant whose names are written in heaven. During the space of nearly thirty-eight years, in which she followed her Saviour in her pilgrimage, it is believed that she lived above reproach, and well adorned her profession, giving evidence of steadfastness in the faith, high and holy aims, and an unshaken confidence in the promises of her Saviour. Well did she exemplify the exhortation of the apostle, to "use hospitality," as every one who sat by her board or her fire-side can fully testify. For benevolence, sterling integrity of character, affability, and indeed all the social graces, she had few if any superiors. She was a faithful and affectionate wife, a kind and good mother, a loving sister, a steadfast friend, and a living Christian. She bore her last sickness, which was very severe, with entire patience and resignation, and when death struck the fatal blow, she resigned up her soul without a struggle or a groan, with the fullest assurance of a glorious immortality, and left her family and friends bathed in tears.

> Oh, if my mourning friends below,
> Did my pleasures here but know,
> Daily would they stretch the wing,
> Here to fly, with me to sing.

Miscellaneous.

GEORGE WILSON.

A few years since, as the Rev. Mr. Gallaudet was walking in the streets of Hartford, there came running to him a poor boy, of very ordinary first-sight appearance, but whose fine intelligent eye fixed the gentleman's attention, as the boy inquired, 'Sir, can you tell me of a man who would like a boy to work for him, and learn to read?' 'Whose boy are you, and where do you live?' 'I have no parents,' was the reply, 'and have just run away from the work-house because they will not teach me to read.' The reverend gentleman made arrangements with the authorities of the town, and took the boy into his own family. There he learned to read. Nor was this all. He soon acquired the confidence of his new associates, by his faithfulness and honesty. He was allowed the use of his friend's library, and made rapid progress in the acquisition of knowledge. It became necessary, after a while, that George should leave Mr. Gallaudet, and he became apprenticed to a cabinet-maker in the neighborhood. There, the same integrity won for him the favor of his new associates. To gratify his inclination for study, his master had a little room finished for him in the upper part of the shop, where he devoted his leisure time to his favorite pursuits. Here he made large attainments in the mathematics, in the French language, and other branches.

After being in this situation a few years, as he sat at tea with the family, one evening, he all at once remarked that he wanted to go to France. 'Go to France!' said his master, surprised that the apparently contented and happy youth had thus suddenly become dissatisfied with his situation—'for what?' 'Ask Mr. Gallaudet to tea to-morrow evening,' continued George, 'and I will explain.' His reverend friend was invited accordingly, and at tea-time the apprentice presented himself with his manuscripts in English and French, and explained his singular intention to go to France. 'In the time of Napoleon,' said he, 'a prize was offered by the French government, for the simplest rule for measuring plain surfaces of whatever outline. The prize has never been awarded, and that method I have discovered.' He then demonstrated his problem, to the surprise and gratification of his friends, who immediately furnished him with means of defraying his expenses, and with letters of introduction to Hon. Lewis Cass, then our Minister at the Court of France. He was introduced to Louis Phillippe, and in the presence of king, nobles and plenipotentiaries, the American youth demonstrated his problem, and received the plaudits of the court. He received the prize, which he had clearly won, besides valuable presents from the king. He then took letters of introduction, and proceeded to the Court of St. James, where he took up a similar prize offered by some royal society, and returned to the United States. Here he was preparing to secure the benefit of his discovery, by patent, when he received a letter from the Emperor Nicholas himself, one of whose Ministers had witnessed his demonstrations at St. James, inviting him to make his residence at the Russian Court, and furnishing him with ample means for his outfit. He complied with the invitation, repaired to St. Petersburgh, and is now Professor of Mathematics in the Royal College, under the special protection of the Autocrat of all the Russias!

This narrative the writer has never seen published; but the gentleman who related to him the circumstances, attributed the singular success of young Wilson, to his integrity and faithfulness. [N. E. Puritan.

THE FEARFUL WHIRLPOOL.

The following incident is related by the journalist of the Exploring Expedition, and shows with what fearful suddenness men sometimes pass unexpectedly from time to eternity. Mr. Ogden was descending the Columbia river in one of the company's boats, with ten Canadian voyageurs, all well experienced in their duties. On arriving at the Dalles, they deemed it practicable to run them in order to save the portage. Mr. Ogden determined, however, that he would pass the portage on foot, believing, nevertheless, the river was in such a state that it was quite safe for the boat to pass down. He was accordingly landed, and ascended the rocks, from which he had a full view of the water beneath and of the boat in its passage. At first she seemed to skim over the waters like the flight of a bird; but he soon perceived her stop, and the struggle of the oarsman, together with the anxious shout of the bowman, soon told him that they had encountered the whirl. Strongly they plied their oars, and deep anxiety, if not fear, was expressed in their movements. They began to move, not forward, but onward with the whirl. Round they sweep with increasing velocity, still struggling to avoid the now evident fate that awaited them. A few more turns, each more rapid than the last, until they reached the centre, when, in an instant, the boat, with all her crew, disappeared. So short had been the struggle, that it was with difficulty Mr. Ogden could realize that all had perished. Only one body out of the ten was afterwards found at the bottom of the Dalles, torn and mangled by the strife it had gone through.

CLIMATE OF ICELAND.

Though this island occupies a more southerly latitude, and presents, on the whole, a much greater extent of vegetation than the adjacent continent, it has nevertheless been unfortuately doomed to bear the repulsive name of Iceland, while the other has been favored with the pleasing and animating appellation of Greenland. The imposition of these names was wholly arbitrary, according to the accidental circumstances of the individuals with whom they originated. Floki, the third adventurer to Iceland, happening to ascend one of the mountains in the western peninsula, discovered a bay completely filled with Greenland ice, and therefore thought himself entitled to change the name given to the island by his predecessors, to that which it has ever since retained. The consequence has been, that the generality of those who inhabit more genial climes, have viewed it as equally inhospitable with the most rigid of the polar regions, and considered the natives as exposed to all the benumbing influences of relentless frosts, and perpetually immersed in ice and snow. This, however, is far from being the case. The climate is perhaps more unsettled, but it is very seldom that the cold is more intense than in the south of Scandinavia. At first, I confess, I shuddered at the idea of spending a winter in Iceland; but what was my surprise when I found the temperature of the atmosphere not only greater than that of the preceding winter in Denmark, but equal to that of the mildest I have lived either in Denmark or Sweden!

APPLE MOLASSES.

Most of our sweet apples are either summer or fall fruit, and of course cannot be preserved for winter use. They must therefore be fed out to cattle or hogs, or made into cider, or dried. The following method of making molasses from sweet apples, which we find in the transactions of the N. Y. State Agricultural Society, may be of service to many of our readers.

"Molasses, partaking slightly of the flavor of new cider, is obtained by boiling down the freshly expressed juice of sweet apples, and is not less agreeable to most palates than cane molasses, and equally useful for most purposes of cookery.

A better mode, however, of making it, is to place the apples in a hogshead made tight for the purpose, and subject them to the operation of steam. The saccharine juice soon begins to ooze from them, and drops down into a vessel (a broad tin pan is best) covering the bottom of the hogshead, and placed there for that purpose, from which it runs off, evaporated by boiling. Grinding and pressing is thus avoided, and the remaining apples are ready cooked for hogs. Even sour apples afford good molasses when treated in this way. Ten gallons may be thus obtained from fifteen bushels, or a gallon from a bushel and a half. There is little doubt that, if the same attention were bestowed on the manufacture of molasses from apples which has been given to others, it would prove one of the most valuable branches of American manufactures.

The liquid thus obtained is a much purer article than that from the beet or from the cornstalk, by a similar process; that is, before clarifying, straining, &c., while the cheapness of the article is strongly in its favor.

A QUIET WORD TO JONATHAN.

A very industrious, simple-hearted peasant—an honest, hard-working man, like most of the seventeen millions you defend—owned a little green patch, which, with his preserving industry, afforded himself and family the means of subsistence. His cabbages and other vegetables were in the midst of their luxuriant growth, when a trivial occurrence broke the peaceful monotony of his mind, and filled it with restless solicitude. A rogueish, funny little rabbit had stolen into the enclosure, and finding the bean and pea leaves to his taste, nibbled his breakfast from them day after day, without dreaming that they were cultivated for shorter-eared folks than he and his dove-eyed companions. So he bobbed about amid the delicious verdure of the unrestricted Eden, and daintily tasted of the choicest things that grew in it; cocking up his ears with delight when ensconsing himself by some plant of peculiar relish. Rising earlier than either the sun or the peasant, his morning repasts were finished without interruption, and he had retired to ruminate in his hole in the neighboring wall, long before the poor man appeared, to detect the continued depredations of a guest that cooked and counted without his host. Annoyed at these surreptitious visits, which had destroyed nearly a shilling's worth of vegetables, the peasant determined upon summary measures. With that self-sacrificing spirit that is apt to distinguish the patriotism of the poor, he resolved to repel this foreign invasion, and annihilate the cotton-coated intruder, cost what it might. To make the means commensurate with the end, he applied to a neighboring squire for his whole force of hunters, horses, and hounds, to expel the invader from his territory "by force of arms." The squire, willing to give the simple peasant a proof of his prowess, and his power to defend the defenceless, ordered the horn to sound early on the following morning; and the peasant was aroused from his bed by a squadron of horsemen thundering around his cottage, with the neighing of steeds and yelping of dogs chiming in with the tooting of trumpets of the chase. At the summons of the squire, the simple rustic brought out all his provisions, his bread, and beef, and beer, to breakfast the hungry host; and when his stock had been consumed, the charge was sounded; the foaming and fretting steeds fell into a line; and "the dogs of war" were loosed; the watch-word was given; the whole squadron came sweeping down through the garden, and the next moment, every green plant and shrub it contained was trodden into the earth. The rabbit from his burrow, and the peasant from the door of his cot, looked out upon the scene of desolation with astonishment and chagrin. The squire and his train disappeared, leaving the impoverished swain to ruminate upon "the costs of war," and the value of a military protection. Uncle Sam, do you take? You are defending this great, peaceable country pretty much in the same way.

[Sparks from the Anvil, by Elihu Burritt.

Tropical Thunder Storm.—In tropical countries, the phenomena of thunder storms are more dreadful and appalling than in our temperate climate. The thunder frequently continues for days and weeks in almost one incessant roar; the rains are poured down in torrents, and the flashes of lightning follow each other in so rapid a succession, that the whole atmosphere and the surrounding hills seem to be in a blaze. In some instances, the most dreadful effects have been produced by the bursting of an electrical cloud. In 1772, a bright cloud was observed at midnight to cover a mountain in the Island of Java; it emitted globes of fire so luminous, that the night became as clear as day. Its effects were astonishing. Every thing was destroyed for seven leagues round. Houses were demolished; plantations were buried in the earth; and two thousand one hundred and forty people lost their lives, besides one thousand five hundred head of cattle, and a vast number of horses and other animals.

Benevolence.—A disposition to grasp and keep entirely for their own use moneys, toys, or any other articles, is always odious in children; while, on the other hand, it is delightful to see young persons liberally sharing with their brothers, sisters, and companions, any good things which fall to their share. A fine anecdote exemplifying this species of liberality, is told of two boys, the sons of the Earl of Elgin, who were permitted by their father to associate with the poor boys in the neighborhood. One day the Earl's sons being called to dinner, a lad who was playing with them said that he would wait till they returned. 'There is no dinner for me at home,' said the poor boy. 'Come with us, then,' said the Earl's sons. The boy refused; and when they asked him if he had money to buy a dinner, he answered, 'No!' When the young gentlemen got home, the eldest of them said to his father, 'Papa, what was the price of the silver buckles you gave me?' 'Five shillings,' was the reply. 'Let me have the money, and I'll give you the buckles again.' It was done accordingly, and the Earl, inquiring privately, found that the money was given to the boy who had no dinner.

THE TOMATO.

Saving Tomatoes.—The editor of the American Farmer gives the following method:—On the approach of frost, take up the vines, with the fruit on them, and hang them up under cover, in some out-house, or dry place, and you will have a large addition to your winter store. The small green fruit will ripen, (as to color,) and the larger ones will prove, at that season of the year, very acceptable. We throw the vines over a pole, and place it in our barn, or any convenient place, and there let them hang, taking from the vines the fruit as it is wanted for use. In this way they keep well, and a large quantity can be secured with very little labor.

Sauce.—Peel ripe tomatoes, stew them as apples for sauce, and season with salt and pepper. If you add butter, salt will not be necessary. This sauce is not too tart to use with meat, but when not used in this way, it is improved for the taste of some persons, by adding a little sugar or molasses.

Jelly.—Peel your tomatoes, and squeeze them through a fine cloth, add their weight in sugar, boil to a jelly, and then bottle it tight, and keep it in a cool, but not freezing place.

Dumplings.—Skin carefully without breaking the meat, then make, cook, and use sauce same as you would apple dumplings.

Broiled Tomato.—Cut the large ones in two, and broil—then add a little butter, or salt and pepper.

Omelet.—Peel a quart of ripe tomatoes, cut them up, and simmer about twenty minutes. Chop a few onions fine, and throw in with crumbled bread and a lump of butter, and when nearly done, beat up four eggs and stir in, and in a few minutes it will be done.

Raw Tomatoes.—Slice up the ripe fruit in vinegar, like cucumbers, with a little pepper and salt, or it may be used like other fruit without seasoning.

Dried Tomatoes.—Take them fully ripe, scald so that they skin easily. After this operation, boil them with a little salt and sugar, but no water, then spread out this in shallow pans and dry in the sun. They will soon dry enough to pack away in bags, which hang up in a dry room. When wanted to use, soak in warm water.

Tomato for a Cough.—The tomato has been used for a cough, with decided success, says a writer in the Farmer's Register. In one case the cough was from a diseased state of the liver, in another from the lungs. It mitigates, and sometimes effectually checks a fit of coughing. It was used after having been dried as last above named, with a little sugar added to make it palatable. In a green state, they may be made into a syrup for this purpose.

Fried Tomatoes.—Peel and slice them up, and fry in butter, or without, if you choose.

Tomato Figs.—Scald and remove the skin in the usual way, add six pounds of sugar to one peck of fruit, cook them over the fire, use no water, until the sugar penetrates and they are clarified. Then spread them on dishes, and flatten and dry in the sun. Spread a little syrup over them occasionally, as they are drying. When dry, pack down in boxes, adding some powdered sugar to each layer. They will keep long, and retain their flavor. The syrup that remains should be concentrated and bottled for use.

To keep Tomatoes Fresh.—Pack them in jars, putting alternate layers of sand and tomatoes, until the vessel is full, then cover them up tight, to keep the air out, and set them in a dry, cool place, but not cool enough to freeze. Some say that they may be kept this way all winter.

Pickles.—Pickles are made of the green fruit, in the same way that you make cucumber or other pickles. The ripe fruit may likewise be pickled, and some prefer it; it is doubtless one of the most wholesome, or, allowing that pickles are unhealthy, it is the least unwholesome.

To preserve Tomatoes.—Dissolve salt enough in water to make it bear an egg; place perfectly ripe tomatoes in a stone or glazed earthern pot, without pressing them; cover them with the brine, cover the pot with a plate in such a manner that it presses upon them. This simple process will preserve them more than a year, without attention. They should be soaked in fresh water several hours or longer before cooking them.

Tart.—Roll out your dough, and place it on the plate; then having peeled your tomatoes slice them thinly, spread them over the dough and sweeten and spice as you please.

Pies.—Stew tomatoes and rub them through a sieve; and add spice as you would to apples, and make into pies.

Jam.—Stew tomatoes and rub them through a sieve; then add the same weight in sugar, and stew away to the usual consistency of Jam.

Preserve.—Take good ripe tomatoes, peel and boil them, and preserve them with good brown or loaf sugar, or with molasses. If not peeled they burst, and do not so well retain their consistency.

Catsup.—1 gallon skinned tomatoes, 4 tablespoons of salt, 4 do. black pepper, 2 do. allspice, 8 do. mustard seed, 8 pods of red pepper. These articles to be bruised fine and simmered slowly in a pint of vinegar three hours; then strained through a hair sieve. To be stewed down to half a gallon of Catsup.

A Learned Pedler.—Some years ago a gentleman who had been appointed professor in the department of oriental literature, in one of our Colleges, went out to Asia to perfect himself in the necessary learning for his new duties. Not finding all the teaching which he desired, he came back to Germany, hoping among the savans of that intellectual country to find some one with whom he could complete his studies. There he was told that the most learned man in that department was a Jew, who had been for several years in America. The professor returned, and after applying to the rabbi at Boston, finally touched on the object of his pursuit, when, to his great surprise, he learned that the man whom he sought was the very Jew who had been, during all his absence, peddling jewelry and trinkets in the professor's own College yard. The pedler proved to be really possessed of the learning which had been attributed to him, and since the discovery the young professor has been pursuing his studies under the learned pedler's tuition, with much satisfaction.

Mineral Wealth of South Africa.—The mineral wealth of this vast region is yet to be discovered. Indications of metalic ores are known to abound. Iron is every where abundant. Manganese is a common article. Copper of the richest description is to be found at a short distance beyond the Orange River; and there is little doubt that, if scientific persons were sent out, resources of a most important kind would be found in this great field of investigation. Lead of a superior kind has long been known to exist near the mouth of the Van Staaden's river, in the district of Uitenhage. A recent emigrant, Mr. Bevan—a gentleman said to be familiar with mining operations—has visited the spot. Satisfied with the indications, he has been induced to purchase the farm for £1,650; and has already a party employed to collect the ore. It is said, that he has since discovered a load of native lead—one of the rarest productions of nature, and which hitherto, it has been believed, is only to be procured from the island of Madeira and at Alston in Cumberland.

Chinese Map.—Amongst the articles brought from China by the Commission who have just returned from that country—and which are exhibited at the ministry of commerce—is a map of the world, presented to the Commission by the head mandarin of Canton. The Chinese geographer has arranged the earth quite in his own way. With him, there are no isthmuses, no peninsulas; the Isthmus of Suez is replaced by a magnificent arm of the sea, which detaches itself from the Mediterranean to fall into the Red Sea. We see nothing of the Isthmus of Panama, and the two seas on that side are connected in the same way. There are neither Pyrenees nor Alps, and hardly are the vast mountains of America indicated. On the other hand, however, China is liberally dealt with by the geographer; for upon this point it occupies not less than three quarters of the whole globe.

Milk Souring in Thunder Storms.—We have heard great complaints from dairy women, about their milk getting sour during a thunder storm, though perfectly sweet a short time previous. The following plan will prevent this in a great degree. All the pans containing the milk ought to be placed upon non-conductors of electricity, such as blocks of baked wood, pieces of glass, or wood that has been well painted or varnished. These are articles most easily provided. Beeswax, feathers and woolen cloth are also non-conductors, but inconvenient to be used. All these articles will insulate the pans and prevent the electric fluid from entering, which is the cause of acidity or is in fact the principle of acidity itself.

VARIETY.

An eye-witness tells a few days since a jolly son of the ocean was about being put on board an ontward bound ship, for which he had previously entered, when he asked leave to have another run up town. Being informed that he could not be permitted to go, as the ship was about sailing, he sung out to a man on the wharf, an entire stranger to him, 'Here my friend,' throwing him a silver dollar, 'spend that for me—I'll do as much for you another time.'

Old Earl Stanhope used to tell an anecdote of his father, who was more homely in his appearance than was usual with peers of that day, that on attempting to enter the House of Lords he was stopped by the door-keeper with the observation, 'Honest man, you have no business here.' To which he answered, 'I am an honest man, and I have business here.'

John Foster said two very witty things. On being told that the Emperor Alexander was a pious man, he said, 'Yes, very pious; no doubt he said grace before he swallowed Poland.' On being shown some worsted work, in which red was the predominant tint, he said it was red with the blood of murdered time.

The editor of the Lowell Courier in a late letter from Scotland, says he listened to an extemporaneous prayer in Rothsay, which was three quarters of an hour long, and during all of which the people were upon their feet. The same divine then preached an extemporaneous sermon, which lasted two hours and a half.

A London paper says that a cat having lost her kittens, was seen following a street pie-man, mewing most disconsolately. This is regarded as one of the most wonderful exhibitions of animal instinct on record.

That avarice which only relaxes its gripe upon the dollars on a death-bed does not deserve the name of Christian charity.

In one of the fashionable resorts in Paris is a cannon loaded and primed, and so placed that the focus of a burning-glass falls upon the powder precisely at 12 o'clock; of course every pleasant day the hour of noon is indicated by the firing of the cannon. On every such day a crowd gathers round it to watch the progress of the sun spot and the manner in which the motion of the earth on its axis is made to fire off artillery.

A pint of water may be evaporated by two ounces of coal. In its evaporation it swells into 216 gallons of steam, with a mechanical force sufficient to raise a weight of 37 tons a foot high. This shows conclusively the astonishing power of steam.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant andeconomical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institntion, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25
EXTRAS PER TERM.
Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trustees.

DE RUYTER INSTITUTE.

TEACHERS' Classses will be formed at the opening of the fall term, September 16, to continue seven weeks, which will be exercised in practical teaching under the immediate supervision of the Principals, with a thorough review of the common-school studies. Lectures on the theory of teaching, and other important subjects, will form a part of the daily exercises. The Principals will be assisted by Hon. Edward Cooper and the County Superintendents of Madison and Cortland Counties. All the improvements and important suggestions of the day in the art of teaching, will be brought before the class for their consideration.

THE HOPE OF OUR COUNTRY.

An Oration delivered at the close of the last term of DeRuyter Institute.

Our country, in its past history and present condition, is a theme of deep and general interest to every patriotic citizen—a theme on which he loves to dwell, and about which linger his fondest hopes; and when he beholds nations overthrown by the incumbent weight of their own evils, he turns from their annals with a noble zeal, and upon the intellectual and moral character of the people plants his hopes for the future permanence and glory of his blood-bought and heaven-protected land, founded upon the broad basis of republican equality. On its Constitution are legibly inscribed characters of ineffable brightness—Literature, Science, and Religion, entwined by the laurel wreaths of improvement, and the symbols of peace and union. A government thus founded, without the vestige of tyranny or oppression, would be a mighty fabric, so glorious that all nations would be proud to reverence it, and would choose rather to found their own upon such principles, than to engage in war for the destruction of such a famous seat of loyalty and happiness. But where shall we find a practical example of cultivated intellect? Shall we wander in the past in search of a monument of its effects? Let us linger near ancient Greece, and ask by what power was that small nation able to defend herself against the united millions of Persia? Let the tombs and monuments of those illustrious ones answer, who trod the soil of Thermopylæ and Marathon, or stood in the senate halls wielding their eloquence in vindication of the wise policy by which their nation was saved. Then science, art and morality, flourished. Then a Socrates taught the Athenians, with a Xenophon, Thucydides, Euripides, Pindar, Sophocles, and a host of others illustrious for greatness and heroism, as cotemporaries. What was the character of the Grecian's enemy? They were a blind, ignorant, and voluptuous rabble. History for centuries furnishes no record of illustrious men, but as a nation they were subject to continuous revolutions, and eventually, as did their ancestors the Chaldeans, they fell a sacrifice to the destructive power of ignorance and oppression. When was Egypt in her strength and glory? Let the lasting monuments of her fame tell—the pyramids, the labyrinths, catacombs, and the massive ruins of Memphis and Thebes, whose columns have glistened for ages in the morning sun. When was Rome in her grandeur and power? It was when she was the seat of literature and science. When her decline? It was when weakened by her effeminacy, indolence and vice that she was conquered and overrun by ignorant barbarians.

But, to return to our own native land, the refuge of the persecuted pilgrims, the land of the brave, and the home of the free. In her earliest colonial history, she was distinguished for her attachment to moral principle and intellectual cultivation—her course was onward. Colleges and schools were established, and the glittering spire of the church was seen in almost every town. From these institutions emanated that light which taught our fathers the true principles of republicanism and equal inalienable rights, and led them on in their exertions to plant the tree of liberty on Columbia's soil. Aye, led them on to the defence of this precious boon. To what but the intellectual and moral firmness of our fathers, can we attribute revolutionary success? Few in numbers, they declared independence, waved the banner of war in the face of a powerful nation, and pledged their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor, at freedom's altar. Who but a Washington, a Jefferson, Franklin and Adams, could have thus guided the destinies of our nation, and engaged with such a holy patriotism in its arduous defence? They labored earnestly in council and battle, not only to free our land eventually from the last vestige of tyranny and oppression, but also to rear a high bulwark of national defence, ensure a democratic government, and hand down to us free institutions. The immortal father of his country, in his valedictory, called upon Americans, to promote, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. He said that of all the habits and dispositions that lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of true patriotism, who should labor to subvert these pillars of human happiness. As far as the good advice of our venerable Washington has been received, so far it has tended to the liberty and prosperity of our country. But alas! could he look down, from his exalted seat, and behold the oppressions perpetuated beneath our nation's flag of stripes and stars, with what indignation would his bosom heave, as he saw liberty perverted, and justice outraged. As he laid his hoary head in the grave to rest, he hoped that the work begun, and so far carried out, would soon exterminate every wrong—that education and morality among all classes would become universally established. His hopes and wishes have been unheeded by some, yet remembered with gratitude by others. In the northern part of our Union, where education and morality have been objects of the highest importance, we behold liberty, prosperity, and strength; but in the southern part, where no free public institutions are tolerated, there is tyranny unparalleled in the present age. There, with innumerable natural facilities for prosperity, they are weak in resources; decay and ruin mark their present condition, and portend their future destiny. Though but a few, yet by their usurpations of power they rule with despotic sway the whole nation, and subsist upon its very vitals. They employ the wealth of the nation to subvert those principles upon which our government was founded. By a social, political, and moral miasma widely diffused, they have created a far-spread and cruel prejudice against those who are the victims of their lust and cruelty, as also against those philanthropic men who have engaged in behalf of suffering humanity. Year after year are the baneful effects of this system more manifest, dissolving the holy alliance of freedom and her sacred institutions. Step by step has it made encroachments upon our liberties, until it has trampled boldly upon our glorious Constitution. Our Congress is under the power of southern dictation, and bows to the iron rod of oppression. In the South, freedom of speech and of the press are restricted. Where then is our hope? It is in the intellectual and moral character of the people. The public mind must be enlightened; the principle of right inculcated in every political act; the education of all classes, upon the most liberal principles, should be our motto. Our Congressional halls must be filled with those in whose bosoms burn true patriotism, justice, and mercy—who love that righteousness which exalteth a nation. In this is our only hope. When every hill and valley shall resound with the glad notes of the school-boy, of the enslaved and the free, then will the chains fall, and we may, with nature and the millions of emancipated, join in a jubilee of gladness in the hope of our country redeemed and planted upon the same basis which our fathers hoped to have formed—a fabric like the pure white marble monument, of moral and intellectual permanency, where the brightness of genius would shine forth in such splendors as to illuminate the world, and cause the desert of mind to blossom like the rose. J. D. S.

For the Recorder.

OUR SCHOOLS.—No. 1.

Much has of late been done, in many of the States, to improve the condition of our Common Schools; and yet, that much remains to be done to elevate them to their proper station, a short tour through any of our most favored States will afford ample evidence. In the first place the School House may be considered an index to public sentiment. In many Districts, attention has been given to the erection of new houses, but from a lack of adaptation to the wants of the school, the expectations of the inhabitants have not been realized. In other Districts, old worn-out, dilapidated houses, which never deserved the name, mark a total want of interest for that institution, upon the proper conduct of which, more than upon any other, the prosperity of our country depends. If the tender shoot is neglected, the ripened plant will never appear. No season of life is fraught with more interest than that spent in school. Then the mind is moulded for futurity. Then habits are formed, impressions are made, and principles implanted, which will characterize the life of the pupil. How important, then, that a proper direction should be given to the elastic mind of the young. To secure this, nothing is more important than a properly selected place for convening them. The power of association is such, that whatever is associated with gloomy objects will partake of their gloominess. If the school-room be a dark, ill-shapen place, every thing connected with it will partake of its nature. Not only will the teacher feel that but little importance is attached to his calling, but the scholar will imbibe a dislike for his studies, which must partake of the unpleasantness of the place where they are prosecuted, to say nothing of the torture there inflicted by awkward seats and cold feet. In selecting sites for houses, care should be taken to locate them in a retired place, away from the noise of the town or highway. Not less than one acre of ground should be employed, a part of which may be used for a flower garden in the summer, the cultivation of which would afford a very agreeable and useful respit from study to both teacher and scholar, at the same time affording necessary physical exercise. The yard in front of the house should be adorned with trees and arbors, and if possible a fountain of pure water. Here the weary pupil may retire from his studies, feast on nature's beauties, and listen to her songs of praise. Returning, he should enter a large room, supplied with black-boards, maps, globes, and every thing necessary to facilitate his progress. The seats should all face one way, and be large and easy. The teacher's stand should be so arranged that the scholars may all face him at a time. Nothing is more important than that a proper temperature should be maintained in the room. To secure this, it should be well ventilated by openings in the top, and be tight otherwise. A good thermometer should hang in every school-room.

Having thus arranged the room, the next object is to secure a good teacher. The first qualification I consider to be a good moral and Christian character, and an unwavering devotion to truth and religion. He should be patient and persevering. Kindness should run through all his actions. He should have a heart devoted to the temporal and eternal interests of his scholars. He should feel and know the dignity of man, and realize that upon him may depend the future destiny of those under his charge. He should picture that destiny to them, tell them what they may be, the duties which will devolve upon them, and the benefits they will derive if qualified to meet those duties. Such a course, persisted in, I will venture to say, will supersede that relict of barbarism so often brought into requisition by those who know no better incentive to exertion. In addition to these, the teacher should be master of all he attempts to teach.

Good order is the sine qua non of every school. To secure it the teacher only need gain the confidence and affection of his pupils; then will his wish be felt as a law, and compliance a pleasure. Parents should sympathize with him, and give permanency to his regulations, by enforcing upon the minds of their children the importance of compliance. How much embarrassment to the teacher, and injury to the school, may be inflicted by fault-finding parents, who, not knowing the wants of the scholar, or the circumstances of the case, hastily arraign the teacher before their incompetent tribunal, and pass sentence upon him, thus weakening the scholar's esteem, and neutralizing all the teacher's efforts to promote the good of the school. WESTERLY, R. I., September, 1846.

VISIT TO A JEWISH SYNAGOGUE IN INDIA.

I followed my conductor down a narrow back street, through a dark and dirty entrance, and up a staircase, the lower half of worn brick, that above, of broken, ladder-like wooden steps, into an ante-chamber, filled with slippers; from whence, after rapping at a half closed door, we were admitted into a dismal looking room, where such daylight as found its way was broken and obscured by the dull and feeble light of several mean lamps of oil.

Round this chamber, sat about fifty venerable looking figures, in large robes of white, white turbans, out of the center of whose muslin folds, the short top of a crimson cap was just visible.

One of them stood up at a raised reading table near the entrance, and opposite him was fixed against the wall a sort of plain wooden press, like a half book case.

Of those seated round the room, some were aged, with long silver beards, some middle aged, with beards black or red, and curling or bushy; their complexions differed from olive even to fresh, and they were in general very handsome. Although their dress and style of sitting, save that they used a broad raised bench, was Asiatic, still they appeared totally unlike, not only the Mahomedans of India, but also those from Asia Minor, who visit our Indian ports. At the sounding of a small bell, he at the table began reading to them from an ancient manuscript volume, and the eyes of every one were instantly rivited on small written or printed books, with which each, even a boy among them, was provided.

Here, without a temple, and without altar, giving mournful evidence of the truths of those very prophecies, the divine Interpreter of which their fathers rejected, and the past accomplishmen of which they still deny, here was a stray flock of the house of the lost sheep of Israel. Unhappy race! Cursed be the man who, believing yonr origin and history, should, in a bigot's zeal, look on you with that insulting pity which partakes of scorn. Ye were, ye are, our elder brethren. We know, that arm which scattered you with fury, will gather you with great mercy.

Is this mean chamber your temple? Do these dull lamps supply the mystic branches of your golden candlestick? Your tabernacle and ark of the covenant, is it thus poorly you possess them? The altar of incense, the mercy seat, are they gone? And do ye, whose forefathers went up in open state, through the gate Beautiful, into that temple so familiar to you by description, so clear in the cherished recollections of it, do ye steal through yon dark enterance to your degraded worship? Dry up your tears. Seventy years before the destruction of your second temple, the foundation stone of your third was laid; was laid in the sepulchre of a crucified Saviour; he too is the key-stone of its loftiest arch, where he sitteth on high a King of glory, triumphant over sin and death; a prince of peace, making intercession for you; God of mercy, waiting to be gracious.

The pride and ambition of great men, or rather, of those who would be great, is generally the cause of all the disturbances which are made in Church and State.

PATIENCE.

Be patient, O be patient! put your ear against the earth;
Listen there how noiselessly the germ of the seed has birth;
How noiselessly and how gently it upheaves its little way,
Till it parts the scarcely broken ground, and the blade stands up in the day!

Be patient, O be patient! the germs of mighty thought
Must have their silent undergrowth, must under ground be wrought;
But as sure as ever there's a Power that makes the grass appear,
Our land shall be green with liberty, the blade time shall be here.

Be patient, O be patient! go and watch the wheat ears grow!
So imperceptable, that ye can mark nor change, nor throe;
Day after day, day after day, till the ear is fully grown;
And then, again, day after day, till the ripened field is brown.

Be patient, O be patient! though yet our hopes are green,
The harvest fields of Freedom shall be crowned with the sunny sheen;
Be ripening! be ripening! mature your silent way,
Till the whole broad land is tongued with fire on Freedom's harvest day. [Dublin Nation.

MISSIONS NO ROMANCE.

The Rev. William Dean, previous to his departure to return to his labors in the Baptist Mission in China, said, at a great public meeting in New York:

"Some may ask why I leave these pleasant scenes. I have, within a few days, taken leave of my venerated father, and as he threw his arms around my neck, I felt compelled to say, why do you restrain me, for I desire to go. My sisters said to me, remain with us; is it not enough that you have spent ten years of your life in heathen lands? You are impaired in health, let others go and take your place. And my children, as they clung to me, (and it is not figurative to say that I was compelled to throw them off and tear myself from their embraces,) said to me, dear father, stay with us. Do you ask if I love my children? I love them as tenderly as any parent. And parents, if you would test the love a father has for his child, send your children to China, and remain in this country yourselves. (Here Mr. D. was much affected, and for a few moments was unable to speak; the congregation sympathized deeply with his emotion.) I am a man encompassed with infirmities. I cannot pursue the subject any farther. For the last few days I have been traveling over the beautiful plains of my native land, amid the bending fruit, the verdant fields, and the waiving grain, all of which seem to beckon me to remain. If my young brethren who are to accompany me, see any thing of romance in the far off land they are going to, I do not. I have seen all, and it is nothing but darkness. To go to China is like going down into a deep, dark pit. It is like the tomb; and I seem to shrink back as I feel the death damps gathering around me. But there is something pleasant in the thought that it is the tomb of my loved ones. I have laid children there, and there rests my beloved companion. But though my own country is so delightful, and in China there is so much that is dark and forbidding, I would not remain here. I know not why it is, but there is nothing that would tempt me to stay with you. When I can fix my eye beyond all these earthly scenes, into the eternal world, then it is that I find myself happy in my prospects. Notwithstanding I love my father, and dear children, and my native land, I am happy at the privilege of returning to China, to point her millions to the bliss of heaven."

HYMN BOOK IN SOUTH AFRICA.

I need scarcely say, that the new hymn books were most acceptable to our churches. The last edition, which was much smaller, was expended, while the demand for them continued to increase. When first taken out they excited no little admiration, and the eagerness to obtain them was just what was anticipated. However, in a land like this, where commerce is still in its infancy, and where there is little of either silver or gold, and many poor, there was no little difficulty, on the part of some, to obtain the wherewith that they might procure a copy. Some purchased them with corn, some with goats and sheep, and others with cash. Many, who had some of the old edition in good order, offered them in exchange for the new, which we could hardly with justice refuse. One or two having been given to children who had distinguished themselves in learning to read and in good behavior, this opened a door to many more juvenile applicants, who now feel something like a title to a hymn book, on their being able to read it. A few weeks ago, after preaching at a neighboring village where there is a schoolmaster, two very little girls came to solicit hymn books. Their only plea was that they had learned to read. One of them looked so very young that I expressed some doubts as to her proficiency. She smilingly replied, "Try me." I handed her the book which I had in my hand, and it happened to open at a well known hymn; she read it clearly. I remarked, "You know this by rote." To this she very promptly rejoined, "Then show me one I do not know." I turned over to one of the new ones, an imitation of Montgomery's beautiful hymn on prayer. This she read with nearly the same ease. She got her book and scampered off home with a gladsome heart.

On a late itinerating visit to one of our distant out-stations, after holding a conversational for Bible-class meeting, with some of the believers, after service I returned to my wagon. Here I found two women whose appearance indicated poverty. I inquired if they wished to speak to me. "We are come to beg," said they. "I hope it is something for your souls." "Yes," was their reply. Seating myself on a stone, I remarked, "I shall give what you desire with all my heart." At this they brightened up, adding, "It is hymn books we are come to beg. We are poor widows, and have not wherewith to buy." On inquiry I found they were able to read, and were widows indeed. They were accordingly supplied. After a few words of exhortation they departed, but not before giving expression to the deep gratitude they felt. I thought to myself, how blessed is the privilege to be able to afford means to cause the widow's heart to sing. [Moffat.

THE TIMES.

When we look around us, we see the political, social, and religious world in deep commotion. Society is riven to its foundation by the lightening of intellect. Nations are convulsed as by an earthquake. The moral world is overturned. Religious associations are separated, never to meet on the old platforms that cemented them for ages. The political fabrics of the earth are falling, dynastes are decaying, and the crowned heads of the globe struggling to maintain their power. Whence this uprooting of the social elements, this volcanic action of the moral world? It arises from the despotism of the few—from the corruption of leaders—from the ostracism of demagogues—from the unrelenting persecution of sectarianism—from the lack of justice, virtue, and humanity in the rulers of the earth. Man has been doomed, for ages, to lie down like a slave, with the sceptre suspended over his head, and he has been deprived of individual exertion, of independence, and freedom of thought and speech! But the day of liberty dawns. The connection of church and state already alarms the minions around the British cabinet, for the corruptions are exposed by which that connection drew the life-blood from an honest and industrious and a starving people. The tax on food has been reduced by the cry of "bread or blood!" The signs of the times are ominous of a still deeper cry:

"Sounds are on the tempest winging,
What has spoke them? wrath and shame;
Memories start, like serpents, stinging,
Searching, wild and bright, like flame;
Europe from thy deepest prison,
Rings a voice that earth must hear,
When the Spirit once has risen;
Man! thy day of grandeur's near!"

Turn to the South of Europe, and what do we behold? Thousands of Republican associations in Italy, and stout arms and warm hearts engaged in a cause that makes the Papal throne to reel to and fro, and bringing the potentate of Rome to acknowledge that oppression reigns, and has reigned too long!

"Italy! thy pangs are numbered,
Light shall through thy dungeons shine;
Many an age thy strength had slumbered;
Freedom's blaze forsook thy shrine.
But the reign of blood and plunder—
Trembie, Austria! shall be o'er;
Heaven not yet has lost the thunder—
Gore shall yet be paid by gore."

Behold the movements in the centre of Europe, under Ronge, that are upheaving the very basis of the Papal throne, and hark! note the heavy reverberations, as they cross the Atlantic, of deep-toned thunder!

"Germany! thou too art waking,
Like the giant from his sleep,
Heavily thy fetters shaking,
Like the heavings of the deep,
Ere the storm begins to blow;
Like the torrents on the steep,
Gathering ere it bursts below!
Who shall stand that torrent's sweep?"

Go where we may, the same facts stare us in the face. Abroad—at home—in town or city—on the mountain hight, or in the deep valleys of civilization, the tocsin sounds, and man proclaims the advent of mental freedom—that the chains of spiritual bondage are broken—that man will no longer "beg leave to toil!"

"Hour of mighty retribution!
Who shall stand when thou art come!
Hour of fiery dissolution!
Strength a cypher, council dumb!
But the tempest shall be chidden,
Earth shall shine without a stain;
Guilt beneath its mountoins hidden—
Man shall be himself again!"

A GEM FROM LAMARTINE.

Whether he be a shepherd or a sailor, the man who has a family has a heart kneaded with humane and honorable sentiments. The spirit of family is the second soul of humanity. Modern legislators have too much forgotten this; they only think of nations and individuals; they omit the family, unique source of a pure and healthy population, the sanctuary of traditions and manners, in which all the social virtues acquire fresh vigor. Legislation, even since the introduction of Christianity, has been barbarous in this respect; it repulses man from the spirit of family, instead of encouraging it in him! It interdicts to one half of mankind, wife, child, the possession of a home or a field. It owes these blessings to all as soon as they arrive at manhood. It ought only to have interdicted them to culprits. A family is society in miniature, but it is that society in which the laws are natural, because they are sentiments. To interdict a man from the possession of family comforts should have been the greatest reprobation, the last punishment of the law; it should have been the only pain of death inflicted by a humane and Christian legislation.

AMBIGUOUS PREACHING.—On coming out of the church, I asked Mr. P., a distinguished lawyer, how he liked the sermon of Dr. B. 'I think,' said he, 'that it comes under the third head.' 'How so?' said I. 'A certain French preacher,' he replied, 'after a long and pompous introduction, said, 'I shall now proceed, my hearers, to divide my subject into three parts. First, I shall tell you that which I know, and you do not know. Secondly, I shall tell you about that which you know, and I do not know. And thirdly, and lastly, I shall tell you about that which neither you nor I know.'

Alas! how much preaching comes under the third head! How often, when Paul supplies the text, has Tullo, Plato, Epictetus taught. If there was more simple, plain preaching to the conscience, instead of an ostentatious display of learning, or strife about words to no profit, we should see more faithful, consistent Christians, and more done to advance the mild kingdom of peace.

Conscious guilt always makes persons afraid of the presence of those who love and serve God. Many Sabbath school boys, when they have been breaking the Sabbath, are afraid to go to school.

NEED OF REFORMATION AMONG PROTESTANTS.

It is common for Protestants to regard the Reformation of the sixteenth century as commencing a new era in the history of the Christian church. Not unfrequently they speak of it as an event second in importance only to the advent of Christ, and represent the doctrines which it promulged as almost equal in authority to those of the Apostles. No doubt it was a great and glorious event, as the beginning of every deep and general religious movement must be. But great and glorious though it was, it was only the beginning, not the completion, of a work. It brought to light many crying evils, and corrected many old abuses, but it did not regenerate society, or wholly remodel Christian doctrine. Instead of going back fully to the simple Word of God as the only rule of faith and practice, it retained many of the dogmas of Rome, which were founded upon tradition, and could only be justified by existing usages. It was arrested midway in its high career, and there it has lingered till the present day, struggling feebly with the errors which it served to discover, but not to annihilate.

It is useful occasionally to revert to the first principles upon which great religious movements were based, and see if those principles have been strictly and impartially carried out. If we mistake not, a candid examination will show, that neither the Reformers themselves, nor their immediate descendants, can claim perfect consistency in this respect. Their great doctrine was, that "the Bible is the only rule of faith and practice." Had they adhered strictly to that doctrine, and rejected every thing contrary to it, the result would have been a strength of character against which the gates of hell could not prevail, and a weight of influence before which every papal error must have fallen. But it is to be lamented, that they retained some doctrines which were not founded upon the Bible, and which involved the very principles they were contending against. Let us look a little at this matter.

The Reformers themselves, and a great majority of Protestants, have acknowledged the right of magistrates to interfere in questions of conscience. It is a fact worthy of particular notice, that the early opposition of the Reformers was directed against what they conceived to be an abuse of power on the part of the Pope and the church. The idea that such power was itself unchristian and dangerous, seems not to have been entertained for a moment. Gradually, however, as the result of additional inquiry, their views became enlarged, and they saw convincing proof that the power which they had so long venerated was nothing else than usurpation. The consequence was, that the Pope was branded as Antichrist, and the church which taught his infallibility was forever renounced. But instead of renouncing at the same time all coercive authority over the conscience, they only transferred it from the church to the magistrate, thus retaining a bondage, less galling perhaps, but not less dangerous. The fruit of acknowledging the right of magistrates to interfere in matters of conscience has been most bitter. It is seen in the persecution of the Dissenters in England, of the Covenanters in Scotland, and of the Quakers and Baptists in America. We need not stop here to show how inconsistent is all this with the spirit and letter of the Bible. That book, above all others, confirms the great truth, that "consciences and souls were made to be the Lord's alone."

Again, the Reformers, and Protestants generally, have retained practices which cannot be justified by the Word of God, and are only sustained by the aid of tradition. We will mention but one from a number which might be named, and that is the practice of observing the first day of the week for the Sabbath. The church of Rome, previous to the Reformation, had connected many superstitions with the observance of the first day, and had completely identified it with the festivals acknowledged to be of human origin. Some of the Reformers, seeing this, denied all obligation to observe the first or any other day of the week as the Sabbath. Even Luther taught, that "enlightened Christians have no need of religious solemnities, but for the common people, for men-servants and maid-servants, such a day of rest must be very grateful, and important withal, as affording an opportunity for acquainting themselves with the word of God, and for devotional purposes." Others, seeing more clearly, or feeling more deeply the necessity of this day of rest, waived their objections to its papal and traditional character, and gave their influence in favor of its observance. They did not, however, claim for it the sanction of the Word of God, but frankly acknowledged that it was a tradition of men. From the period of the Reformation to the present time, Protestants have gradually adopted higher notions of the religious character of the first day, until there are not wanting now those who boldly assert that it is the veritable Sabbath of the Lord. Thus they make themselves doubly guilty, not only retaining a practice which is supported by tradition, but charging the Word of God with sanctioning it, while they are not able to quote a single passage in proof of the charge.

These two illustrations are sufficient to prove our assertion, that the Reformers and their descendants have retained doctrines and practices inconsistent with making the Bible the only rule of faith. They have thus weakened their influence, and laid themselves open to the charge of not carrying out their principles to their legitimate results. The churches which they planted, the usages which they have sanctioned, and some of the doctrines which they have inculcated, need reforming. Let us then discard that mawkish sentimentality which leads so many in these days to laud to the skies whatever assumes the name of Protestant. Let us not fear to rebuke what is really papal, because it claims to be Protestant. Let us carry out the glorious doctrine of the sufficiency of the Bible as a rule of faith, rather than modify it so as to conform to the practice of those who first preached it.

TRADITION A PRESBYTERIAN ARGUMENT.

Such is the heading given to the following article by the Freeman's Journal and Catholic Register, the organ of Bishop Hughes in the city of New York. The article first appeared, we believe, in The Calender, a high-church Episcopal paper published in Connecticut. It has since been copied into several of the Catholic and Episcopal papers, and in some instances accompanied with commendatory editorial notices. We have repeatedly told our Protestant brethren, that the arguments by which they endeavor to justify the keeping of Sunday, would, if carried out to their legitimate results, compel them to acknowledge the doctrine of Apostolic Succession, and all the other ridiculous and absurd notions of Puseyism and Papacy. Here we have the same position taken and endorsed by Catholic and Episcopal editors throughout the country. When will the champions of Protestantism learn, that the best way to put down Romanism is, not to go on pilgrimages to the old world for the purpose of forming Evangelical Alliances, but to purge themselves of those doctrines and practices which can only be sustained by appeals to the decisions of Councils and the traditions of the Fathers? "Why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye? Or, how wilt thou say to thy brother, Let me pull out the mote out of thine eye; and behold, a beam is in thine own eye? Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote that is in thy brother's eye."

Mr. Editor.—The doctrine that "the Bible alone is the only rule of faith and practice," has been so strongly insisted on by almost every Dissenting writer, from Martin Luther down to our times, that I had supposed it to be a cardinal article of the "Protestant Faith." All argument from Tradition, and every attempt to prove the legality of any doctrine or practice from the authority of the fathers, I supposed was utterly repudiated.

With these impressions on my mind, I took up, the other day, "Edwards' Sabbath Manual," a book published by the American Tract Society, under the patronage of six different denominations, and, therefore, one would think, Protestant par excellence. The object of the writer, in the second part of the book, is to show that the observance of the Lord's Day is properly substituted for the Jewish Sabbath. But what was my surprise to find that so far from relying on the Scriptural argument, (which indeed he has taken care to exhibit to the best advantage,) he deemed it necessary to adduce the testimony of no less than nine of the Christian Fathers, from Ignatius to Augustine, to prove that the change was authorized by the teaching and practice of the Apostles and early Church. So anxious indeed is he to impress his readers with the importance of the testimony of these writers, that he is careful to mention along with their names, their offices, and the dates at which they wrote, as: "Ignatius, Bishop of Antioch, A. D. 101, only about half a dozen years after the death of the Apostle;" "Theophilus, Bishop of Antioch, about A. D. 162;" "Irenæus, Bishop of Lyons, a disciple of Polycarp, who had been a companion of the Apostles, A. D. 170;" "Clement of Alexandria, A. D. 192;" "Tertullian, about the same time," etc. And he concludes by saying: "Such are the testimonies of men who knew concerning the meaning of the Lord's Day, the reason why it received that designation, and the manner in which the Christians, commencing with the Apostles, and continuing for the next hundred years after their death, viewed and treated that day." And again, two pages further on he says: "Hence the testimony of Ignatius and Irenæus, Dionysius and Theophilus, Clement and Tertullian, and others which we have noticed, and all within one hundred years of the death of the Apostle John, and some of them living in the days of the Apostles, who must have known with infallible certainty, what were their teaching and practice in this matter."

Now then, after this liberal use of the authority of the Fathers, and of Ignatius among the rest, has been made by a writer whose Protestantism no one will dispute, backed too by six denominations, (whether these six comprehend the entire rank and file of the evangelical army I do not know,) I hope the testimony of the same Ignatius and the others mentioned above, upon the Episcopal question, may have some weight. That they furnish ten times the amount of evidence upon the latter question as upon the former, every body knows who has read their writings; and that they prove conclusively that Episcopacy was established in the Church by Christ and his Apostles, we cannot doubt, because, in the strong language of Dr. Justin Edwards, "they must have known with infallible certainty, what were their teaching and practice in this matter."

Again, what else than the doctrine of Tradition is found in the following sentence: "Thus the keeping of the first day of the week as the day sacred to religious worship, is interwoven throughout the history of the Church, from the days of the Apostles, and we might, were it needful, continue the history down to the present time!" And finally, to cap the climax, he brings forward the very argument which Churchmen have always delighted to use: "Such, according to his (Eusebius') testimony, was the course of Christians throughout the world." Can this be the language of a man who ridicules the doctrine of the Apostolic Succession, who rejects every appeal to antiquity on the constitution of the Christian Ministry, and refuses to listen to the fact that Episcopacy was established "throughout the world!" If painful experience had not taught us that no reliance whatever can be placed upon the opinions of men who have once cut themselves loose from the Catholic Church, I should deem the appearance of such a book as this the harbinger of better days. But the truth is, these men are beyond the reach of argument. When pressed with the most convincing proof, there is no shift that they are ashamed to resort to, to justify themselves.

I have nothing to say against Dr. E.'s book. Indeed I could say much for it. The course of argument which he has pursued is the only one which any sensible man would think of adopting. All we ask is that we may be allowed to pursue the same train of arguments in reference to other equally important points of Christian doctrine. Consistency is a jewel. I wish our Dissenting friends were possessed of it.

LEAGUE OF UNIVERSAL BROTHERHOOD.

Elihu Burritt, the learned blacksmith, is now in England, laboring to form what he calls a "League of Universal Brotherhood," between the people of all the civilized nations on the earth. To promote this object, it is said, he intends to remain there a twelve month. Two widely-circulated journals—Douglass Jerrold's Weekly Newspaper, and Bradshaw's Railway Guide—have opened their columns to him, and through them he is presenting to the people of England his plans and his hopes. He does not design, we believe, to form a corporate body at present, if it at all, but only to induce as many persons as possible to unite themselves together by signing the following pledge, to which several distinguished names have already been appended:—

"Believing all war to be inconsistent with the spirit of Christianity, and destructive of the best interests of mankind, I do hereby pledge myself never to enlist or enter into any army or navy, or to yield any voluntary support or sanction to the preparation for or prosecution of any war, by whomsoever, or for whatsoever proposed, declared or waged. And I do hereby associate myself with all persons, of whatever country, condition, or color, who have signed, or shall hereafter sign this pledge, in a "League of Universal Brotherhood;" whose object shall be to employ all legitimate and moral means for the abolition of all war, and all the spirit and all the manifestations of war, throughout the world; for the abolition of all restrictions upon international correspondence and friendly intercourse, and whatever else tends to make enemies of nations, or prevents their fusion into one peaceful brotherhood; for the abolition of all institutions and customs which do not recognize and respect the image of God and a human brother in every man, of whatever clime, color, or condition of humanity."

Hon. Heman Lincoln.—We learn from the Christian Watchman, that the Hon. Heman Lincoln has been compelled, on account of enfeebled health, to resign the office of Treasurer of the American Baptist Missionary Union. The Executive Committee, in accepting his resignation, "express their sense of the wisdom and fidelity with which he has uniformly discharged the duties of said office. For twenty-two consecutive years, he has been unanimously elected to that station, and, during the whole period, has fulfilled its obligations and borne its responsibilities, entirely without pecuniary compensation. He has taken many journeys in the service of the Board, and defrayed the whole expense from his own resources; and, in times of difficulty and trial, he has sustained the credit of the treasury by hazarding the full amount of his personal ability. For such services and sacrifices, he is entitled to the gratitude of this Committee, and of all whom they represent."

Interesting Circumstance.—The Edinburg Witness says that at the meeting of the Presbytery of Edinburg, of the Free Church, on Monday, the 13th of July, after probationary trials had been gone through, very much to the satisfaction of the Presbytery, six young men were licensed to preach the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. The Witness adds: It is a very singular and deeply interesting circumstance connected with these young men, thus licensed at the same time, that they belong to six different nations. One is a Scotchman, another an Englishman, another an Irishman, another an American, another a Parsee from Bombay, another a Jew from the Continent. The Spirit of God, we trust, had made them one in Christ Jesus, and they are now one in the brotherhood of the gospel ministry as licentiates of the Free Church.

Charge of Libel.—The Pittsburgh Gazette says that the Rev. James W. Walker, President of the Pittsburgh Conference of the Wesleyan Methodist Church, was arrested, while occupying the Presidential Chair in the Conference, on a charge of libel, alledged to have been published in the True Wesleyan, the organ of that Church, on John Miller, of Allegany City. He gave the required bail, and went forward in the discharge of his duties connected with the Conference.

The New Jersey Baptist Association held a meeting at Camden on the 8th, 9th and 10th days of September. It appeared by the letters from the churches that 121 had been added by baptism during the year Among the resolutions adopted was on recommending the brethren to aid in raising the sum of ten thousand dollars, the interest of which is to be expended in procuring books for gratuitous distribution.

Following the Direction.—The True Wesleyan publishes a letter from a Wesleyan Methodist preacher, whose circuit has embraced a portion of the States of Pennsylvania and Virginia, and who has been in the habit of preaching against slavery in both States. He had pursued this course for some time, when some of the slaveholders in Virginia determined to abate the nuisance. A warrant was made out for him, and on his next arrival he was addressed in a legal form by the sheriff, who was waiting on the steps of the house where he was to preach. He was permitted to hold a service, when the sheriff took him in custody, and while on their way to a Justice having arrived at the edge of a wood, the preacher says the passage of Scripture, "When they persecute you in one city flee to another," occurred to his mind, which he resolved to obey to the letter; and putting spurs to his horse, he fled twelve miles at the top of his speed, when he found himself safe in Pennsylvania. Nothing has been heard from the sheriff since.

A Voice from Faneuil Hall.—Not long ago a fugitive slave, who had concealed himself on board a vessel sailing from New Orleans, reached Boston, but was returned by the captain of the vessel, in violation, it is alledged, of the laws of Massachusetts. An immense meeting was held in Faneuil Hall on Thursday last to consider the matter. John Quincy Adams presided, and Dr. S. G. Howe, Charles Sumner, Esq., Hon. Stephen C. Phillips, Wendell Phillips, Rev. Theodore Parker, Charles F. Adams, Rev. Mr. Stone, and George B. Emerson, were the speakers. Resolutions were passed condemning in the severest manner the act from which the meeting originated. A resolution was also passed recommending the formation of a Vigilance Committee, whose duty it should be to take all needed measures to secure for fugitives the protection which the law affords. The Committee consists of forty gentlemen, of whom Dr. Howe is chairman. A letter was read from Gov. Slade, regretting the necessity of his absence, and expressing his sympathy with the objects of the meeting.

New York in Miniature.—A most ingenious mechanical work has recently been completed, and is now being exhibited in this city. It represents in carved wood, the whole of New York, the harbor, the North and East Rivers, with their shipping, and the greater part of Brooklyn. Some idea of the immense labor bestowed on this model, may be formed from the fact, that it exhibits a fac simile of over 200,000 buildings, including houses, stores and out buildings; 2,500,000 doors and windows; 200,000 chimneys, 20,000 awnings, 5,000 pieces of shipping, from the smallest sail boat to the largest steamer and packet; 35,000 fences and walls; 30,000 trees, &c. Every street, lane, alley, place, park, square, wharf, pavement, awning, lamp, with the elevations and depressions of the different grounds, are represented with astonishing accuracy.

Children of Missionaries.—At the recent meeting of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, the question was discussed as to what disposition it is best to make of the children of missionaries when sent back to this country. The course heretofore adopted has been, to distribute them about among benevolent and sympathizing friends. It had been proposed to establish an extensive institution for bringing them up and educating them together. But this plan was rejected, and the old plan was decided to be the best. Several returned missionaries spoke upon the subject, all of whom objected to having their children brought up alone, and separated from the intercourse and sympathies of the domestic circle.

Sad State of Things.—The Lowell Advertiser says, that a Justice of the Peace fined a poor man five dollars and costs, in South Boston, not many days since, for hoeing his potato patch one Sunday morning. Come to Lowell, Oh! Dogberry, and we will teach you better things. More than a dozen men in one gang have been drilling and blowing these half-dozen Sundays past, in one particular spot in this city, to say nothing of twenty other gangs of hands engaged similarly or otherwise. The last Sabbath, this gang of hands, of which we have made particular mention, fired more than fifty separate blasts, and those nearly in the heart of the city.

Origin of Colportage.—The American Tract Society is doing a great work for the western part of our country through the instrumentality of preachers and laymen who travel through the country selling and giving away religious books. They are called colporteurs. The following is said to be the origin of this mode of operations:

"Five years since, two young men, one a licentiate and the other a layman, started for the west, under commission of the New York Tract Committee, to labor among the destitute in Kentucky and Indiana. One of them, after successfully prosecuting his work for four years, was called to labor in the principal city of his adopted State; the other is still in the Society's service in a distant territory. Thus began the American colporteur enterprise. During the first year only two colporteurs were in the field; the second, twenty-seven; the third, seventy-six; the fourth, one hundred and forty-three; and the fifth year closes with a list of one hundred and seventy-five. During these five years, more than two hundred years of colporteur labor have been performed, and not far from 400,000 families visited, and 1,000,000 volumes circulated."

Fair of the American Institute.—Official notice has been published, that the Fair of the American Institute will occur at the usual time, notwithstanding the destruction of Niblo's Garden by fire. The Managers have at great expense procured Castle Garden. The immense amphitheatre—the largest room, it is believed, in America—will afford ample space for exhibitors, where all the fabrics and productions will be displayed, completely enclosed from storms and bad weather, presenting one magnificent view. Arrangements will be made for some splendid nautical exhibitions, for which the place is so signally adapted. The special aid of the Manufacturers, Mechanics and Artists, the friends of National Industry, and the public at large, is invoked on this occasion. Their favor will insure a most triumphant display, and an overflow of visitors, and more than compensate for all unforseen calamities. The days for receiving articles, 1st, 2d and 3d of October. Castle Garden will open to the public on the 5th of October.

Protestantism in Spain.—The English papers state that the Queen of Spain has issued a peremptory order, requiring the Baptist Missionaries at Fernando Po to leave within a given period. The reason assigned is that the "Catholic religion admits of no toleration," and as the religion of the missionaries was not like that of Spain, Catholic, it involved of necessity disaffection against the authority of Spain. Protestantism is directly the reverse of this; it glories in religious toleration; and we have yet to learn that the cause of truth has ever suffered by it.

Spencer Acquitted.—The trial of E. M. S. Spencer, charged with the murder of his young wife in Jersey City, has been in progress for some time past. On Sunday afternoon last, the jury came in and gave a verdict of not guilty. The verdict is based on the presumption of the prisoner's insanity, which was proved to be hereditary in his family. He left the city on the evening of his acquittal, in company with his uncle Joshua Spencer, the eminent counsellor, who proposes to place him in the State Lunatic Asylum at Utica, under the charge of Dr. Brigham.

Brooklyn Grog-Sellers.—Forty-seven cases in which men were charged with selling liquor without license, were argued in Brooklyn, N. Y., on the 24th of September. On the 25th, a decision was given by the Court against the defendants. Of course this decision carries with it considerable costs and fines to the rum-sellers. It is to be hoped, that it will put the matter to rest in that city where so much opposition to the license law has been manifested.

The Mexican War.—The following paragraph, from the Union, the organ of the Administration at Washington, may be regarded as semi-official:—

"The Government of Mexico has determined to refer the President's overtures or negotiations for peace to the Constituent Congress of Mexico, which will assemble in the beginning of December, we believe. The more we see of Mexican Diplomacy, the more it is marked by procrastination; and the stronger we see the necessity of prosecuting the war with all our energies. Such, we cannot doubt, will be the course of the Administration."

The New Orleans Picayune of Sept. 20th, is informed that Canales, the Mexican Colonel, has been taken prisoner.

How Very Wonderful.—"The President of the United States has been often heard to remark, since he has been President, that all the institutions of Providence were wise, but none of them more so than the institution of a Sabbath."

We copy the above from the Washington Union. It forcibly reminds us of a remark made by our great grandmother, upon a certain occasion, which was, that "this is a very great country, but if it had been made as large again, it would be just twice as big." [Ch. Citizen.

Richard Cobden.—The following description of Richard Cobden, the man to whose persevering efforts is ascribed the Repeal of the English Corn Laws, is given by Elihu Burritt:—

"Cobden rose—not to speak for the space of several minutes, but to stand up in affecting silence before the assembly, who would have drowned the voice of a trumpet before the swelling peals of applause with which they greeted the Napoleon of Moral Revolution. Several times he essayed to speak, but before he could frame his lips to the utterance of a word, the multitude would burst forth anew with another volume of cheers. I saw his clear, spirit-speaking eyes fill with tears, on thus being interrupted the third time in his endeavors to make himself heard. There stood the meekest looking man I ever saw fronting a public assembly, and in the meekest attitude. As he stood with his slight form inclining forward, with one of his thin pale hands hanging by the forefinger from a button-hole in the left breast of his coat, and with the other resting on the corner of the Speaker's desk, he looked the very impersonation of timid modesty. His whole attitude and appearance reminded me of some humble member of the Methodist church in America, arising in some of their class-meetings, to 'tell his experience,' in a contrite spirit. And that was England's foremost man! Among all the heroes her annals have numbered, that soft-voiced revolutionist stood the highest in the people's gratitude! For England had become a people, and he the people's man, and this was the hour of coronation. The first words he uttered fell upon the listening multitude in tones querulous modulation. They were uttered with child-like simplicity, and were tremulous with the emotion he confessed."

Sad Case.—The N. Y. Courier tells a story which shows how wofully the German emigrants are sometimes imposed upon. One evening last week Alderman Purser of the 4th Ward, was called to the foot of Dover-st. to lend his aid in a case of terrible distress. On reaching the place he found about one hundred and fifty German emigrants, of all ages and both sexes, many of whom were sick, lying about the wharf, some on their trunks, others on bundles, and many having only the earth for a bed, with heaven for a canopy. These unfortunates had just been landed in a lighter from the ship Sardinia, the captain of which had humanely kept them for five days after their arrival, and was then compelled to put them ashore. They had scarcely a dollar among the entire party, and were entirely destitute of the barest necessities. Ald. P. caused the aged and infirm to be taken to the Station House, and food to be given to all; but what future disposition will be made of them remains to be known. It appears that the entire colony were paupers in Hesse Damistadt, and the inhabitants or authorities contributed £8 per head to transport them to this country; and by way of inducements for them to come they were told that on reaching this country the German Emigrant Society would take care of them, and send them out West, where they had plenty of land to give to settlers. It is not necessary to add that the entire representation was false. The German Emigrant Society was organized and is maintained to protect emigrants from frauds like these. The parties who have landed these passengers, fearing that they would too soon become a public charge, had furnished tickets for them to go to Buffalo, but the poor creatures had no means to procure food on the road, and refused to go unless that was also provided.

Sickness among the Volunteers.—The New Orleans Delta learns by the late arrivals from the Rio Grande, that there were near 600 sick volunteers in the hospitals at Camargo, and they were dying very fast. So many were sick that it required near a whole regiment to attend to them. Those whom the Tennesseeans left behind seemed to be particularly unfortunate, for they had to call on the Alabamans to attend the living and bury the dead. As fast as these these men get able to leave the hospital they are discharged and sent home. In fact Gen. T. shows a disposition to discharge all volunteers who are discontented and wish to return to their homes. Though the number of patients in the hospital at Matamoros is larger than at Camargo, the mortrlity is greater at the latter place—near three to one. Those who are unaccustomed to a southern climate when once prostrated by the fever seldom regain their former strength on the Rio Grande, without a change of atmosphere they die off quickly, else become so enfeebled that they are unable to help themselves. A person who has visited the hospitals at the different posts, has said that if one half of the northern and western volunteers who went to the Rio Grande are effective men on the 15th of October, it is more than he looks for.

Suicide of a 'Californian.'—The Rondout Democrat says that John Terwilliger, a young man about 21 years of age, formerly a resident of Kingston, lately enlisted in Stevenson's Californian regiment. He was warmly attached to a young girl of Kingston, and obtained a furlough; he came up a few days ago from the encampment at Governor's Island, and endeavored to persuade the object of his attachment to marry him. A steadfast refusal caused the desperate determination to commit suicide, and he took a dose of arsenic on Tuesday, but the portion was so large as to cause vomiting. Medical aid placed him out of danger, but contrary to his doctor's directions, and from his declarations it is supposed with a steady resolve upon destruction, he drank a large quantity of water, which produced death.

Whale Ships.—The ship McLellen arrived at New London on the 17th ult. from Davis' Straits with (one fish) 150 bbls. of oil. The McLellan is the first ship ever sent from the United States to the Greenland whale fishery. She sailed April 8th, and has consequently been absent about 5 months. The captain states that the ice in the north part of the Straits has remained firm and close all the season, not allowing the ships to cross to Lancaster Sound. Have been to lat. 74 N. Left the lat. of 65 N. Aug. 22. Has not seen a whale since the 11th of May. The English ships took what fish they have early in the season. Had the McLellan sailed in March, she could have probably made a very successful voyage.

The shippers are taking large amounts of Flour, Corn, Wheat, Rye, and Provisions, to the hungry myriads of England and the Continent. All the Rye and much of the Flour goes to France and Germany—the Wheat, Corn, and the larger portion of the Flour, to England. The Irish are, with extreme difficulty, brought to eat Corn Meal; and that the supplies imported some time since by the British Goverment, although offered at a low price, are not yet half exhausted. Probably a large portion of the lower class of the Irish are unacquainted with the proper method of cooking Corn Meal, and that as this knowledge extends the article will become a popular article of diet.

The author of "Charcoal Sketches" asks the following very pertinent question:—"Did you ever know any body to stick to any kind of business, no matter how unpromising, ten years at most, who did not prosper? Not one! no matter how bad it might be at the beginning—if he stuck to it earnestly and faithfully, and tried nothing else; no matter how hard he may have found it sometimes to keep his head above water; still if he persevered, he always came out bright in the long run—did'nt he?—whatever it might be, at the end of ten years, he had made a business for himself."

The Whig State Convention, which met at Utica, N. Y., last week, nominated John Young, of Livingston, for Governor; Hamilton Fish of New York, for Lieut. Governor; Charles Cook, of Chemung, and Thomas Clowes, of Rochester, for Canal Commissioners.

SUMMARY.

The province of Tuscany has been cruelly shaken by an earthquake. Whole villages have been thrown down, and 70 persons, at least, have been killed, nearly 180 wounded, and moro than 4,000 deprived of shelter. The alarm created was naturally most intense; but as there has been no repetition of the shocks, confidence is beginning to survive. In Sicily, also, the earthquake has done great damage and caused the loss of several lives.

An invention for generating ice by artificial means has just been discovered by Messrs. Lings and Keith, the patentees of the ice safe, &c. The ice is produced by means of a powder composed of salts, ammonia, and various chemical mixtures. This powder is placed in a small apparatus, something in the shape of a churn, but smaller in size, and being mixed with water, is kept in motion by a rotary process around whatever is to be cooled. A bottle of water may be frozen solid by this prolonged motion.

An article of similar character could not be imported for less than a dollar a pound.

The Washington correspondent of the U. S. Gazette writes, that the offer of Mediation has been rejected. In the Cabinet meeting the matter was debated at much length and with great spirit, and the unfriendly expression of the prominent speakers of the opposition party in the House of Commons, probably provoked some pretty sharp commentaries. But the sense of the Cabinet was that the courteous tender made by the British Government of its services, required an equal by courteous reply, although it was determined that the offer itself should be declined.

MARRIED,

In the town of Verona, N. Y., on the morning of Sept. 23d, by Eld. C. M. Lewis, Mr. William S. Potter, of Verona, to Miss Esther M. Webster, of Rome.

DIED,

In Henderson, Jefferson Co., N. Y., on the 25th of July last, Deacon Elisha Crosby, aged 65 years. Brother Crosby embraced the religion of Christ some 24 years ago, and was about the same time converted to the Sabbath of the Lord. He was one of the thirteen who at that time were organized into a church known as the Seventh-day Baptist Church of Adams. He was afterwards chosen as Deacon, which office he filled with honor to himself and entire satisfaction to the church. The latter years of his life were marked by a strong and active faith, and a hearty devotion to the interests of the church. He had been, for a number of years, afflicted with a cancerous affection, which, in defiance of the skill of physcians, finally brought him down to the grave. Although his flesh was daily consuming, and his body tormented with the keenest pains, yet his soul was calm and tranquil, big with the hope of immortality, and he patiently waited the coming of his Lord, until the eyes of his faith saw him approaching, when, with shouts of triumph and hosannas to God, he bade his friends farewell,

And sweetly winged his flight away,
To meet his Saviour in the air,
But told his body here to stay,
Till Jesus' image it should bear.

G. M. L.

In Westerly, R. I., Sept. 16th, after a distressing sickness of fever, Mrs. Mary Babcock, consort of Asher M. Babcock, in the 41st year of her age. Sister Babcock was formerly a member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Scott, N. Y., but at the time of her death was a worthy member of the church in Pawcatuck, R. I. She was a devout Christian, and an ornament to the cause of Christ. Her severe illness she endured without a murmur, and sweetly fell asleep in Jesus, without a struggle, leaving no room to doubt of her abundant entrance into the saints' everlasting rest. The loss of her affectionate husband and surviving children is irreparable. The church has lost a great help and a bright ornament. The Female Benevolent Society is bereft of one of its most active members, and the community of one of its best citizens.

A. C.

At his residence in Hopkinton, R. I., Sept. 18th, Deacon Daniel Babcock, in the 85th year of his age, and the 59th year of his office in the Church, where he was leader of the choir for about 50 years. He was early elected to different offices in the State Government, which he held and honored until his age disqualified him for holding office. He was forward in every benevolent enterprise undertaken by the church, and possessed a warm and tender heart towards lost sinners. In his death the poor have lost a peculiar friend, his children an indulgent and kind counsellor and father, his widow an affectionate husband, and the church a pillar in the spiritual temple. But for him to die was gain. The following lines, expressive of his feelings in prospect of death, were written for the occasion by a young sister:—

Welcome, pale messenger! I hail with joy
Thy near approach. The hours move slowly on,
And oft I wish for some kind angel hand
To break the bonds of life, loose my glad wings,
And bid my spirit seek its kindred skies.
O thou hast tarried long, and I have felt
To chide thy lazy wings, and speed thy flight;
For I have had bright visions of that world
Where cherubim their faces veil, and cry,
Worthy the Lamb. Yes, with an eye of faith
I've had a foretaste of that heavenly rest,
Where Jesus reigns, and happy spirits dwell.
But thou art come, and I must not delay;
This tenement of clay I soon will drop,
And haste to join, in your celestial sphere,
The glorious minstrelsy.
Hinder me not, companion, children, friends,
Ye loved ones all, farewell; I see that shore
Where angels wait, and Jesus bids me come,
Farewell—I go to meet my father, God.

Our father's gone—his work on earth is done,
And he, we trust, has found that heavenly rest;
His conflicts now are o'er, the victory's won,
He strikes a golden harp among the blest.

Then let us strive to walk in wisdom's ways,
For these are paths our father long has trod,
That we in peace at last may end our days,
And meet with joy our father, and our God.

LINES TO A MOTHER.

Written by Mrs. Judson just before sailing for Burmah.

Give me my old seat, Mother,
With my head upon thy knee;
I've passed through many a changing scene,
Since thus I sat by thee.
O! let me look into thine eyes—
Their meek, soft, loving light,
Falls like a gleam of holiness,
Upon my heart, to-night.

I've not been long away, Mother;
Few suns have rose and set
Since last the tear-drop on thy cheek
My lips in kisses met.
'Tis but a little time, I know,
But very long it seems;
Though every night I came to thee,
Dear Mother, in my dreams.

The world has kindly dealt, Mother,
By the child thou lov'st so well;
Thy prayers have circled round her path;
And 'twas their holy spell
Which made that path so dearly bright;
Which strewed the roses there;
Which gave the light, and cast the balm,
On every breath of air.

I bear a happy heart, Mother;
A happier never beat;
And, even now, new buds of hope
Are bursting at my feet.
Oh! Mother! life may be a dream;
But if such dreams are given,
While at the portal thus we stand,
What are the truths of Heaven!

I bear a happy heart, Mother;
Yet, when fond eyes I see,
And hear soft tones and winning words,
I ever think of thee.
And then, the tear my spirit weeps
Unbidden fills my eye;
And, like a homeless dove, I long
Unto thy breast to fly.

Then I am very sad, Mother,
I'm very sad and lonely;
O! there's no heart whose inmost fold
Opes to me like thine own!
Though sunny smiles wreathe blooming lips,
While love-tones meet my ear;
My Mother, one fond glance of thine
Were thousand times more dear.

Then with a closer clasp, Mother,
Now hold me to thy heart;
I'd feel it beating 'gainst my own,
Once more, before we part.
And, Mother, to this love-lit spot,
When I am far away,
Come oft—too oft thou canst not come!—
And for thy darling pray.

INCIDENT IN THE CATACOMBS AT ROME.

Thus wandered we farther, and even farther, between the white walls, the inclosed vineyards, and the old ruins of the baths, till we were out of the city.

Not many paces from the grotto stands—or rather stood, for there are now only a few remains of it left—a little and wholly desolate house, built above one of the descents to the catacombs. These were, as is well known, in ancient times, connecting links between Rome and the surrounding cities; in later times, however, they have in part fallen in, and in part been built up, because they served as concealment for robbers and smugglers. The entrance through the burial-vaults in St. Sebastian's Church, and this one through the desolate house, were then the only two in existence; and I almost think that we were the last who descended by this, for shortly after our adventure it also was shut up; and only the one through the church, under the conduct of a monk, remains now open to strangers.

Deep below, hollowed out of the soft puzzolan earth, the one passage crosses another. Their multitude, their similarity one to another, are sufficient to bewilder even him who knows the principal direction. I had formed no idea of the whole, and the painter felt so confident, that he had no hesitation in taking me, a little boy, down with him. He lighted his candle, and took another with him in his pocket, fastened a ball of twine to the opening where we descended, and our wandering commenced. Anon the passages were so low that I could not go upright; anon they elevated themselves to lofty vaults, and, where the one crossed the other, expanded themselves into great quadrangles. We passed through the Rotunda with the small stone altar in the middle, where the early Christians, persecuted by the pagans, secretly performed their worship. Federigo told me of the fourteen Popes, and the many thousand martyrs, who here lie buried; we held the light against the great cracks in the tombs, and saw the yellow bones within. We advanced yet some steps onward, and then came to a stand, because we were at the end of the twine. The end of this Federigo fastened to his buttonhole, stuck the candle among some stones, and then began to sketch the deep passage. I sat close beside him upon one of the stones; he had desired me to fold my hands and to look upward. The candle was nearly burned out, but a whole one lay hard by; besides which he had brought a tinder-box, by the aid of which he could light the other, in case this suddenly went out.

My imagination fashioned to itself a thousand wonderful objects in the infinite passages which opened themselves, and revealed to us an impenetrable darkness. All was quite still—the falling water-drops alone sent forth a monotonous sound. As I thus sat, wrapped in my own thoughts, I was suddenly terrified by my friend the painter, who heaved a strange sigh, and sprang about, but always in the same spot. Every moment he stooped down to the ground, as if he would snatch up something—then he lighted the larger candle and sought about. I became so terrified at his singular behavior that I got up and began to cry.

"For God's sake, sit still, child!" said he—"for God in heaven's sake!" And again he began staring on the ground.

"I will go up again!" I exclaimed—"I will not stop down here!" I then took him by the hand and strove to draw him with me.

"Child! child! thou art a noble fellow!" said he; "I will give thee pictures and cakes—there, thou hast money!" and he took his purse out of his pocket and gave me all that was in it; but I felt that his hand was icy cold, and that he trembled. On this I grew more uneasy, and called my mother; but now he seized me firmly by the shoulder, and shaking me violently, said, "I will beat thee if thou art not quiet!" Then he bound his pocket handkerchief round my arm, and held me fast, but bent himself down to me, the next moment, kissed me vehemently, called me his dear little Antonio, and whispered, "Do thou also pray to the Madonna!"

"Is the string lost?" I asked.

"We will find it—we will find it!" he replied; and began searching again. In the mean time the lesser light was quite burnt out, and the larger one, from its continual agitation, melted, and burnt his hand, which only increased his distress. It would have been quite impossible to have found our way back without the string—every step would only have led us deeper down, where no one could save us.

After vainly searching, he threw himself upon the ground, cast his arm around my neck, and sighed, "Thou poor child!" I then wept bitterly, for it seemed to me that I never more should reach my home. He clasped me so closely to him as he lay on the ground, that my hand slid under him. I involuntarily grasped the sand, and found the string between my fingers.

"Here it is!" I exclaimed.

He seized my hand, and became, as it were, frantic for joy; for our life actually hung upon this single thread. We were saved.

Necessity the Mother of Invention.—The following anecdote was related to us a few days since by a friend of ours, of Day & Martin, whose blacking is so extensively used in this country. They were once poor servant boys in the city of London, but by chance one of them obtained a recipe for making blacking, and they resolved to open shop. Accordingly a small cellar was obtained, and notice given, through the newspapers, to the world in general, and the city of London in particular, that "Day and Martin had opened a shop," and were the manufacturers of blacking. But there were other establishments of long standing and that had the capital too, and they found that it would be impossible to live by their new business, unless their joint ingenuity could devise some means to "raise the steam." They at last hit upon the following plan. Several splendid suits of livery were purchased, intended for the servants of noblemen of different ranks. They dressed in their new suits, would go to the different shops where blacking was usually sold, being always careful not to apply to any of their own customers, and inquire for Day & Martin's blacking, and usually the shop-keeper having none of Day & Martin's would insist upon sending some other kind, but it was of no use. Their lord or count must have Day & Martin's, as that was superior to any other. In a short time by this means they raised public demand for the article, and no other blacking was more used among the nobility than Day & Martin's. They are now among the most wealthy merchants of London. One of Mr. Day's daughters having married but a short time since, her father gave her as a marriage portion £100,000. We find that most of the wealthy men of this country commenced in life with no other capital than a good character, and that they accumulated their wealth by prudence, perseverance and close attention to business.

Discovery of Wine.—Sir J. Malcom, in his history of Persia, states that wine was first discovered by Jemsheed, one of the earliest monarchs of the empire, by the following accident: He was immoderately fond of grapes, and desired to preserve some, which were placed in a large vessel, and lodged in a vault for future use. When the vessel was opened, the grapes had fermented; their juice was so acid that the king believed it must be poisonous; he had some bottles filled with it, and poison written upon each; these were placed in a room. It happened that one of his favorite ladies was affected with nervous headache; the pain distracted her so much that she desired death; observing a bottle with poison written on it, she swallowed the contents. The wine, for such it had become, overpowered the lady, who fell into a sound sleep, and awoke much refreshed. Delighted with the remedy, she repeated the dose so often that the king's poison was all drank. He soon discovered this, and forced the lady to confess what she had done. A quantity of wine was made, and Jemsheed and all his court drank of this beverage, which, from the manner of its discovery, is to this day known in Persia by the name of Zeher e-khoosh, or the delightful poison.

Permanent Value of Knowledge.—One of the most agreeable consequences of knowledge, is the respect and importance which it communicates to old age. Men rise in character often as they increase in years; they are venerable from what they have acquired, and pleasing from what they can impart. If they outlive their faculties, the mere frame itself is respected for what it once contained. But women (such is their unfortunate style of education) hazard every thing upon one cast of the die; when youth is gone, all is gone. No human creature gives his admiration for nothing; either the eye must be charmed, or the understanding gratified. A woman must talk wisely or look well. Every human being must put up with the coldest civility who has neither the charms of youth nor the wisdom of age. Neither is there the slightest commiseration for decayed accomplishments; no man mourns over the fragments of a dancer, or drops a tear on the relics of musical skill. They are flowers destined to perish; but the decay of great talents is always the subject of solemn pity; and even when their last memorial is over, their ruins and vestiges are regarded with pious affection. [Sidney Smith.

◆

Economy of Time.—Elfred, King of the West Saxons, divided the day and night into three equal parts; eight hours whereof he employed in reading, meditation, and acts of piety and devotion; eight hours in his own necessary accommodations in relation to his health, repose, and the business of his family; and the other eight in the public affairs of the Kingdom; and was wont to say, he had no time to waste in pleasure; nor had he any need of recreations, for he had pleasure enough in the conscientious discharge of his duty; and his business, as a king, was his recreation.

◆

Grass Seed.—One of the most successful and economical modes of securing timothy seed, which is practiced by some farmers to great advantage, is to reap the tops of the grass while it is yet standing in the meadow, to be afterwards thrashed and cleaned, and then the rest of the grass is mowed and manufactured into hay. The seed thus costs the labor of cutting and thrashing, the remainder affords the usual crop of hay.

Age of Sheep.—The age of sheep may be known by examining the front teeth. They are eight in number, and appear during the first year, all of a small size. In the second year, the two middle ones fall out, and their place is supplied by two new teeth, which are easily distinguished by being of a larger size. In the third year, two other small teeth, one from each side, drop out and are replaced by two large ones, so that there are now four large teeth in the middle, and two pointed ones on each side. In the fourth year, the large teeth are six in number, and only two small ones remain, one at each end of the range. In the fifth year the remaining small teeth are lost, and the whole front teeth are large. In the sixth year, the whole begin to be worn; and in the seventh, sometimes sooner, some fall out or are broken.

◆

New Petrifying Process.—At the Marquis of Northampton's conversazione, a few years ago, Dr. Jaques Silvestri exhibited some samples of a process by which all organic substances can be brought to a consistency approaching petrification, so as to be preserved to an indefinite period. The head of a female was shown, petrified to a degree of intensity approaching stone, the features retaining all the expression of life. Fishes, reptiles, insects, birds, and other specimens of natural history, were on the table; the plumage, fur, and all the other adjuncts of nature, retaining the same brilliancy of color, firmness, and flexibility, they had at the time of death. A bouquet of flowers was seen preserved, with an exactitude and perfection beyond conception.

◆

New Invention.—An invention somewhat quaint as well as novel, has been patented, for the protection of bees against the ravages of the moth. The invention partakes of operating mechanism, and is to be operated by hens. The hives are arranged in a tightly-joined house, provided with ventilated doors of wire gauze, which are to be regularly shut at night, and opened in the morning. The patent was granted for combining, with the door of the bee-house, a hen roost, in such a manner that the weight of the fowls going to roost, closes the door at night, and by reversed action on their leaving, opens in the morning.

◆

Ingenious Invention.—Two very ingenious instruments have been recently exhibited at Washington, the invention of two citizens of New York. One is an astronomical machine, by Mr. F. A. Russell, designed to show more completely and accurately all the systems of the heavens, and all the motions of our own solar system, at any and every season of the year. The other is styled the self-acting meteorological register, embracing in a machine, the anemometer, rain gague, barometer, thermometer and tide register, and which, by a most ingenious contrivance, records, of itself, the various changes in its several departments. The maker is a young man, Mr. Chauncey Warriner.

◆

Experiment in Seed Corn.—John S. Yeomans, of Columbia, Ct., gives an account of some experiments he has made in selecting seed corn. He sums up the conclusions to which he arrives as follows:

"1. That there is a tendency in corn to degenerate—that a variety after having been planted for a series of years is not likely to ear well or to fill out on the ear, though the stalk may be luxuriant.

"2. That an early variety, taken from a higher latitude and cultivated here, will increase in the size of the ears, be more prolific in grain, with a less quantity of stalks."

Mr. Yeomans says his principal object in this communication 'is to impress upon the minds of agriculturalists, the importance of occasionally changing their seed corn.'

◆

Manuring.—Mixing manure with the soil is of the greatest consequence; and it is especially so, when applied in the latter part of the summer for the wheat crop. Wheat will not bear an abundant supply of unmixed manure buried in large masses and lumps beneath the soil. When manure therefore is spread, it should be harrowed at least half a dozen times well, with the surface soil, before the plough turns it under. It thus becomes thoroughly broken, the soil is made mellow, and the whole is intermixed. So important is this operation, that one-half or even one-third the manure will sometimes be equally efficacious where this practice is adopted.

◆

Redeeming Time.—Dean Swift, when he claimed at the usual time the degree of A. B., was so deficient as to obtain it only by special favor, a term used to denote want of merit. Of this disgrace he was so much ashamed that he resolved from that time to study eight hours a day, and continued his industry for seven years, with what improvement is sufficiently known. This part of his history well deserves to be remembered; it may afford useful admonition and perhaps encouragement to young men, whose abilities have been made for a time useless by their passions or pleasures, and who, having lost one part of life in idleness, are tempted to throw away the remainder in despair.

◆

Judge Gridley and the Rumsellers.—It is stated that a case of violation of the License law came before Judge Gridley, at the late circuit court in Oswego county. The jury, without leaving their box, immediately brought in a verdict of "guilty." The Judge, after having it hinted to him by sundry "respectable" individuals in the village that $25 would be as much as was usual to impose as a penalty in such cases, and would be quite satisfactory to all the parties concerned—to which hints he gave a respectful and silent hearing—had the prisoner brought into court, and imposed upon him a fine of $150, and ordered that he stand committed until it was paid.

It is creditable to the mechanic arts, that very frequently we find mechanics attaining very high honors. Take, for example, the case of Sam. Houston. Twenty-five years ago he was a house carpenter in Nashville, and while he plied the jack plane he was weaving bright fancies for the future, which were all, through his energy and perseverance, realized. Governor of Tennessee, President of Texas, and Senator in Congress—a mechanic, a legislator, a general, an executive, and a senator. Where the honors of a country are freely open to all alike, neither birth nor wealth should shrink from a union with the mechanic arts.

Drunkenness
expels reason, drowns memory, distempers the body,
defaces beauty, diminishes strength,
corrupts the blood, inflames the liver,
weakens the brain, turns men into walking

VARIETY.

In order to remove an immense mass of rock in tunnelling for the Colerian and Londonderry railway, it was advertised that a tremendous explosion would be caused at Downhill. About 12,000 people attended to witness it, from all parts of Ulster and North of Scotland. There were 12 steamers in the offing! 35 cwt. of powder was employed. The mass dislodged was 22,000 tons. In the tunnel previously excavated, 500 persons afterwards partook of a dejeuner. The place was illuminated by 1,200 lamps. It was quite a gala scene.

A Greek physiologist, M. Eselija, residing at Athens, asserts that by the assistance of electric light, he has been enabled to see through the human body, and thus to detect the existence of digestion and of circulation, and has seen the nerves in motion. This is the most extraordinary discovery of the age, and promises, if true, to lead to the most astounding results. He has given it the name of 'Anthroposcope.'

There are six sorts of people at whose hands you need not expect much kindness. The sordid and narrow-minded think of nobody but themselves; the lazy will not take the trouble to serve you; the overgrown rich man is above minding one who needs his assistance; the poor and unhappy have neither spirit nor ability; the good-natured fool, however willing, is not capable of serving you.

The New York Post says, "We say unto poor men, rejoice, for in the next five years you will be taxed only two cents a bushel for salt, whereas you have heretofore been paying ten." The salt may come cheap enough, but if the poor men don't have to pay pretty dear for the pepper that has been used upon the poor Mexicans, down there among the Chapporals, we miss our guess—that's all.

Among the petitions that have been presented, for the repeal of laws prohibiting or restricting the sale of ardent spirits, not one has been inscribed with the name of a woman. On the other hand, millions have petitioned for effectual restraint to be thrown around this pernicious traffic.

The literal meaning of the word Manhattan, or Manhatta, as it was originally called, is "the place where we all got drunk;" being a testimony of the Indians to the effect of the "mad waters," which Hendrick Hudson, the discoverer of the island, gave to them on his first interview.

The most suitable time for pruning the peach, as well as for most other kinds of stone-fruit, is in autumn, just as the leaves begin to fall, when the sap is in a downward motion. At this period, a more perfect cicatrization takes place, than when the trees are pruned in winter or spring.

One half of the whole nett revenue of Great Britain, is devoted to paying the interest on the cost of former wars, and nearly one half of the remainder is spent in preparing for future wars, viz. in maintaining the army and navy.

When we reflect that every mother has children of surprising genius, it is a matter of serious inquiry where all the ordinary men come from who cross our path in every-day life.

Mr. Josiah Eaton, an old man, nearly eighty years of age, has just completed the great feat of walking a thousand miles in a thousand hours. The performance took place at the Caledonia Springs.

The bark of a willow tree, burned to ashes, and mixed with strong vinegar, and applied to the part affected, will remove all warts, corns, or excrescences, on any part of the body.

Douglass Jerold says, "that as old Mother Eve created the necessity of wearing that useful garment called the shirt, by the sons of Adam, therefore it is but just for her daughters to wash them."

The Pacha of Egypt, being informed that the physicians of this country charged for their services according to the number of their visits, inquired "if the patients ever got well."

A French girl, writing to her father, now in this country, says: "Would that Columbus had never discovered America, since it keeps you so long absent."

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institntion, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

DE RUYTER INSTITUTE.

TEACHERS' Classses will be formed at the opening of the fall term, September 16, to continue seven weeks, which will be exercised in practical teaching under the immediate supervision of the Principals, with a thorough review of the common-school studies. Lectures on the theory of teaching, and other important subjects, will form a part of the daily exercises. The Principals will be assisted by Hon. Edward Cooper and the County Superintendents of Madison and Cortland Counties. All the improvements and important suggestions of the day in the art of teaching, will be brought before the class for their consideration.

SUNDAY LAWS:

Their repeal would not injure pure Christianity, the morals of Citizens, or the interests of the State.

There are many pious people who cherish a very great veneration for the first day of the week. We respect their piety, but we cannot sympathize with their errors. Many persons, brought up under the shadow of the hierarchies of the earth, cherish the same veneration for national establishments of religion, and verily think that if they were abolished the devils would hold a jubilee over the downfall of religion. We who live in the United States have often been called a nation of infidels, because we have no national establishment of religion. The hierarchists of Europe predicted the entire abandonment of religion from the adoption of the voluntary principle in this country, at the formation of the national government. But what intelligent American would not pity such persons, rather than sympathize with them? We know that religion is better maintained, has more hold upon the public mind, and more modifies the manners of the people, in the United States, than in any hierarchal country on earth. There are two reasons for this. 1st. Because, being voluntarily adopted, it enters deeper into the affections of the recipients. 2d. Being voluntarily supported and carried forward, it gives a wider scope to individual action, and calls forth more personal effort. What is true of one class of religious duties, would be equally true of all others. It would be as true of the weekly Sabbath as of any other religious duty, were it disencumbered of State alliances. Nothing tends so much to develop individual effort as a sense of personal responsibility. On the other hand, nothing withers up the energies of a people more than to separate them from an interest by committing it to the hands of a few. It is thus with respect to the Sunday Laws. So long as the magistracy are made the chief guardians of Sunday, the people will interest themselves but little upon the subject, and Sunday Conventions with their resolutions, and Sunday laws with their penalties, to all practical purposes, will evaporate. But place this observance where other religious observances are placed, on the individual obligation of all good citizens, and what is obligatory will be urged by each one upon his fellow, and what is valid and true will be defended with all the tenacity with which church rites and Christian doctrines are now defended by the different sects in our land. Repeal all the Sunday Laws, and we doubt not that the zeal for the honor of the Christian Sabbath would in one year be greatly increased. This is the most certain way which can be hit upon for waking up the slumbering consciences of Sunday desecrators. If there is any thing valid or convincing in the arguments for the observance of the first day, rather than the seventh day, they will doubtless be presented with more zeal by their advocates, and attended to with more care by those who observe the seventh day. Indeed, it may be safely affirmed, that "it is error alone that needs the support of government. Truth can stand itself." The sensitiveness and unwillingness of certain legislators to have this subject discussed, betrays either a want of confidence in the power of truth, or a fear lest truth should not be found on their side.

As all pure Christianity is founded upon the revealed will of God, contained in the holy Scriptures, it does not need the support of human legislation, nor would it lose any of its saving power by the withdrawal of those legislative enactments which are now thrown around it. As to its controversial merits, it certainly ill-becomes a republican legislature to decide a theological question by legislative enactments. Just so far as human authority intermeddles with the divine by legislating upon the subject, it removes the duty from those divine sanctions by which it is attended, and presents it only with those human considerations by which they have surrounded it. The awful sanctions of the Supreme Ruler of heaven and earth are kept out of sight by the constant presentation of human considerations. It is thus that religion has lost its hold upon the consciences of men, wherever it has been established by law. The only way to restore confidence, is to withdraw those human considerations, and leave religion to the force of the divine sanctions. It is thus with the Sabbath. If the legislature judge it suitable for them to decide upon a theological question, and plead that the divine law requires them to enforce Sabbath-keeping, as Dr. Humphery contends, then we say that they are bound to hear us, as one of the parties to that government, and we shall put in our caveat against an infraction of God's law under pretence of keeping it.

Those persons who refuse equal rights to the observers of the seventh day, on the plea that it would endanger the observance of the first day, are as far behind the spirit of an unfettered Gospel as are the hierarchists of Europe. This reasoning all proceeds upon the supposition, that it is the duty of State Governments to uphold religion—which we do not believe. The State is bound to protect the persons of its inhabitants in the exercise of religion, but with their religious observances it has of right nothing to do. Fines imposed for religious belief, or for the neglect or the observance of religious rites or days, differ not in principle from the fine, the rack, and the axe, of the Spanish Inquisition.

We are often told that to abolish the Sunday laws would be to open the floodgates of immorality. This is so frequently reiterated from the pulpit and the press, and in the legislative hall, that thousands, who never think for themselves, verily suppose that it would be so. Let us look at the matter. Morality necessarily presents itself to us in two aspects; first, as it affects our own persons, estates, and condition, and those of our fellows; secondly, as an article of religious faith, and an element of religious character. Religion always ought to enjoin and require morality. But State law is forbidden by our Constitution from enjoining and requiring religion at all! In what respect, then, is morality an object of State government? Doubtless as it respects the persons, estates, and condition of the citizens; and in this respect only. Such things as fraud, theft, adultery, nuisances, &c., are branches of the great law of morality, and cognizable by the State law because they affect the estates, persons, and canditions of the citizens. The question now before us is, in what manner will it injure the persons, estates or condition of other citizens, for a portion of the citizens to secularize the first day of the week, while others observe it as a sacred day? To us it appears as though the very statement of the question, was sufficient to rebut the objection, and to draw from every candid man the answer, In no respect whatever! We know that men can be honest, and temperate, and chaste, who do not regard Sunday. One man's neglect of Sunday does not subject another to the necessity of neglecting it, any more than does the neglect of other religious duties. In some families reading the Scriptures and prayer are attended to daily, and doubtless it is, or may be, a great benefit to hired persons to live in such families. Yet they often choose to leave them, and become members of irreligious families, because they can obtain higher wages, or enjoy some other temporal advantages. But must a law be passed to oblige all house-keepers to maintain daily family worship, because without such law many persons would neglect it, and young people and hired persons would grow up without these religious influences, or leave their places and employments for less profitable business? This would be equally just and reasonable with those laws which require all to observe Sunday on the plea that all the people of the State need one day in a week for worship. There are as many persons in the State who believe that daily family worship ought to be maintained, as there are who believe that Sunday ought to be religiously observed. Family worship is as beneficial to the public morals as the observance of Sunday. Yet if a law to enforce it was seriously proposed, it would meet with universal reprobation, and could never be enforced. So with Sunday laws—they are not necessary to support the morals of community.

We have been told, that all this looks plausible in theory, but we are afraid that it would not work well in practice. We reply, Try it. We have FACTS at hand in abundance to sustain our position. Let it be remembered, that whatever influence the Sunday laws may have to promote the morality of the people, they do not affect all of them. There are more immoral persons who profess to observe Sunday as a religious day, than there are who profess to reject it, probably ten to one. We admit that they would probably have been immoral had there been no Sunday laws. So also those persons in the community who are moral and upright, would doubtless have been so had there been no Sunday laws. One account, therefore, ought to balance the other.

But how is it with those who believe that neither the fear of God, nor regard for man, obliges them either to keep the first day, or to honor the Sunday laws? Are they the vicious and immoral? Or, are they made virtuous and moral by the restraints of the Sunday laws, when they cannot escape from them? We answer, Neither. It is said that there is not a single Jew in any prison in the United States, nor has there been for years, except the Jews in Richmond, who were imprisoned for Sunday-breaking! One of the opponents of our petitions in the New Jersey Legislature, said before that body, "There is not a more sober, sedate, orderly people in the world, than the Seventh-day Baptists. Those that I have known in Salem and Cumberland Counties, are above the average of other denominations for honesty." A Presbyterian merchant recently said, "they are among our most prompt and punctual customers." Tho Quakers are proverbial for their probity and purity of manners. We are told upon good authority, that there are towns in which the Quaker influence has long prevailed, where there is no one willing to accept the office of magistrate, because there is no occasion for one. In one township there is no tavern, no magistrate, no constable, no clergyman, no lawyer. In another thickly settled township, it is stated that there has never been any case of assault and battery since its first settlement, a period of more than one hundred years.

It is religious instruction, however and whenever imparted, that produces moral principle. And that we presume no sect would be willing that the legislature should choose for or administer to them, unless they could choose all the Legislators and the Executive. From this we see that the morals of the people are not dependent upon the Sunday laws, nor would they be injured by their repeal. S. D.

ONE TRACT BEFORE I DIE.

A clergyman furnished a Tract for the American Tract Society, entitled, "What is it to believe on Christ?" which the Society published. At a recent Tract meeting in Portland, the author stated that he had heard of more conversions from that one Tract than from all his preaching besides.

Who would not have a tract in circulation, going perhaps to "earth's remotest bounds?" While he is toiling away in one language, with a congregation of two or three hundred, he may send the printed page in many languages to congregations of many thousands.

But who knows that he can furnish a tract which shall be adapted to do extensive good? Sure enough, who knows? God only knows; and any man may try what he can do; and when he least expects it, guided by an ever-living, moving Spirit, the work may be done. Little did John Bunyan suppose he was writing such a book as the "Pilgrim's Progress," when in Bedford jail he took up his pen. Hear what he says:

"When at the first I took my pen in hand,
Thus for to write, I did not understand
That I at all should make a little book
In such a mode; nay I had undertook
To make another; which when almost done,
Before I was aware, I this begun."

And after it was written it came very near never seeing the light through the indifference of his friends, as often happens to books; for he says,

"Well, when I had thus put mine ends together,
I showed them others, that I might see whether
They would condemn them, or them justify:
And some said let them live; some let them die;
Some said, John print it; others said not so;
Some said it might do good, others said no.

"Now I was in a strait, and did not see
Which was the best thing to be done by me;
At last, I thought, since ye are thus divided,
I print it will; and so the case decided."

He who would do good must often "draw the bow at a venture," trusting to God to guide the arrow in its flight. God only knows which shall succeed, "this or that." [Am. Messenger.

STIFLED CONVICTIONS.

More than twenty years ago I had the pleasure of spending some time in two places in the State of New York, in which powerful revivals of religion were in progress by the blessing of God upon the labors of Rev. Dr. Nettleton.

In the course of the first revival in the town of ——, a gentleman of my acquaintance became deeply anxious for his soul. He wept, he mourned, he sighed, and no doubt prayed for days and days together. But he was proud and obstinate—he would not submit to God.

One day his pious, amiable wife, whose anxieties about her husband were almost beyond control, came into his room, and finding him still lingering in his wretched condition, and solemnly fearing that he would grieve away the Holy Spirit, and turn back to the world, she fell upon her knees in his presence, and fervently prayed for him. The husband's state of mind after that prayer may be conjectured, but not easily described. He literally writhed in mental anguish.

Dr. Nettleton was the wisest man that I ever saw in tracing out the operations of the human mind when under the influences of the Divine Spirit. He seemed to possess almost intuitive knowledge of this subject. When he saw a sinner long lingering under conviction, he judged that there was a special cause, and he was pretty sure to detect that cause.

One day, after my friend Lambert, (for so I will call him,) had been struggling with and stifling his convictions for some time, Dr. N. called to see him once more. He talked with him, pointed him to the Saviour, and perhaps prayed with him. But there Lambert lingered still—a miserable, disconsolate, lost sinner. No light, no hope. What could be the matter? Dr. N. smelt ardent spirits. That was enough. He immediately intimated to Lambert that he was drinking with a view to drive away his convictions; and I believe the latter did not deny the charge. Dr. Nettleton solemnly warned the wretched man and left him. What was the result? The Spirit of God left my friend, and the unclean spirit who had gone out returned to his old habitation, accompanied by seven other spirits more wicked than himself, and the last state of that man was worse than the first.

Perhaps ten months pass away, when a blast and a mildew rest upon all that pertains to this miserable man. Nothing prospers in his hands. His business, though formerly flourishing, is in ruins; and he is compelled to leave the beautiful house in which he lived. This is not the worst—he is given up of God. He is undone, to all appearance, for time and for eternity. His lovely wife and his interesting children are disconsolate and broken-hearted.

'Go with me now through yonder street of the town at night, and what do we see? There lies poor, wretched, ruined Lambert, a drunkard in the ditch! O God, what is man when left of thy Spirit! Let a veil, for the present, cover the sequel.

Reader, if the Spirit of God strive with you, as you value salvation grieve Him not away.

PREACH CHRIST CRUCIFIED.

Extract from a sermon by Rev. Dr. HAMILTON, a minister of Leeds, Eng., before the students of Cheshunt College.

"Preach Christ crucified! Turn not aside from this, under the temptation of meeting some question of the day, or some bearing of the public mind. There is much mystic verbiage, which some esteem to be of transcendental depth. There is much pantheism, which some regard as original and sublime. Your versatility will often be urged to follow after these conceits. You will be told of their amazing influence. They really are nothing. They are the bubbles of the hour. They cannot boast even of novelty. I conjure you, care little for them. Yours is not a discretionary theme. It is unchanging. Keep to it. Abide by it. It is one, but it is an infinite one! It is the word of Christ, divinely great and true! Its rigidness can never hamper your thoughts. Its reiteration can never weary your inquiry. At no point can it restrict you. It is a large place. It is a boundless range. It is a mine of wealth. It is a firmament of power. Whither would ye go from it? It is the unwinding of all great principles! It is the expansion of glorious thoughts. It is the capacity of all blessed emotions! O Calvary, we turn to thee! Our nature, a wreck, a chaos, only canst thou adjust! We have an aching void which only thou canst fill! We have pantings and longings which only thou canst satisfy! Be thou the strength and the charm of our inward life! Be thou the earnestness of our deepest interest! Be thou our inspiration, impulsion, divinity, and all! Our tears never relieved us until thou taughtest us to weep! Our smiles only mock us, until thou badest us rejoice! We knew no way of peace, until we found our way to thee! Hope was banished from us, until its dove flew downwards from thee upon our hearts! All was dormant until thou didst stir; all was dull, until thou didst excite us! Our eyes are still lifted to thee, as to the hill from which cometh all our help! Our feet shall stand upon thee, O high mountain, and thou shalt make them beautiful, while we publish the glad tidings of 'Christ crucified!'"

THE JOYS OF PRAYER.

Even in those parts of prayer that might seem only painful, there is a pleasure that would be ill exchanged for this world's most boasted bliss. In the bitterness of repentant sorrow for sin there is a sweetness, in the agony of fervent supplication for pardon there is a joy, as much superior to the best the world can boast, as the heavens are higher than the earth;

The broadest smile unfeeling folly wears,
Less pleasing far than 'prayer's repentant' tears.

Oh! what a happy, heaven-foretasting life might the children of God enjoy on earth, if they would live a life of prayer!

How calm might they be in the midst of the wildest storms. How joyful in the midst of the deepest tribulations. How composed and cheerful, while all around was agitation and alarm—the smile of heaven sparkling around their path, the peace of heaven dwelling within their hearts.

They say that travelers in Alpine regions are often encompassed with a clear atmosphere and a cloudless sunshine, while traversing the summits of those lofty mountains, at the very time that the world below them is all wrapped in mists and darkness, and thunder-clouds are bursting at their feet. Even thus does prayer lift the believer to a loftier and sterner region, far, far above the clouds and storms that darken and distract the world below. In that region of purity and peace, the atmosphere is clear and calm; and the light of God's countenance shines brightly on the believer's soul, while he sees the thunder-clouds of earthly care and sorrow rolling beneath his feet, thus realizing the beautiful illustrations of the poet:—

As some tall cliff, that lifts its awful form,
Swells from the vale, and midway leaves the storm,
Though round its base the rolling clouds are spread,
Eternal sunshine settles on its head!

KIND WORDS.

The destiny, temporal and eternal, of individuals, often turns upon a single word spoken in kindness or unkindness, at particular crises of their existence. The celebrated Dr. Adam Clark was, till about nine years of age, the perfection of dullness in the estimation of his teachers. As such, when at this age, he was pointed out by his teacher to a stranger of respectability who visited the school. The stranger, with great interest and affection, replied, that he thought the teacher had mistaken the genius of the boy; that he had talents, and might yet attain to eminence in the literary world. That kind word struck a spark in the mind of the child, which made the future man one of the lights of earth. On the other hand, an unkind or discouraging word spoken at just such a crisis, may effectually break the spirits, or turn the heart into bitterness, and render the object ever after, the companion of the foul spirits of earth and hell. With what feelings do we all remember words of kindness or unkindness spoken to us at those periods of our existence, when our hearts were made of tenderness, and spoken by those whose words were as life and death, to our spirits.

'Then deem it not an idle thing
A pleasant word to speak;
The face you wear, the thoughts you bring,
A heart may heal or break.'

GENTLE WORDS.

BY C. D. STEWART.

A young rose in the summer time
Is beautiful to me,
And glorious the many stars
That glimmer on the sea;
But Gentle Words and loving hearts,
And hands to clasp my own,
Are better than the brightest flowers
Or stars that ever shone!

The Sun may warm the Grass to life.
The Dew the drooping Flower,
And eyes grow bright and watch the light
Of Autumn's opening hour—
But words that breathe of tenderness,
And smiles we know are true,
Are warmer than the Summer time,
And brighter than the Dew.

It is not much the World can give,
With all its subtle art,
And Gold or Gems are not the things
To satisfy the heart;
But oh! if those who cluster round
The altar and the hearth,
Have gentle words and loving smiles,
How beautiful is earth!

A MAN OF ONE IDEA.

Luther, like all great reformers, was a man of one idea; but that one idea was not what historians have generally supposed; it was not civil liberty, nor liberty of opinion, nor opposition to forms, nor any abstract love of truth, but the one idea was, Jesus—Saviour. No human being ever felt with deeper anguish what it was to be lost. Language cannot have a more terrible earnestness than that wherein he has described the death agony through which he passed when he felt his sins, and the majesty of God, and the desperate hopelessness of any effort to approach him, or bring his fallen nature up to that immeasurable purity. "It was all over with me," he says, "the sin of my nature tormented me night and day, there was no good in life, sin had taken possession of me, my free will hated God's judgments, it was dead to good, anguish drove me to despair; nothing remained but to die and sink to hell." "Let them threaten me with banishment and death, with torture and the stake," he says in a later letter, "what is all this to me? It all makes no impression on me. It is all the merest trifle to the agony I endured in my religious life before I found a Saviour." Now, to a soul in this state of religious anxiety, the whole Catholic system is one great and gloomy barrier, standing between it and its Redeemer. Luther struggled like a giant, he fought as for life, and broke through the dark obstacle, and found a Saviour; he found, he embraced, he believed, he felt, he knew that he was saved, he felt it with a joy as mighty and overwhelming as had been his anguish. Thenceforth, there was to him but one mighty idea—salvation and a Saviour. [Mrs. Stowe.

A PRISONER FOR CHRIST.

The Rev. J. Bilderbury, missionary in India, states, that about the year 1831 he conversed with a Hindoo, and gave him tracts and a New Testament. These he carried home, twenty-five miles, and read. They showed him that he was a sinner, and directed him to "the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world." Gradually he desisted from idol worship, and discontinued his contributions to the support of the temple. He was the father, the master, the husband, the man of property; but when his children perceived what was moving in his mind, and at length heard him propose to visit the missionary, they took fetters and bound his hands and his feet. These fetters he wore from 1832 to 1845, when there was a wedding in the family, and they took off the fetters to allow him to attend. Concealing his tracts and Testament in his clothes, amidst the excitement of the festival, he gave them the slip, and went to Mr. Bilderbury, saying, 'I wish to be a Christian.' He gave Mr. Bilderbury the history of the state of his mind, and what he had suffered, and showed the wounds inflicted by the fetters during more than twelve years. He tarried three or four weeks, to receive instruction, and giving good evidence of true conversion, was then admitted into full fellowship with the church.

CHRISTIANITY ABOVE CONTROVERSY.

Those who really value Christianity, and believe in its importance, not only to the spiritual welfare of man, but to the saftey and prosperity of human society, rejoice that in its revelations and teachings there is so much which mounts above controversial acknowledgment. While many things about it are disputed, or are dark, they still plainly see its foundation, and its main pillars; and they behold in it a sacred structure rising up to the heavens. They wish its general principles, and all its great truths, to be spread over the whole earth. But those who do not value Christianity, nor believe in its importance to society or individuals, cavil about sects and schisms, and ring monotonous changes upon the shallow and so-often refuted objections founded on alledged variety of discordant creeds and clashing doctrines. [Hon. D. Webster.

A GEM FROM COLERIDGE.

Here are beautiful sentences from the pen of Coleridge. Nothing can be more eloquent—nothing more true:—"Call not that man wretched who, whatever else he suffers as to pain inflicted or pleasure denied, has a child for whom he hopes, and on whom he doats. Poverty may grind him to dust, obscurity may cast its darkest mantle over him, his voice may be unheeded by those with whom he dwells, and his face may be unknown to his neighbors; even pain may rack his joints, and sleep flee from his pillow; but he has a gem with which he would not part for wealth defying computation, for fame filling a world's ear, for the sweetest sleep that ever fell on mortal's eye."

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, October 8, 1846.

HOW IT WORKS.

Only a few months have elapsed since it was announced through the religious newspapers, with a great flourish of thanks and prophecies, that the Directors of the Reading Railroad Company had become convinced of the impolicy and wickedness of running cars on Sunday, and had accordingly determined that their road should "keep the Sabbath." But alas for poor human nature, "the sow that was washed" has returned "to her wallowing in the mire." A bet of one thousand dollars was recently made, that the Company would bring from the mines, during the month of September, one hundred and sixty thousand tons of coal. To accomplish this, it was determined that the cars should run on Sunday; and so the great "Sabbath-keeping Railroad" sold its regard for public opinion and the Sunday to make sure the bet of one thousand dollars.

We are not much surprised at this result. It was very evident from the beginning, that the Reading Railroad Company gave up running cars on Sunday simply because an artificial public sentiment had been created which made that course to be for their interest. It was natural to expect, therefore, that when their interest should seem more likely to be promoted by running Sunday trains, they would at once commence doing so. But although we are not surprised at the result, we must confess ourselves surprised at the price for which the Company has sold all its claims to consistency. One would have supposed, after the ado which they made upon the subject, that a thousand dollars would have been no temptation to them to abandon their professions. It is a notorious and lamentable fact, however, that when interest becomes the main-spring of men's actions—and especially when that interest is urged by religious men as the great argument for doing right—there is no calculating what they will do. A miser will do as mean an act to get a dollar, as he can do to get a thousand. So with Railroad Companies; when they have been accustomed to regulate all their movements with exclusive reference to their financial interests, they will sell their professions of regard for religious considerations for a very small sum—a sum so trifling as completely to astonish those who have not been trained up in the dollar-and-cent school.

—The course of the Reading Railroad has attracted the attention of the Philadelphia correspondent of the New York Evangelist—a paper, as our readers are aware, somewhat noted for its laudations of whatever is popular, but most unmerciful sometimes to the unpopular party. The correspondent says:—

"It is seldom that I make a prediction, but in this case I will venture one, and I pray you to put it upon record for future reference. I prophecy the following:—That if the managers of the Reading Railroad persist in violating the Sabbath, they will be utterly bankrupt within ten years; their stock will be worthless; their road worn out without the means of repair; their agents will prove dishonest, and squander their gains; serious disasters will occur in the prosecution of their business, which will be seen to be manifest tokens of the Divine displeasure, and that great public work, instead of proving a blessing, will be acknowledged to be a dreadful curse to the community and to the country. Of whom is it said, 'I have poured out my indignation upon them, I have consumed them with the fire of my wrath; their own way have I recompensed upon their heads, saith the Lord God?' Mark and seriously ponder. Of those who 'have hid their eyes from my Sabbaths.' As sure as there is a righteous God, Sabbath-breakers will not go unpunished."

There are two features of the above paragraph which we exceedingly deprecate, although they mark most of the addresses and appeals upon the subject of Sunday desecration.

In the first place, we deprecate the custom of appealing mainly to the fear of temporal loss as a means of securing obedience to what we profess to regard as a divine commandment. We do not doubt that the habit of resting from labor and engaging in religious exercises one day in seven, is adapted to make business men honest and successful. But we believe, nevertheless, that to make this the grand motive for doing so, is inconsistent with the Scriptures, dishonorable to God, and deceptive in its influence upon men. The Scriptures tell us that "godliness is great gain;" but the men who, in urging a religious duty, draw their chief arguments from our temporal interests, tell us, in effect, that gain is godliness. And we doubt not that many a man may be found, who thinks himself much nearer heaven after having abandoned his business on Sunday, while in fact he has been led to that course simply out of regard to his interests for this world. The first commandment says, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." Who would think of urging a man to obey that commandment mainly because by doing so he would make his grain grow and his business prosper? No one, surely. Why then urge obedience to the fourth commandment upon such grounds? The almost universal custom, among religious editors and preachers, of advocating the observance of a Sabbath chiefly from selfish considerations, is rapidly creating what we should call a religion of "loaves and fishes"—a religion which is but little better than that drawn from the worldly-wise maxims of one of Poor Richard's Almanacs.

In the second place, we deprecate the practice of urging the observance of the first day of the week by quoting the promises and threatenings of Scripture in respect to the Sabbath. The Sabbath day, and what is called the Lord's day, are two entirely different institutions. The one is, according to the declarations of Scripture, upon the seventh or last day of the week; the other is, according to the traditions of men, upon the first day of the week. All the promises and threatenings of the Bible upon this subject refer to the seventh day, and not to the first day. To apply them to the first day, is to pervert the Word of God, and mislead the people. It is a common charge for infidels to bring against the Bible, that it can be so interpreted as to prove any thing which is desired. And if these threatenings and promises in respect to the seventh day can, without the least warrant therefor, be applied to the first day, then is the charge of infidels just. Let us beware how we give weight to the arguments for a bad cause, by perverting the Scriptures to support even a good cause.

The course pursued by the Directors of the Reading Railroad is full of instruction which ought to be heeded. Thousands of dollars have been expended in holding Sabbath Conventions in the State of Pennsylvania. The discontinuance of Sunday trains on the Reading Road was regarded as one of the fruits of such expenditure. Facts have shown how worthless and bitter that fruit is. Would it not be well, in view of such facts, to review the principles upon which the Sunday reform movements have been based, and see if they do not contain the elements of instability?

REFORM IN THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.

Some time ago we stated the fact, that Jonathan S. Green, one of the Sandwich Islands Missionaries, had declined receiving his support from the Treasury of the American Board, and was endeavoring to awaken the people to the importance of sustaining their own ministers. He writes to the Secretary of the Union Missionary Society, that his church has raised $450 for him, besides contributing $50 at the monthly concert. Other churches are imitating this good example. It is hoped that the time is not far distant when these mission churches will support themselves.

An important reform has recently commenced in respect to the ownership of the soil. Heretofore it has been the property of the chiefs, and the people have been obliged to give their services for a part of the time, say from six to twelve days per month, to pay the rent of the lands which they cultivate. The King has permitted Dr. Judd, minister of the interior, to purchase one entire province for the purpose of selling the land to the people in small lots. Great benefits are expected from this measure. If it succeeds, the time will probably soon come when all the lands on the island of Maui, if not on all the islands, will be offered for sale. Mr. Green has written to Dr. Judd, requesting him to ask the king for permission to send to this country for one or more helpers. He is particularly desirous to have a good practical farmer come on and cultivate a model farm for the instruction of the people. Some folks may regard the course of Mr. G. in attempting such improvements of the outward condition of the people, as inconsistent with true missionary zeal. Not so we; but we regard that missionary as deficient in his duty, who does not exert his influence to do away with every custom which restricts the freedom of the people, and throws obstacles in the way of a deep and manly piety.

FEMALE TEACHERS FOR THE WEST.

Two addresses have recently been published, from the pen of Catherine E. Beecher, of Cincinnati, on the evils suffered by American women and children, with their causes and remedy. These evils are shown to be the result of imperfect education, and the remedy proposed is what this fact suggests. She represents the causes which operate to the disadvantge of women as fourfold—1st. The principle of caste arrayed against healthful and productive labor; 2d. The excess of female population in the older States, caused by a disproportionate emigration of the other sex to the West; 3d. The absence of any profession for women of education, which, like law, medicine, or theology, presents motives for exertion, and opens the way to competence and influence; 4th. The contempt or indifference with which the noble profession of teaching is regarded. There are in our country nearly a million of adults who cannot read and write, and more than two millions of children who are entirely without schools. Even Ohio and Kentucky, the best supplied of the Western States, demand five thousand teachers each to supply them in the same ratio as Massachusetts. Miss Beecher proposes to remedy all these evils which press upon women and children, by uniting the energies of her country-women in a plan to educate the West. To carry forward this plan, a Committee has been organized in Cincinnati, called the Central Committee for Promoting National Education, which is to have auxiliary associations of ladies throughout the country. Under the direction of this Committee, it is proposed to collect together women already qualified intellectually to teach, and possessed of missionary zeal and benevelence, and, after some farther training, to send them to the most ignorant portions of our land, to raise up schools, to instruct in morals and piety, and to teach the domestic arts and virtues. A large number of well qualified teachers are waiting to enter this missionary service, and it is designed to begin locating them as soon as the necessary funds are furnished. Discreet agents will be employed to visit the destitute places, make suitable arrangements for the teachers, and assist them in commencing their labors. The Hon. William Slade, present Governor of Vermont, has engaged to remove to Cincinnati in October, and take upon him the responsibility of Secretary and General Agent of the Central Committee. The plan has much to recommend it, and the character of those who have espoused it, encourages us to hope that it will result in great good.

Enforcing Sunday Laws.—The city authorities of Boston gave notice recently, that the law against selling liquor on Sunday would be rigidly enforced. A writer in one of the Boston papers says that on the following Sunday several of the fashionable saloons were open as usual, and young men were seen going in and coming out as on week days. But what is more remarkable still, that very day was chosen to issue in Boston the first No. of a Sunday paper. So much for the efficiency of Sunday laws in the city of the Puritans. In New York, there is also a law against selling liquor on Sunday, and one or two persons have recently been arrested for breaking it. But the great mass of liquor sellers do not respect the law, nor fear its enforcement. The consequence is, that it is almost as easy to find the means of intoxication on Sunday as on any other day of the week. As to Sunday newspapers in New York, they seem to be doing an uncommonly heavy business just now-a-days, if we may judge from the number and variety of them exposed for sale and hawked about the streets.

Shiloh, N. J., 31st of 9th mo., 1846.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

The annexed statement will doubtless be of some interest to your readers. It is thererefore at your service. S. D.

At a meeting of citizens of Hopewell and Stowcreek townships, Cumberland Co., N. J., holden in the Academy at Shiloh, on the 28th of the 9th month, 1846, for the purpose of considering of the most politic course to pursue so far as our civil and religious liberties are concerned, it was

Resolved, That we regard all state laws compelling the observance of any day as a religious obligation, as unconstitutional, and oppressive to respectable portions of the citizens of this State. Therefore, we deem it our duty to give our votes for such candidates for legislative offices only, as will pledge themselves to advocate their entire repeal.

Politics in Newspapers.—The following paragraph was written by the distinguished Dr. Arnold, to his associate editor, while engaged in conducting a newspaper. Such sentiments are worthy of being studied and reduced to practice by all the conductors of the newspaper press:—

"I wish to distinguish the Register from other papers by two things; that politics should hold in it first that place which they should do in a well-regulated mind; that is, as one field of duty, but by no means the most important one, and that, with respect to this field, our duty should rather be to soothe than to excite, rather to furnish facts, and to point out the difficulties of political questions, than to press forward our own conclusions. There are publications enough to excite the people to political reform; my object is moral and intellectual reform, which will be sure enough to work out political reform in the best way; and my writing on politics would have for its end, not the forwarding of any political measure, but the so purifying, enlightening, sobering, and in one word, Christianizing news, notions and feelings on political matters, that from the improved tree may come hereafter a better fruit."

Instructing Slaves.—The following communication was published in the New Orleans Delta of August 23d. It is the testimony of a friend of southern institutions, and may therefore be relied upon:—

Mr. Editor:—I have heard that some well-meaning, perhaps, but erring persons, are in the habit of instructing slaves to read and write! particularly some of those constituting the so-called philanthropic societies, such as Sunday Schools, &c. To say nothing of the impolicy of such proceedings, and the mischief it is calculated to produce among our slave population, it is forbidden by law!—by a law to be found in Greiner's Louisiana Digest, page 521, article 3499, which reads as follow: "All persons who shall teach, or permit, or cause to be taught, any slave in this State to read or write, shall, on conviction thereof before any court of competent jurisdiction, be imprisoned not less than one month nor more than twelve months."

Your publishing this, Mr. Editor, may possibly have the effect of deterring those misguided people from persistance in a pursuit more injurious to our safety than all the railings of northern fanatics.

The United States.—The Rev. S. L. Pomeroy, of Bangor, Me., has been spending some time past in Europe. In a letter to a friend he speaks thus of the United States:—

"One result of my observations in various countries, is the deep, overwhelming conviction, that the United States of North America is, immeasurably, the most blessed land the sun shines upon, in all his circuit through the heavens. You never meet an American abroad who does not say the same. Sins we have, indeed—many, great, and fearful. But our privileges, how immense! The thought which has spontaneously risen to my heart a thousand times, as I have looked upon the inhabitants of these ancient lands, in their squalid poverty, is, God bless the United States of America!"

The Scientific American comes to us this week in a new dress, considerably enlarged and improved. Published by Munn & Co., at 128 Fulton-street.

A STORM AT SEA.

The steamship Great Western, which reached New York on fourth-day of last week, experienced during her passage one of the severest storms ever known on the Atlantic. As most of our readers have never seen a storm at sea, and probably never will, they will doubtless thank us for copying the following graphic description of that which overtook the Great Western. The narrative was prepared and approved by a Committee of the passengers, and its publication requested in the papers of New York and Liverpool.

The Great Western left Liverpool on Sabbath, Sept. 12, at 4 o'clock P. M., having on board one hundred and twenty-six passengers, and a crew which made up the number, all told, to two hundred and eleven persons. The weather was pleasant for the season during the first week of her passage, and the ship averaged some 200 miles a day. On Sabbath, Sept. 19, however, the wind increased, and appearances indicated ugly weather.

On Sunday, Sept. 20, at 40 minutes past 2 A. M. says the log book, split the fore stay sail, took in the remains of it, and lay to under bare poles. The sea rising frightfully and breaking over and against the ship. At 4, the wind increased to a heavy storm, and the sea running most furiously at the ship. The wind veered to the NW at the same time, and the ship breaking off into the trough of the sea, rendered our situation more critical. A great quantity of water got into the engine room, from the sea breaking over the ship, which was pumped out by the lee bilge pump.

Sunday morning most of the passengers assembled in the cabin and saloon. Their haggard faces told too surely of the sleepless and anxious night which had passed. Even those most ignorant of nautical affairs could not fail to discover that we were in the midst of great peril. Few could dress with their accustomed care, owing to the violent pitching and constant rolling of the vessel. The stewards abandoned any attempt to prepare the breakfast table, and both then and throughout the day, were obliged to content themselves with bringing such articles of food as were most convenient, to those who felt any disposition to eat.

11 o'clock, A. M., a heavy sea broke over the fore-part of the starboard wheel-house, or paddle-box, which started the ice-house and large iron life-boat, from their fastenings, and washed them to the leeward, and with much difficulty they were temporarily secured. The ice-house contained some seven or eight tons of ice, and was fastened by cleets and stanchions. Let the reader imagine the force of the sea, and the hight of the wave, which, rising over the paddle-box, struck the ice-house and the large iron life-boat above it, twisted them from their fastenings, breaking the ice-house into two parts, ripping off the planks, crushing the starboard companion way, and only prevented from making a clear breach in the sides of the ship, by a sudden lurch to port. Meantime the wind howled most frightfully through the rigging.

At 11 o'clock and 15 minutes A. M. attempted to wear ship, to get her on the other tack (thinking she would be easier) as the wind still continued to veer to northward. Lowered the after gaffs down; manned the fore-rigging, and loosened the weather yard arm of the foresail, to pay her off, but found it had no effect. Therefore let her come to again. In the meantime the square sails blew away from the yards.

11 30, A. M. The lee quarter boats were torn from the davits by a heavy lee lurch of the ship, bending the davits, tearing out the ring-bolts from their stems and sterns.

Word was passed among the passengers that two of our boats were gone, and the others were likely to follow, the davits and bolts beginning to give. But not a remark was made; each spoke to the other only through the eye. And the omenous silence which pervaded the whole company told how sensibly all felt themselves in the very presence of the King of Terrors, uncertain of their doom.

It was wonderful to see how a few short hours changed the condition and feelings of all on board. The grades and distinctions incident to so large a company, varying in social position, citizens of almost all countries, and professing different creeds, yet, in the presence of so imminent danger, all distinctions seemed merged into one common emotion of awe, as we stood together in the court of the great leveller, Death. With this intense feeling which bound us together as one, came also another of an opposite and repelling character. Every heart was deeply occupied with its individual griefs and memories, as if not another shared the peril. Home, with its loved ones, and a thousand cherished hopes and joys, rose fresh to the mind and left it like the ocean tempest-tost and troubled.

"See," said a gentleman to me, "no one converses, no one reads—all are engaged, each with his own thoughts; and if my wife and children were here, I confess, my feelings would be of the most distressing character." "But," said I, "they suffer in your loss." "Very true; yet it is only a question of time, and, whether sooner or later, God's will be done."

At noon, storm and sea raging in all its fury, sea still breaking over the ship, a heavy sea struck the larboard paddle-box and smashed it to atoms; sprung the spring beam, breaking the under half; shattered the parts of the ship attached thereto. A splinter struck the captain on the head while standing on the poop, and the force of the blow, together with the sea, carried him over the lee quarter, and he was only saved by the nettings.

After the sea had passed over, we found the water had gained on the pumps; the wind appeared to lull a little, and the ship a little easier, but still blowing a storm. All the hatches, except those made use of for passing into the engine room, were battened down, and the skylights partially covered. The weather, continued the same until midnight, at which time it lulled for half and hour.

The log conveys to the reader sone idea of the state of the ship and effects of the storm on Sunday at noon. Its effects on those below can best be given in the words of a gentleman who remained the greater part of the time in the cabin:

To convey an idea of the appearance of all around is out of my power. In the words of Sheridan, "the tempest roamed in all the terror of its glory." The atmosphere was surcharged with a thick spray, rendering a look far out to seaward impossible. The wind howled, roared and bellowed, like the constant mutterings of the thunder cloud. Huge waves, of tremendous hight and volume, rose in mad display around the ship, threatening every moment to break over us amidships and crush the vessel. Sea after sea striking us with terrific noise, caused the gallant ship to stop for an instant, tremble and shake in every timber, from her stem to her stern post, reeling and lurching, tossed to and fro; again would she gather fresh strength, and with her wheels half hid in the wild waters again and again receive the thundering blows of an element that seemed armed for our destruction.

The sails on the yards, strongly secured by ropes and gaskets, were blown from their furls, and streamed out to leeward in ribbons. But all this was nothing. About 1 P. M. while most of us were seated in agonizing suspense in the lower cabin, holding fast to the tables and settees, a sea struck the vessel, and a tremendous crash was heard on deck. Instantly the cabin was darkened, and torrents of water came pouring down upon us through the skylights.

Scarcely had the waters reached the floor, when all in the cabins and state-rooms sprang to their feet, and simultaneously, as if by concert, the ladies uttered a scream of agony, so fearful, and so despairing, the sound of it will never be forgotten; and Heaven grant that such a wail of anguish may never again be heard by me. Several fainted—others clasped their hands in mute despair, while many called aloud upon their Creator. * * * *

'Twas an anxious hour. My eye wandered over the different groups in the saloon; resting one while on a father passing from one to another of his family, and cheering with a kind word an interesting group of daughters; then on a young wife, folded to the bosom of her husband, without a syllable being uttered, but the action spoke volumes; and again upon a mother whose children had been left in America, as she clasped her hands as if in secret prayer, while her husband and her father gathered around, and all seemed bowed down to earth in one common feeling of tender solicitude for those who might soon become helpless orphans.

It was an awful hour. The most thoughtless among us cowered in their secret hearts before a danger which none but a fool or a brute would have mocked, and all therefore accepted the invitation to meet in the cabin for prayer.

Rev. Mr. Marsh read the 107th Psalm. Rev. Dr. Smucker prayed. Rev. Dr. Beecher made a few solemn remarks. Rev. Dr. Balch repeated the words of our Saviour, "Let not your heart be troubled, ye believe in God, believe also in me,"—commenting briefly on their consoling import, and then invited all present to join with him in the Lord's prayer; after which he pronounced the Apostles' benediction.

Amid this accumulation of horrors, and still more to add to our alarm, night gathered in around us. The wind, far from abating, was on the increase. The lulls in the storm being less frequent, and the squalls, if any thing, more terrific. The whole ocean was one sea of foam, lashed up into terrible waves, wild and angry, while the spray and wind seemed driven through the rigging and over the ship, as if with demoniacal power. As darkness came, clustering together in the cabin, we all thought and reflected on our fate. Most, if not all of us, had given ourselves up for lost.

In the evening, about 9 o'clock, Rev. Mr. Balch, at the request of several passengers, administered the Holy Communion in the cabin, to upwards of sixty persons—many of whom received it for the first time in their lives. Several applied to him as to the propriety of their embracing that occasion to fulfil a long-cherished purpose of their hearts, but which, like many other "good thoughts," had been deferred to "a more conveinent season." They all communed, together with others of almost every creed and nation, thus reminding us of the promise of Scripture, "they shall come from the East and the West, the North and the South, and sit with Abraham and Isaac and Jacob, in the kingdom of God."

It was a most solemn scene. Mr. Balch first read the service appointed for a storm at sea, after which the whole communion office. The terrible conflict of the elements which raged without was rendered yet more striking by the impressive stillness which pervaded that company of Christ's disciples within.

Gathered around the table, they received into hearts deeply moved the consecrated emblems of the Redeemer's body and blood. All felt comforted by the blessed ordinance of grace. Many a bosom before tossed with fear was now tranquil through faith. Once more all renewed their vows, and realized the peace of God shed abroad in their hearts, and felt, with a vividness perhaps never before known, "Your life is hid with God in Christ." Oh! it was a night and a communion long to be remembered.

After the communion, I returned to my state-room. The gentleman who shared it with me, had gone below to die, as he expected, in company with his daughter and son-in-law. Left therefore alone, taking a last look at the pictures of my little family, and commending them, and all dear to me, to the grace and protection of God, I laid down and slept peacefully.

Monday, 21st, 12 30, continues the log, the storm commenced raging again in all its fury, and the sea a perfect foam, till 8 A. M., at which time the clouds began to break, and the squalls were less furious. Got the ship's head to the N. W. and hauled the yards round, the sea still raging as before, and nearly ahead, curling and breaking over the ship in every direction. At noon the storm ceased; but the sea continued most violent till 2 P. M. at which time it ceased gradually with the wind—having lasted about 36 hours. But our danger was past, and with grateful hearts, on Tuesday morning, all were assembled in the cabin to render an act of common prayer and thanksgiving.

Rev. Dr. Smucker read a Psalm and made some appropriate introductory remarks. Rev. Dr. Beecher addressed the passengers at length and with much force on the mercy we had experienced, and prayer was offered.

When all danger had passed, the Captain said, "Thrice on deck I thought destruction inevitable. Each time a sea of such magnitude and power came at the ship, that I thought it was all over with us. But unexpectedly each broke just at the side of the ship. Sir, the hand of the Lord was in it." Yes, the hand of the Lord was in it—may we never forget, 'twas the hand of the Lord.

General Intelligence.

EIGHT DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamship Great Western reached New York on Wednesday last, bringing eight days later intelligence from Europe. Her news is important, because it settles the question that the crops in England, and to some extent on the Continent, are deficient. The consequence is, a considerable advance in the price of Flour, Wheat, Indian Corn, Bacon, &c.

The failure of the potato crop is universal. The reports from every part of the United Kingdom are appalling, while letter after letter from the continent of Europe details the ravages which this strange and unaccountable diease has made in France, Belgium, Holland, Prussia, Austria, Russia, &c.

The accounts from France as to the harvest in that country are most distressing; a very large quantity of Wheat will, therefore, be required for its immediate wants. All over the north of Europe, Rye, the staple article of consumption, has yielded miserably short. Barley and Oats are also defective, and Wheat far from abundant. It is, therefore, evident that large importations of "bread stuffs" from Canada and the United States must take place, for which very remunerating rates will readily be paid.

Ireland is tranquil. The People are to be employed by Government on public works, and fed by it.

The Queen of Spain is to marry her cousin, Don Francisco, and her sister Louisa is to marry the Duc de Montepensier, son of Louis Phillippe.

The last accounts from India are painfully distressing. The cholera—that scourge of the human race—is sweeping all before it in Scindie Hardy veterans, long inured to toil and fatigue, and to all the "pride and circumstance of glorious war," are being mowed down by thousands. Those who conquered the Ameers, and put their troops to the sword, are smitten with unsparing impartiality by the Angel of Death, who rides abroad in the blast.

The cholera had lessened its ravages at Kurrachee, where it destroyed several thousand persons during ten days. The troops had lost about a fourth of their number.

Both Liverpool and Greenock have been the scene of awful conflagrations. On the morning of Thursday, the 10th ult., a fire broke out in the auger house of Messrs. Fairrie & Co., of Cartside, Greenock, where property to the amount of from £50,000 to £80,000 was destroyed, and one life fell a sacrifice to the catastrophe. On the same night, the establishment occupied by Messrs. Macfie & Son, of Bachelor-street, Liverpool, as a sugar-refining establishment, also took fire, and was totally destroyed, consuming property to the amount of £60,000.

The German papers, which have lately come to hand, contain accounts of a great fire which broke out on the evening of the 29th of August at Leipsic. The losses sustained by this disaster are very considerable; the Hotel de Bologne, which has been completely destroyed, is estimated at a value of six millions of francs. The fire appears to have raged sixteen hours, during which time a number of lives fell a sacrifice to the accident.

The number of persons killed by the late earthquake in Tuscany is very great. At Volterra 38 lives were lost, and 140 persons were severely wounded. Many villages were razed to the ground, and numbers of public buildings were destroyed or injured.

The waters of the Rhine have not been for many years so high as they are at present. Most of the cellars in the town of Brisach were under water on the 25th ult., and it was feared that the stock of potatoes they contained would be spoiled.

A company is being established in London to supply the community with bread, from the best wheaten flour, at 4d the four-pound loaf, which will include a profit of five per cent., as well as the actual cost of material, wages, &c. Their capital is to be £200,000.

A singular phenomenon has occurred at Lewes, in Sussex. During the day a heavy, murky atmosphere prevailed. About two o'clock a small but thick and dark cloud was discernable, hanging, as it were, around the lion at the top of the old castle tower. On ascending the castle, it was found that this thick cloud was composed of myriads of insects, which appeared like large winged ants, thousands of which clung to the walls and the floor of the tower. Many of them fell on the leads, where they died. In an hour or two the great bulk of them had taken their departure, but large numbers were left behind in a dying state. They have expansive wings, their bodies being dark and shining. Their heads are somewhat large, and they are apparently armed with powerful forceps.

Seven Days Later.—The steamer Hibernia reached Boston on Saturday last, bringing Liverpool papers to Sept. 19.

Well founded apprehensions of a failure in the American Cotton crop have caused an increased demand for the staple in Liverpool, and prices have accordingly advanced a farthing per pound.

Her Britannic Majesty's government and the people of Spain have manifested so much hostility to the marriage of the Queen of Spain's sister, to Louis Philippe's youngest son, that the celebration of the nuptials has been postponed for the present, if not forever.

The total failure of the potato crop appears to be a sad reality. Every where in Ireland, and in the greater part of the British Island, the potato fields are shrouded with the dark mantles of the plague. From the Continent of Europe, including Russia, we have dismal accounts of the progress of the blight. The future use of the potato, as an article of food, is now almost abandoned.

At the latest date, 18th September, American flour was selling at twenty-nine shillings to thirty shillings per barrel, duty paid, at Liverpool. The price in bond was twenty-seven shillings and sixpence.

Accounts from Paris, dated 17th September, announce that a dispatch had been received conveying the intelligence that Don Carlos, the Spanish pretender, had made his escape, and will probably proceed to Spain.

Prices of Produce.—The writer of the money articles for the N. Y. Tribune says: "The produce world was thrown into a ferment by the reception of the advices per Great Western. The advance on the other side in Flour and Grain was so much greater than had been looked for that holders were afraid to name a price lest they should not ask enough. The scene on 'Change, where all were anxious for information and to ascertain the views of others while concealing their own, was highly exciting, and the fact that the private letters had not been received added to the uncertainty in which every body was placed as to what would be the effect upon prices. A few sales of Flour were made at $5 50, showing an advance of 50 cents. Corn went up 5 cents per bushel. Wheat 6 or 7 cents per bushel. Rye 2 to 3 cents; Oats 4 cents; Pork 50 cents per bbl., &c. The news brought by the Great Western is of the first importance to the producing west, and will probably cause still greater excitement there than here. The rise in prices will add vastly to the riches of the west, and the large exports at large prices will keep our money market easy and set at rest all fears of specie exports this year."

◆

The Richmond Tragedy.—The Richmond Whig of the 29th ult. gives the following version of a disgraceful affair:—

Mr. D. M. Hoyt, a lottery broker in this place, was shot yesterday morning about half past six o'clock, as is represented and believed, by Mr. Wm. R. Myers, who, according to report, accompanied by his brother, Col. S. S. Myers, and Mr. Wm. S. Burr, went into his office, the former armed with a revolving pistol, for the purpose of making the assault. Mr. Hoyt was twice wounded, one ball entering his head just above the eye, and the other one of his thighs, and wounding also the other. We understand that there is a very slight prospect of his surviving his wounds. The cause of this tragical affair has been the subject of remark in this place for several days past, and the event therefore has excited no surprise here. The injury said to have been inflicted upon Mr. Myers by Mr. Hoyt was in the most delicate relation of life.. We understand that after he was shot, Hoyt made oath, before a magistrate, that he was innocent. On the other hand, Mr. Myers had evidence in his possession of his guilt, that would have been deemed by most men conclusive. Mr. Myers and the two friends who accompanied him made no effort to escape, and they were arrested at his house during the day. The case came on before the Mayor, and the parties were bailed, each in the sum of $10,000, until Wednesday next.

Shipwreck and Great Loss of Life.—By the United States frigate Constitution, from the Pacific, via Rio de Janeiro, we have an account of the loss of a Russian Government brig, near the harbor of St. Peter and St. Paul, on the coast of Kamschatka, in the month of October, 1845.

The vessel was from Okotsk, with a cargo of wheat for the winter supply of the colony—mounted six guns, and had a complement of thirty or forty men, besides sixteen passengers, most of whom were women and children.

One passenger only, (a girl about eighteen years of age,) the commander, and about ten of the crew, succeeded in reaching the shore in safety. The remainder, with the exception of a man who was crushed to death by a gun, found a watery grave. It appears, that in a heavy gale from the southeast, the vessel anchored near a reef instead of making for one of the many safe harbors with which the bay is filled; and a heavy swell setting in, she parted her cables and went ashore.

The body of a person, afterwards ascertained to be that of the naval surgeon, was picked up by a boat's crew of the Helvetius, upon which was found a large amount of money. By letters received through the mail, it appears that he had been entrusted with the delivery of this money to various persons in the colony. The different sums were found correct. Thus, the trust which could not be performed by the living, was faithfully executed by the dead. The entire affair cast a melancholy gloom over the colony of St. Peter and St. Paul, which cannot be easily effaced.

A Pair of Runaway Matches.—We learn from the Owego Gazette, that "Sacket," a young gentleman who taught the art of writing to some of the young ladies and gentlemen of that place last spring, lately eloped from Owego with a young Miss of that village, and married her before Justice Weed in the town of Fleming. He made his proposals in regular form and was accepted by the young lady; but the old people, not liking the haste with which the affair was coming to a conclusion, requested that the marriage might be postponed for three months, and then if all things were right he could have their daughter and their blessing at the same time. Either from motives of prudence, or because too eager in the case to "sprinkle cool patience on the heat and flame of his distemper," he declined the reasonable request and the elopement was the consequence.

The Gazette of the same date chronicles another similar affair, but spiced with a touch more of romance. A young man named Brown, came all the way from Cleveland, Ohio, for the purpose of marrying a young lady of the village. Sunday was the time appointed for solemnizing the marriage ceremony. The guests were invited and every thing requisite for the occasion attended to. Saturday evening the family retired early that they might feel the better the next day. But alas for the hopes of Mr. Brown! When the next day came it was ascertained that the young lady had been mysteriously spirited away! It seems that on Saturday night between the hours of 11 and 12 o'clock, when the family were hushed in sound repose, a young man of the place, named Conkling, who for a year past had entertained an itching desire for the young lady's heart and hand—a desire which it turns out was not unreciprocated—proceeded to the residence of the fair one, and without disturbing either the parents or the lover, prevailed upon her to accompany him with bag and baggage to Athens, where they were married. On the following Monday they returned home. The jilted lover left the same day.

Why does water thrown on a brisk and flaming fire apparently increase the combustion?

Because the water is converted into steam, which expanding and mixing with the flame, causes it to spread out into a much larger volume than it otherwise would have occupied.

SUMMARY.

A law has passed in New Hampshire, intended to secure to married women their rights in property, real and personal, which they hold in their own right; protecting them from the debts of their husbands. The property of the wife is held liable for her own debts contracted before or after marriage. It also grants to females the right of disposing of their own property.

The Anti-Slavery Office, No. 5 Spruce-st., was broken into between Saturday evening and Monday morning, last week, a number of trunks, &c., broken and robbed of $15 to $20 in specie, a small lot of Haytien coin, and an old Roman Catholic MS. missal, older than the art of printing, which cost some $25 in Europe. No trace of the robbers has been found.

In 1839 there were 26,401,282 hogs in the United States. The number has probably increased since that period, to 30,000,000; sufficient to cranch 200,000,000 bushels of corn. Upon the supposition that their average is 280 lbs. each, and that pork is worth $3 50 per cwt. the value of the number annually killed is $294,000,000.

A Cincinnati paper estimates the entire number of swine in Europe at but 46,278,160, so that Russia, Austria, and Great Britain, having a population of 120,000,000 of people, have only as many swine as the United States with only 20,000,000.

Throughout Sicily an unexampled heat and drought prevails. On the southern coast of the Island, from Trapani to Marsali, and even to Gergenti, all vegetation is perishing for want of water. At Trapani a barrel of water, containing 48 to 50 bottles, sells for one franc and 50 centimes, while the same quantity of good table wine costs but seven francs 80 centimes. If this scarcity of water continues, all the harvest, even that of raisins, will fail.

The Tower Hill Mining Co., is the name of a company which has been formed in Boston for the purpose of working a copper mine in Cumberland, R. I. The existence of copper ore in this vicinity has long been known, and the mine was opened and worked before the Revolutionary war, but has been for many years abandoned. About four thousand pounds of ore were taken from the shaft last week, and the best of it yields as largely as twenty per cent.

The subject of this notice experienced religion about five years ago, and united with the Free Baptist Church at Unadilla Forks, of which she remained a useful member until her death. She was possessed of a very pleasant and amiable disposition, which endeared her to a large circle of friends and associates. Her sickness was long and distressing, but she bore it with Christian patience and resignation. Just before her death, she called her associates who were present, her brothers and sister, to her bed-side, and after recommending to them one by one the religion of Christ, which supported her through sickness and in view of her approaching dissolution, she bade them all an affectionate farewell. After this her work in this world appeared to be done, and then, with all the composure with which Christianity inspires its possessors, she smiled, and sweetly fell asleep in the arms of her Redeemer. Her funeral was attended on the 2d of Sept., when an appropriate discourse was delivered by Eld. J. Chaney, to a large and solemn assembly. Text Job 19: 21.

THE AUTUMN LEAF.

BY MRS. L. H. SIGOURNEY.

The Autumn Leaf. I've mark'd it fall
Decay'd o'er Autumn's russet pall,
Or heard it rustle 'neath my tread
When bare the forest branches spread,
And knew it was the herald drear
Of icy Winter's reign severe.

But this, a guest from mountains green,
Replete with vigorous life is seen;
It did not fleet with terror pale,
Before November's driving gale,
Nor shrinks to meet the sterner test
Of frost, that smote the flow'ret's breast.

Lo! "Autumn Leaf," thy course pursue,
With spirit bold, and purpose true;
Still bear upon thy tainted scroll
Pure lessons for the unfolding soul,
And pruodly deck thy native scene,
In brow and heart an evergreen.

HARTFORD, Conn.

GRAVE OF JOHN RANDOLPH.

A writer in the Norfolk Beacon describes a visit to the grave of this remarkable man. Speaking of the former residence of Mr. Randolph, he says:—

"After a ride of two or three hours, we entered a forest of tall oaks, and were told by Mr. Cardwell that we were on Mr. Randolph's estate. Shortly, the houses that were occupied by the great and eccentric genius, appeared through the intervening trees, built up in the midst of the woods. Not a stump to be seen, not a bush grubbed up; all standing, as if the foot of man had never trodden there. Mr. Randolph would not suffer the primitive aspect of things to be disturbed in the least. Not a tree, or branch, or a switch, was allowed to be cut. Duringh is absence in Europe, a limb of an oak, projecting towards a window of one of the houses, grew so near that old Essex, fearing the window would be broken, cut the limb off. On Mr. Randolph's return he at once discovered the mutilation; old Essex was called up, and the reasons demanded for cutting off the limb. The old negro told his master he feared the window would be broken. 'Then,' said Mr. Randolph, 'why did you not move the house?'"

The writer here met John, the former body-servant of Mr. Randolph, who treated him and his companion with great politeness, conducting them to the winter and summer houses, and other objects of interest in the vicinity. We copy the description of his last resting place:—

"At my request, John directed us to his master's grave, at the foot of a lofty pine, just a few steps in the rear of the summer house. The place was selected by Mr. Randolph twenty years before his death; and by his direction the head was laid to the east, instead of the west, the usual position. It was observed to John that his master had ordered his body to be thus laid, that he might watch Henry Clay. John replied, that he had never heard him say any thing of the kind. I suppose the position was preferred by Mr. Randolph, because it is the Indian sepulchral posture, his descent from Pocahontas, the Indian princess, being one of the things he much boasted of. A rude unchiseled mass of white rock, found by Mr. Randolph on a distant part of his estate many years before his death, and used by him, at the door of one of his houses, as a washstand, marks the head of the grave. A huge mass of brown stone, also selected by Mr. Randolph, and used as a step-stone to mount his horse, marks the foot of the grave. These rocks were procured and kept for the purpose to which they are now appropriated, and particular direction given to John on the subject.

I can never forget my emotions while standing over the unornamented grave of the gifted and eccentric Randolph. The tall, unbroken forest by which I was surrounded, the silence and gloom that reigned undisturbed amidst the deserted place, the thought of the brilliant mind that once animated the remains, then mouldering beneath the sod upon which I was standing, the vanity of earth's promises, and hopes and distinctions, impressed my heart and mind with a degree of solemnity and interest I was unwilling to dissipate."

THE KNOUT.

The following extract "from the Note Book of a certain traveler" in Russia, will give some idea of the character of this fearful punishment, which has often been applied to political offenders:—

The Governor of Moscow kindly directed one of his aides-de-camp to conduct me over the prison. Having inspected the establishment in all its details, I was just about to depart, when my cicerone pointed to two men who had just entered the vestibule of the prison.

'Do you see those men?' said he; 'they are our executioners. It is they who inflict the punishment of the knout, which you have doubtless heard of.'

I looked at the two men. Both were tall and robust; and altogether their appearance resembled the common class of Russian peasantry; the one had a black, and the other a red beard. They wore loose cloth pantaloons, with boots drawn over them. The other portions of their dress consisted of a colored striped blouse, and a sort of cloth cossack, open in front, and covering their backs and shoulders. That which displeased me most in them was a certain air of gaiety and self-satisfaction which I could not reconcile with their barbarous vocations.

When they had advanced close to where we were standing, the aid-de-camp directed my attention to a packet which each of them carried under his left arm.

'That is the knout,' said he, 'would you like to examine it?'

I replied in the affirmative.

The aid-de-camp having addressed to the executioners some words in Russian, they saluted me with respect, and advancing to a table in the vestibule, unrolled their packets. The knout consists of a short, strong leather handle, terminated by a buckle, in which are fixed successively a certain number of leather thongs, of which one only is used for each stroke the criminal receives. I requested the executioners to apply upon the wall a few strokes of the knout with the same degree of force as that employed at an execution. They took off their caps and cossacks, and having carefully adjusted the leather thong in the buckle above mentioned, and gathering up all their strength, they struck the wall with such force, that the hard plaster with which it was covered fell down in fragments. I shuddered with horror at the reflection that such strokes were inflicted on the living flesh of a human being.

'Enough!' I exclaimed.

'It is indeed a horrible punishment,' observed my obliging cicerone, 'but it is inflicted only for capital offences; and after all, it is a doubtful question whether the punishment of death is preferable.'

Twenty strokes of the knout are the maximum amount of punishment; and it is probably nearly the utmost that the human frame is capable of enduring.

PLEASURES OF SOLDIERING.

Major Forsyth, the Editor of the Columbus (Georgia) Times, has written several letters which rank high for graphic power and spirited details. From a recent letter the Richmond Enquirer extracts a few passages, showing how rich a field Mexico presents for a lover of Entomology and Natural History:

"This country is distinguished, above all other particulars, by its myriads of crawling, flying, stinging, and biting things. Every thing you touch has a spider on it. We are killing them all day in our tents. We never dare draw on a boot or put on a hat or garment without a close search for some poisonous reptile or insect crouching in their folds or corners. It is wonderful that we are not stung twenty times a day. Yesterday morning, while standing up at breakfast, (we never sit at meals for the want of the wherewith to make a seat,) I felt some strange thing crawling up my leg about the knee. It did not take me long to seize it with my hand and to disrobe. Looking into the leg of my off-drawn drawer, I beheld a villainous looking creature, of black and yellow, with a long bony tail. I called my mess to look at it, when Dr. Hoxey, who has been before in this reptile country, pronounced it a Mexican scorpion, and told me for my comfort that it was as poisonous as a rattlesnake. His sting was out, and no doubt when I clenched him in my hand he stuck out at my clothes, instead of in at my flesh. 'Thinks I to myself' there's an escape. Besides these, we have spiders, centipedes, hordes of flies, and every thing else that crawls, flies, bites, and makes a noise. A gang of locusts have domiciled themselves in our camp, and keep up a sleepless clatter all night. To this is joined the music of frogs and the barking of the prairie dogs. A few nights since a panther came smelling up to the lines of our sentries. All these small nuisances are universally pronounced in camp as death to one's patriotic emotions, and a right hard fight with the enemy, to be followed by a riddance of this pestilent country, would be hailed by the whole regiment as a cousummation of too much happiness. But here we are to stay fighting insects and vermin, with no present prospect of finding their masters, (our enemy,) for whose special use and appropriate comfort they seem to have been formed by Nature. Some few of our officers profess to be enamored of this country. The air here, near the seacoast, is certainly fine, and one is at a loss to account for the sickness; but, aside from that, I would willingly forego the possession of all the rich acres I have seen to get back from this land of half-bred Indians and full-bred bugs."

REMARKABLE REANIMATION.

Dr. Chirchton, phyisician of the Emperor of Russia, relates that a 'young girl in the service of the prince of ——, who had for some time kept her bed with a nervous affection, at length, to all appearance, was deprived of life. Her face had all the character of death, her body was perfectly cold, and every other symptom of death was manifested. She was removed into another room and placed in a coffin. On the day fixed for the funeral, hymns, according to the custom of the country, were sung before the door; but at the very moment when they were going to fasten down the coffin, a perspiration was seen upon her skin, and in a few minutes it was succeeded by a convulsive motion in the hands and feet. In a few minutes she opened her eyes, and uttered a piercing scream. The Faculty were instantly called in, and in a few days her health was re-established. The accounts which she gave of her situation were extremely curious. She said she appeared to dream that she was dead, but she was sensible to every thing that was passing around her, and distinctly heard her friends bewail her death; she felt them envelop her in the shroud, and place her in the coffin. The sensation gave her extreme agony, and she attempted to speak, but her soul was unable to act upon her body. She described her sensations as very contradictory, as if she was and was not in her body at the same instant. She attempted in vain to move her arms, to open her eyes, to speak. The agony was at its height when she heard the funeral hymn, and found that they were about to nail down the coffin. The horror of being buried alive, gave a new impulse to her mind, which resumed its power over its corporeal organization, and produced the effects which excited the notice of those who were about to convey her to a premature grave.

EMPLOYMENT.

Daniel Webster never uttered a more just and truthful sentiment than the following, which occurs in his late speech in the Senate. It should be had in lasting remembrance:

"Sir, I say it is employment that makes a man happy. Sir, this great truth ought never to be forgotten; it ought to be placed upon the title-page of every book on political economy intended for America, and such other countries as America. It ought to be placed in every farmer's magazine. It should be proclaimed every where, notwithstanding what we hear of the usefulness—and I admit the high usefulness—of cheap food—notwithstanding that, the great truth should be proclaimed every where, should be made into a proverb if it could—that where there is work for the hands of men, there will be work for their teeth. Where there is employment, there will be bread. And in a country like our own, above all others, will this truth hold good—a country like ours, where, with a great deal of spirit and activity among the masses, if they can find employment, there is always great willingness for labor, they will always have good houses—good clothing—good food, and the means of educating their families; and if they have good houses, and good clothing, and good food, and the means of educating their children, from labor, that labor will be cheerful, and they will be a contented and happy people."

HOW TO CHOOSE A HORSE.

A correspondent of the Prairie Farmer undertakes to judge the character of the horse by outward appearances, and offers the following suggestions as the fruit of his close observation and long experience:—

If the color be light sorrel or chesnut sorrel, his feet, legs, and face white, these are marks of kindness.

If he is broad and full between the eyes, he may be depended on as a horse of good sense, and capable of being trained to any thing.

As respects such horses, the more kindly you treat them the better you will be treated in return. Nor will a horse of this description bear the whip, if fed well.

If you want a safe horse, avoid one that is dish faced; he may be so far gentle as not to scare, but he will have too much go-ahead in him to be safe for every body.

If you want a fool, but a horse of great bottom, get a deep bay, with not a white hair about him; if his face is a little dished, so much the worse. Let no man ride such a horse, who is not an adept in riding; they are always tricky and unsafe.

If you want a horse that will never give out, never buy a large over-grown one. A black horse cannot stand heat, nor a white one cold.

If you want a gentle horse, get one with more or less white about him—the more the better. A spotted one is preferable. Many suppose that the parti-colored horses belonging to circuses, shows, &c., are selected for their oddity. But the selection is thus made on account of greater docility and gentleness.

THE OCEAN AND LAKE ERIE UNITED.

At one o'clock, P. M., precisely, Sept. 9, the line of Magnetic Telegraph was connected through the whole distance from New York to Buffalo, passing through the following stations, viz.: Troy, Albany, Utica, Syracuse, Auburn, Rochester, and Buffalo, being a distance of 507 miles. Upon turning the adjusting screw of the magnet by Professor Morse, all things were found right; whereupon he sent his compliments to all the operators upon the line.

The first to answer was Albany:

The compliments of the Albany office to Prof. Morse and Mr. Wood.

Utica office wishes to be remembered to Prof. Morse and Mr. Wood.

Auburn office sends compliments to Prof. Morse and Mr. Wood.

Buffalo sends compliments to Prof. Morse and Mr. Wood, and presents Lake Erie to Old Ocean.

Rochester office sends compliments to Prof. Morse and Mr. Wood, and presents Erie Canal to Croton Aqueduct.

Auburn presents State Prison to the Tombs.

Syracuse sends compliments to Prof. Morse and Mr. Wood, and asks how are the Yorkers?

Troy says, Now give me a chance. Compliments to Prof. Morse and Mr. Wood, and now for business if there is any.

Utica asks, Need we keep dark any longer?

Troy answers, No. Announce it to the four winds, that Buffalo and New York are no longer separate. They talk to each other by lightning.

This entire dialogue occupied somewhat less than five minutes.

MASSACHUSETTS BOYS.—Two gentlemen who met in Westfield, at the dedication of the Normal School House, were recalling in conversation the occasion of their first visits to that village. One of them was the son of a blacksmith, and was bred to the trade of a hatter, but manifesting a strong inclination for study, subsequently entered a law office, and stated that he first came to Westfield at that time to take some depositions in a pauper case. The other gentleman stated that his first visit was connected with a pauper case also,—he, too, was a poor boy, and had come down from Sandisfield, about twenty-five miles, on foot, to see if he could get some work in Westfield. The chief interest of this statement is the fact that this gentleman is now at the head of a flourishing theological seminary in the eastern part of the State, and the blacksmith's son, and hatter's apprentice, is the Governor of the Commonwealth.

HEALTH AFFECTED BY THE MIND.—Nothing, says Dr. Metcalfe, more essentially contributes to health and longevity, than a happy and tranquil state of mind, which is to be sought for in a temperate exercise of all the physical, intellectual, and moral faculties. Benevolence, friendship, love, a good conscience, with tender, refined, and elevated thoughts, are never failing sources of health and cheerfulness; whereas pride, envy, jealousy, covetousness, anger, and all the passions, habitually indulged in to excess, not only embitter our happiness, but sap the foundation of health, and shorten the period of existence.

PROFANITY.—A man of sense will never swear. The least pardonable of all vices to which the folly or cupidity of man is addicted, is that of swearing. Could he who so freely indulges in profanity and indecent language—in fine, could the profane swearer, behold himself in a glass as others behold him, he would shrink from his own image as from a thing of contamination. In other vices, more or less excuse of some kind may be found—the gratification of some passion, or indulgence of some appetite, may be pleaded as a palliation; but in this vice are no mitigating circumstances to be found—no plausible pretext for such folly.

BEAUTIFUL LITTLE ALLEGORY.—A humming bird met a butterfly, and being pleased with the beauty of its person and glory of its wings, made an offer of perpetual friendship.

'I cannot think of it,' was the reply, 'as you once spurned me, and called me a drawling dolt.'

'Impossible!' exclaimed the humming bird. 'I always entertained the highest respect for such beautiful creatures as you.'

'Perhaps you do now,' said the other, 'but when you insulted me, I was a caterpillar. So let me give you a piece of advice; never insult the humble, as they may some day become your superiors.'

GUSTAVUS III.—When Gustavus the Third, King of Sweden, was in France, he was frequently solicited to visit Dr. Franklin, which he always declined. One of the Franch Guards, who could use a little freedom with his majesty, begged to know why he denied himself the honor which every crowned head in Europe would be proud to embrace? "No man," said the monarch, "regards the doctor's scientific accomplishments more than I do; but the King, who affects to like an enthusiast for liberty, is a hypocrite. As a philosopher, I love and admire the doctor; but as a politician, I hate him; and nothing shall ever induce me to appear on terms of friendship and personal esteem with a man whom my habits and situation oblige me to detest."

THE HOUR OF CONSCIENCE.—We are apt to connect the voice of conscience with the stillness of midnight. But I think we wrong that innocent hour. It is that terrible "next morning," when reason is wide awake, upon which conscience fastens its fangs. Has a man gambled away his all, or shot his friend in a duel—has he committed a crime, or incurred a laugh—it is the "next morning," when the irretrievable past rises before him like a spectre, then doth the church-yard of memory yield up its grisly dead—then is the witching hour when the foul fiend within us can least tempt, perhaps, but most torment. At night we have one thing to hope for, one refuge to fly to—oblivion in sleep. But at morning sleep is over, and we are called upon coldly to review, and re-act, and live again in the waking bitterness of self-reproach.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.—Many States have abolished the practice of imprisonment for debt. Some retain it, Maryland for example. The Baltimore Clipper says that the following are now in confinement in the Baltimore jail for debt. One individual aged 35 years, has been in confinement ten days for 62 1-2 cents; one aged 65 years, four days, for $1; one aged 20 years, ten days, for $3 40; one aged 56 years, nine days, for $4 50; one aged 29 years, twenty days, for $28; one aged 34 years, twenty-eight days, for $240; one aged 45 years, seventy-two days, for $246; one aged 27 years, for $1,992.

VARIETY.

On the Island of St. Luce there is a cavern in which is a large basin twelve or fifteen feet deep, at the bottom of which are rocks. From these rocks proceed certain substances that present at first sight beautiful flowers, resembling our marigolds, only that their tint is more lively. These seeming flowers, on the approach of a hand or instrument, retire like a snail, out of sight. On a close examination there appears in the middle of a disk, filaments resembling spiders' eggs, which move briskly round a kind of petals. The filaments or legs have pincers to seize their prey, when the petals close, so that it cannot escape. Under this flower is the body of an animal, and it is probable he lives on marine insects thrown by the sea into this basin.

One Sunday, during the high mass in the village of Glentariff, Ireland, three ladies of the Protestant faith were obliged to take shelter from one of those heavy summer showers which so frequently occur in the south of Ireland. The officiating priest, knowing who they were, and wishing to appear respectful to them, stooped down to his attendant, who was on his knees, and whispered to him, "three chairs for the Protestant ladies." The clerk, who was rather an ignorant man, stood up, and shouted out to the congregation, "three cheers for the Protestant ladies!" at which the congregation immediately stood up, and gave three hearty cheers, while the clergyman actually stood dumbfounded.

Perhaps it may not be known to every person who raises potatoes to sell, that, in the New York markets, there is one half difference in the price. This is not always owing to the superiority of one variety over another, but the fancy or preference of the buyer for his favorite kind. Some are partial to the pink eyes—some are to the kidneys, while others prefer the carter, the black, Dikeman's seedlings, blue noses, lady's fingers, &c., all of which have their excellences, and when brought to market by themselves, will always be sure to find a ready sale; but when mixed one with the other, many houskeepers will not buy them at all.

The Duke of Norfolk had in his service a female, a Methodist. One of the superior servants complained to the duke that this woman was too religious, and that she lost too much time in going to the chapel. The duke asked where she went to; and was answered, "to Bury." "What! a woman walk four miles to a place of worship? It is too far. I desire in future that the boy may drive her every Sunday in the gig. She is right in worshiping the Almighty where and how she thinks best."

It was the custom of the Teutones, an ancient people who inhabited the northern parts of Germany, to drink mead, or metheglin, in a beverage made with honey, for thirty days after every wedding. From this custom comes the expression, 'to spend the honey moon.' Attila, King of Hungary, drank so freely on his wedding day that he was suffocated.

One of the peregrinating "families" of singers recently gave a concert at Worcester. The Palladium, in commenting upon their performance, gravely stated that they "would sing well indeed, if they only had good voices, and knew how to use them."

A gang of pickpockets were in attendance at the missionary convention, lately held at New Haven. They appeared among the throng, dressed like clergymen, in black coats, and white cravats.

There are about twenty-four theatres within the barriers of Paris, permanently open, most of them every night, including Sunday.

A watch consists of 992 pieces; and 23 trades, and probably 215 persons, are employed in making one of these machines.

A London and Newcastle excursive train lately landed 2,000 passengers in London in 8 hours only—326 miles!

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHER'S SEMINARY.

Board of Instruction.

W. C. KENYON, } Principals,
IRA SAYLES, }

Assisted in the different departments by eight able and experienced Teachers—four in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

THE Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past eight years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to continue to merit a share of public patronage. Extensive buildings are now in progress of erection, for the accommodation of students and for recitation, lecture rooms, &c. These are to be completed in time to be occupied for the ensuing fall term. They occupy an eligible position, and are to be finished in the best style of modern architecture, and the different apartments are to be heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant andeconomical.

Ladies and gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board can be had in private families if particularly desired.

The plan of instruction in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the students, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The health, the morals, and the manners of our students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

Regulations.

1st. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2d. Punctuality in attending to all regular academic exercises, will be required.

3d. The use of tobacco for chewing or smoking, can not be allowed either within or about the academic buildings.

4th. Playing at games of chance, or using profane language, can not be permitted.

5th. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, can not be permitted.

6th. Gentlemen will not be allowed to visit ladies' rooms, nor ladies the rooms of gentlemen, except in cases of sickness, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

Apparatus.

The Apparatus of this Institution is sufficiently ample to illustrate successfully the fundamental principles of the different departments of Natural Science.

Notice.

The primary object of this Institntion, is the qualification of School Teachers. Teachers' Classes are exercised in teaching, under the immediate supervision of their respective instructors, combining all the facilities of a Normal School. Model Classes will be formed at the commencement of each term. The Institution has sent out not less than one hundred and fifty teachers, annually, for the three past years; a number much larger than from any other in the State.

Academic Terms.

The Academic year for 1846—7 consists of three terms, as follows:—

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 11th, 1846, and ending Thursday, November 19th, 1846.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, November 24th, 1846, and ending Thursday, March 4th, 1847.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, March 23d, 1847, and ending Thursday, July 1st, 1847.

As the classes are arranged at the commencement of the term, it is very desirable that students purposing to attend the Institution should then be present; and as the plan of instruction laid out for each class will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue till the close of the term; and, accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the term.

Expenses.

Board, per week,	$1 00
Room-rent, per term,	1 50
Tuition, per term,	$3 50 to 5 00
Incidental expenses, per term,	25

EXTRAS PER TERM.

Piano Forte,	$10 00
Oil Painting,	7 00
Drawing,	2 00

The entire expense for an academic year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except for the extras named above,) need not exceed seventy-five dollars.

For the convenience of such as choose to board themselves, rooms are furnished at a moderate expense.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment or satisfactory arrangement.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trustees.

ALFRED, June 23, 1846.

DE RUYTER INSTITUTE.

TEACHERS' Classses will be formed at the opening of the fall term, September 16, to continue seven weeks, which will be exercised in practical teaching under the immediate supervision of the Principals, with a thorough review of the common-school studies. Lectures on the theory of teaching, and other important subjects, will form a part of the daily exercises. The Principals will be assisted by Hon. Edward Cooper and the County Superintendents of Madison and Cortland Counties. All the improvements and important suggestions of the day in the art of teaching, will be brought before the class for their consideration.

For the Sabbath Recorder.

SUNDAY LAWS:

It is the duty of all good Citizens to seek their repeal by peaceable and Constitutional means.

The Sunday Laws are admitted, even by the advocates thereof, to be without specific Bible requirement. To say the least, then, it would be no offence against divine precept to repeal them. Where there is no law, there is no transgression. If any one feels a pious horror at the idea of repealing all Sunday laws, let him say what divine law will be violated thereby! Where is the Bible law which requires Gentile governments to enforce the observance of the Christian Sabbath? It cannot be found. Why then should man legislate for God, where God himself has not legislated? "Who hath required this at their hands?"

But there is another view of the subject, which lays an imperious obligation upon every good citizen to seek the repeal of the Sunday laws. So far as they operate upon the divine law of the Sabbath, they are against it. Only look at it; human laws repeal the divine laws, just so far as their influence extends! The divine law says that the seventh or last day of the week is the Sabbath; the first day and the following five are working days. Human law says that the seventh day is not the Sabbath, that the first day is the Sabbath, and shall not be a working day; whoever works on that day shall be fined four dollars. Who is willing to give his influence in favor of a human law which repeals or violates the divine law? Just so far as our governments do this, they are parties to that great apostacy which is foretold in the book of God, as changing times and laws, and sitting in the temple of God, shewing himself that he is God. Against this apostacy—this usurpation of the divine prerogatives—God has uttered most fearful predictions. He has said, "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her plagues." Must we consent to be parties to these usurpations in a government the laws of which are said to be the voice of the people? Shall our State authorities be permitted to compel any man to receive this mark of the great Apocalyptic beast? Did not the Puritans hold it to be their duty to protest against a compulsory submission to a state-appointed Episcopacy? Do not the Dissenters of England, and the Free Church of Scotland, raise an uncompromising opposition to State establishments of religion? Are they not considered to be the friends of religion, good order, and just government, in so doing? With a majority of our citizens, we know that these are established principles. Our position is of a similar character, and equally defensible with the positions of those parties; and although some may demur at first, we have no doubt of its being as triumphantly established.

We are often told that we are but a small minority, and ought to submit! The religious bigots and tyrants of Europe have ever told the parties we have just named the same thing; and on the same principle have tyranized over them unto this day, yielding them nothing, until their growing numbers and influence have wrested one right after another from their unwilling masters. Is it to be so with us and our State governments? We shall see?

Canting hypocrisy says: "It is unfortunate that you cannot agree with the majority, and keep the generally-received, and long-established Sabbath of the land; but you have privileges, and you ought therewith to be content!" So the British hierarchists say to the Dissenters of England. So the slaveholder says to the slave when he complains that he has not his rignts as a MAN. Our kind advisers doubtless think, in all sincerity, that they preach gospel to us when they talk about our privileges. Then we are not freemen like yourselves, but privileged errorists, and stubborn Jews! Well, suppose we reciprocate the favors of our generous and sage advisers, and preach a little of the law and the gospel also, and say, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them." Ye kind-hearted advisers, would it be right, if we could bring it to pass, to make a law to compel all the first-day people within the bounds of our "own settlements," where we are a majority, to keep the seventh day as the Sabbath, or be fined four dollars, or imprisoned one week? Every body exclaims, No! Is it right then to compel us to keep the first day? We say, No.

We expect but little, however, from preaching the gospel to men who have power and prejudice to restrain us. We therefore plant ourselves on divine right, and say to our opponents, as the apostles said to the high-priest and his coadjutors, when they accused them of disobeying their commands, "Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye." Paul, when his rights were trampled upon, said, "I appeal to Cæsar; I am a Roman." The Sunday laws trample upon our rights, and we appeal to the Constitution of the United States. We are Americans, and are entitled to the benefit of all the fundamental laws of our country. We ask no prescriptive privileges, no special favors for our own particular settlements. The whole of the United States and its Territories are our settlements. Obeying the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus, we are as much entitled to the character of Christians as the most numerous sect in the land; and our consciences are as much entitled to the panoply of the fundamental laws of the land. There is no more right in legislators to enact laws to compel the observance of Sunday, than there is to enact laws to gather church tithes. The principle, in one case, is the same as in the other.

Do you ask what we want? We answer, that we want no human law to compel the observance of the Sabbath, either in our "own settlements" or any other place. We have a divine law for that, with all the awful sanctions of Jehovah's favor or displeasure. Fines and imprisonments only lower the dignity and authority of the holy Sabbath, and would avail nothing towards promoting its observance, even if they were applied to the seventh day instead of the first. God says, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." If a man does not fear eternal death, will he fear a week's imprisonment? We had rather have the Sabbath law stand in all the majesty of one of the unchangeable commandments of God, than to have it frittered away by human legislation to an ordinance of frail and fallible man. God does not ask it of us. There is no part of the counsel of God to Gentiles which requires of human legislators the establishment of a single article of religion. It is therefore no part of our desire to obtain any law for the establishment of the Sabbath day. All that we ask for the Sabbath is, that we, and any others who please, may be permitted to keep it unto the Lord, without being liable to do public business on that day. We do not want to take away this privilege from the observers of the first day. We believe that the Constitution guarantees these exemptions to them and to us. It says, "No law shall be made prohibiting the free exercise of religion." We ask what others enjoy, and we heartily accord to others all that we ask for ourselves. In some of the States, exemptions are secured to us by satisfactory statutory provisions. They ought to be in all the States. Invidious distinctions of a religious character are odious in a free republic. Our petitions to the several State Legislatures differ in this respect very materially from those which have been presented from time to time for laws concerning the first day of the week. They ask for power to coerce men to keep the day, whether they believe it right or not. We ask for laws to allow all men to act as their consciences shall dictate—to keep either the Sabbath or Sunday, or, if they see fit, to keep no day in particular, without suffering punishment from human government. We believe it to be a matter between God and their own souls, and consequently that human legislation has of right nothing to do with it. We say that the laws which compel the observance of Sunday as a religious day are unconstitutional, and very oppressive upon all conscientious observers of the seventh day of the week. Their only effect is to subserve sectarian purposes. They are not required by Jehovah or by Jesus Christ. If either the Christian or the Jewish Scriptures require the governments of Gentile nations to enforce by penal statutes the religious observance of the first day of the week, let that injunction be pointed out, and we promise to abandon our position. There is reason to believe, that the morals of the people would be better without Sunday laws than with them. Individual responsibility would be more generally felt, and the awful sanctions of Jehovah's displeasure or favor, would not be concealed behind a four dollar fine, or a week's imprisonment! The interests of the State would all be promoted, rather than injured, by the repeal of Sunday laws, the only effect of such repeal being to extend legal sanctions to business lawfully transacted on the first day of the week.

We are aware that many estimable people have been so long accustomed to regard the statute laws in favor of Sunday-keeping as right and useful, that to propose their entire abolition will appear sacrilegious. To such as have common sense to discern between right and wrong, between a divine requirement and a human usurpation, we say, Review your position. Give this subject the severest scrutiny. If our principles are unsound, expose them, or procure some one to expose them. If they are right, we ask not special favors. Truth we honor—error we discard. S. D.

A Chinese, who professed to be a follower of the Lord Jesus Christ, was asked, "What is now the state of your heart?" He replied, "Formerly my mind was smoky; now I enjoy some light. Formerly it was like a boisterous sea; now it is calm. Formerly I loved myself; now I love every body."

LUTHER'S EVENING HYMN.

1 Thou only God, the Three in One,
Eternal is thy shining throne;
The sun on us forbears to shine,
O cheer our souls with light divine.

2 At morn to thee we offer'd praise,
And now our evening song we raise;
For all thy grace would honor thee,
Now—onward—through eternity.

3 Our Father—praise to Thee we give,— Thou Son of God—our praise receive,—
Thou Holy Ghost—we grace implore,
To praise our God for ever more.

CHRISTIAN CHEERFULNESS.

There appears a real distinction between pleasantry and levity, though this distinction, considering the different humors, and consequently the different opinions of men, cannot so easily be marked, so as to define always where one ends and the other begins. Gloomy tempers are prone to censure (and especially upon subjects of a serious and solemn nature) the least departure from that which particularly suits them. People of more cheerful dispositions can be pleased, nay, I believe, can be advantaged, by lively expressions and representations of the most sacred and important truths. I remember to have heard, that once, in a large company assembled on some particular occasion, two ministers, strangers to each other, were invited to meet; the one a man of great wit and vivacity, like yourself; and the other of a melancholy turn, rendered, perhaps, still more melancholic by repeated trials and sufferings. The pleasant man indulged his vein, and frequently excited a degree of mirth in the circle about him; the other, surprised at what appeared to him a conduct quite out of order, sat in silence, wrapt up in reserve. Towards the breaking up of the company, the cheerful minister was called upon to be the voice of the rest in prayer to God, in which exercise his soul was so carried out in sublime communion, and the most ardent excitations of spiritual life and love, that it seemed a flame from heaven, diffused and enkindled in the hearts of all about him. When they arose, the dear melancholic man went up to him, with tears streaming from his eyes, and addressed him to the following purpose:—"My dear brother, forgive me, I beseech you. Here have I been for this whole afternoon, condemning you as a person of a light and frothy mind, talking utterly unworthy, not only of a Christian minister, but of a Christian man; but I see and confess, from what God has done in you, and enabled you to utter in prayer before him, and in the presence of this company, that the fault is all my own, and that gloominess of mind is no necessary part of true religion, nor cheerfulness of mind an enemy to it." Having said this, he cordially embraced his no less affectionate brother, with mutual tears of joy. [Serle.

GOOD FRIDAY IN PERU.

The dramatic representations of scenes in the life of Christ, introduced by the Spanish monks who accompanied Pizarro, with a view to the easier conversion of the Aborigines, have long been discontinued in the larger Peruvian cities. But in the Sierra they are still kept up, and all the efforts of enlightened priests to suppress them, have been frustrated by the tenacity and threats of the Indians. Dr. Tschudi gives an extraordinary description of the celebration of Good Friday. "From early dawn," he says, "the church is crammed with Indians, who pass the morning in fasting and prayer. At two in the afternoon a large image of the Saviour is brought out of the sacristy and laid down near the altar, which is veiled. No sooner does this occur than the whole congregation rush forward and strive to touch the wounds with scraps of cotton, and then ensues a screaming, crowding, and fighting, only to be equaled by the uproar at an ill-conducted fair, until the priests at last succeed in restoring order. The figure of the Saviour is now attached to the cross with three very large silver nails, and a rich silver crown is placed upon its head; on either side are the crosses of the two thieves. The Indians gaze their fill and leave the church, but return thither at eight in the evening. The edifice is then brilliantly illuminated, and at the foot of the cross stand, wrapped in white robes, four priests, the santos varones or holy men, whose office it is to take down the body of the Saviour. A short distance off, upon a stage or scaffolding, stands the Virgin Mary, in deep mourning, and with a white cloth round her head. In a long discourse a priest explains the scene to the congregation, and at the close of his sermon, turning to the santos varones, he says—'Ye holy men, mount the ladder of the cross, and bring down the body of the dead Saviour!' Two of the priests ascend with hammers, and the preacher continues—'Thou holy man on the right side of the Saviour, strike the first blow upon the nail in the hand, and take it out!' The hammer falls, and the sound of the blow is the signal for the cry of Misericordia! Misericordia! repeated by thousands of voices in tones of anguish so heart-rending, as to produce a strangely painful impression upon the hearer. The nail is handed to a priest at the foot of the cross, to be taken to the Virgin Mary, still standing upon her scaffold. To her the preacher now addresses himself with the words—'Thou afflicted mother, approach and receive the nail that pierced the right hand of thy blessed son!' And as the priest draws near to the image of the Virgin, the latter, moved by a secret mechanism, advances to meet him, receives the nail in both hands, places it in a silver bowl, dries its eyes, and returns to its place. These movements are repeated when the two other nails and the crown are brought down. The whole scene has for accompaniment the unintermitting howling and sobbing of the Indians, which redouble at each stroke of the hammer, and reaches its apogee when the body is delivered to the Virgin, who then again begins to weep violently. The image of Christ is laid in a coffin adorned with flowers, and is carried by torchlight through every street in the town. Whilst the procession makes its circuit, the Indians erect twelve arches of flowers in front of the church door, placing between each two of them a carpet of the like materials, the simplest and most beautiful that it is possible to see. Each carpet is manufactured by two Indians, neither of whom seems to trouble himself about the proceedings of his comrad; but yet, with incredible rapidity and a wonderful harmony of operation, the most tasteful designs grow under their hands in rich variety of colors. Arabesques, landscapes, and animals, appear as if by magic. It was highly interesting to me to observe in Tarma, upon one of these carpets, an exact representation of the Austrian double eagle, as the Indians had seen it on the quicksilver jars from Idria. When the procession returns, the Virgin Mary is carried back to the church through the arches of flowers."

A MOHAMMEDAN DISCOMFITED.

Mr. Drose, who is sustained by the Berlin Missionary Society at Ghazipoor, a few miles below Benares, declared in the presence of several Mohammedans, who pledged themselves to prove from the Holy Scriptures that Mohammed was indeed a prophet sent by God, that in case they succeeded he would himself become a follower of the prophet of Mecca. Preparations were immediately made for a learned contest. The missionary was conducted to a Mohammedan school-house, and a chair was brought to him. The Mohammedans who were present, sat down at the same time on their carpets. They appeared, however, to be waiting for some one else; for the eyes of the assembly were directed, from time to time, to the door. At length a man of very noble aspect arrived, richly dressed, and carried by four bearers, in a palanquin. He was the most learned moollah in the place. All rose up respectfully. There had been already prepared for him a sort of platform, covered with carpets; this he mounted with uncovered feet. He then beckoned four of the most distinguished Mohammedans to himself, laid his hands upon them to bless them, and caused them to be seated, two upon his right and two upon his left. Next he sat down himself, and looked around, earnestly and deliberately, till the missionary spoke to him.

The contest now began. Several copies of the New Testament were produced, and the fourteenth chapter of John was found. Upon every verse a dispute arose, wherein, the Mussulman endeavored to convince the missionary that Christians misunderstood their sacred writings. Finally he came to the thirtieth verse: "Hereafter I will not talk much with you, for the prince of this world cometh." It passed through the mind of the moollah, like a flash of lightning: The prince of this world is no other than Mohammed; who, as the seal of the prophets, was to become a teacher after the Nazarene, and win over and govern the world by his doctrine." He read the passage again, then expatiated in triumphant language on the glory of Mohammed, who was here spoken of, and closed by calling upon the missionary, in an earnest and imposing tone, to believe in him whom Christ himself had foretold as a prince and lord of this world. But alas! for the moollah. Mr. Drose showed that by the prince of this world the Scriptures meant simply the Devil! He became white with anger, and gnashed his teeth through inward rage. In the net which he had hid, was his own foot taken; and he was snared in the work of his own hands!

HUMAN SACRIFICES STILL OFFERED.

The impression now prevails that these horrid rites have been abolished in India. Alas, the impression is not correct! The Bengal Hurkaru, of August 5, 1845, mentions a government act to suppress human sacrifices in the hill tracks of Orissa, and then gives the following shocking account of the manner in which the victims are procured and slaughtered. Surely 'the dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty!'

The wild hill-tribes appear to exhibit the remnants of three aboriginal races—the Koles, the Khands, and Saurahs. The Koles prevail chiefly in the northern parts, the Khands in the middle regions, and the Saurahs in the South.

Now it is among the Khands, the largest and most numerous of these races, that the horrid practice of human sacrifices was found so widely and systematically to prevail. It is to propitiate the earth-god—the greatest of the Khand deities—that the sanguinary rite is performed. It is considered necessary that every farm should share the blood of a human victim at the time when each of the principal crops is laid down, while a harvest oblation is deemed scarcely less than a spring sacrifice; and it is considered in the last degree desirable that the several offerings, according to the promise of the year, should intervene between them. Besides those regular periodical offerings, there are others constantly demanded by special events and circumstances. The prevalence of unusual sickness, the visitation of an epidemic, the ravages of wild beasts, drought, famine, or, in a word, any extraordinary calamity, of any kind, whether affecting individuals or the community at large—all, all are believed to call for public expiation, or atonement with human blood, to avert the supposed wrath of that dread deity—earth-god.

From the fluctuating variety of circumstances that may lead to the performance of these bloody sacrifices, it is plainly impossible to form a precise estimate of their annual average. In one small valley, two miles long, and less than three quarters of a mile in breadth, Captain M'Pherson reports that he 'discovered seven victims whose immolation was temporarily prevented by the vicinity of the British troops, but it was to take place immediately after their departure.' One thing, therefore, is very certain, and that is, that the number annually sacrificed must amount to many hundreds, and probably even to thousands; opening up a spectacle of barbarism, in the very heart of the India-British dominions, which no humane spirit can contemplate without a thrill of horror.

AUTUMN.

The season of sad associations, of serious thoughts, of dreams half gloomy and half pleasant, of a soothing, delicious melancholy. O! I do love thee, Autumn, with all thy sadness. I know full well thou bringest along with thee the tokens of decay and death, but there is a beauty, a chastening influence in that decay which makes thee so lovely, and throws such a breathing holiness over all the scene, that thou art endeared to me as a cherished sister, and I think of thee and speak of thee with all the tenderness that associates itself with the memory of a departed friend. I love to hear the rustling of the faded leaves, as they bid adieu to the parent tree, and throw themselves upon the bosom of the gentle gales to follow their bidding. I love the singing of thy winds, though I feel that they are singing their requiem over the bright things of summer. I love the splendid drapery of thy forests, the thousand glorious hues in which they are decked, though I know that this is but the lightening up of the spirit of beauty for a moment ere its final extinction. Yes, elder daughter of the year, I love thy scenes, all thy associations. I am under thy strange influence, yet happy. I would not be gay if I could. There is a subdued reverence in my affection for thee, which banishes every thing that might seem to bespeak a forgetfulness that thou art with me. O how many times have I breathed the wish that thou mightest be near to me when I am dying. I never feel so willing to go as when my spirit has drunk in the sweet and soothing sadness of thine own. I look around me, and all is changed—the earth has folded up her garment of green—the flowers have perished—the birds have gone, their glad music is hushed in silence—the winds have gathered the leaves to their burial—and why should I wish to stay when all are going? O come then, gentle Autumn, when my time is arrived, come, take me by the hand, and I will go with thee willingly. [Rev. T. B. Thayer.

THE SUN BEHIND THE CLOUD.

The children of God have an eternal and overflowing fountain of consolation open, in the plan of Gospel discipline and salvation which is set before them. There is no condition, no trial, no sorrow, no gloom and heaviness of spirit, to which it is not adapted, and to which it is not fully adequate for all the relief that it is best for them to receive. Journeying through this vale of tears, they must needs pass through many a dark and gloomy avenue. Storms, yea tempests of sorrow and distress will assail them, and beat upon them. From the dark cloud that is over them, the thunders will be heard and the lightning-flash be seen. Bow to the storm they must; its violence will admit of no effectual resistance. But look! battered and wayworn traveler, as thou liest prostrate in the dust by reason of the violence of the tempest; direct your sight beyond the dark and frowning borders of that cloud which is bursting with all its violence upon you. See! there is a streak of clear sky beyond, of golden light diffusing its thousand splendors abroad. I do not speak of the radiance of the natural sun, with his cheering beams, but of the more splendid radiance of the Sun of Righteousness, spreading far and wide around him celestial glory, such as beams from the throne of God. That Sun will shine, when darkness and storm, when all other suns and stars shall have passed away. It will beam on your path, and conduct you and cheer you onward to that blessed place where the Lord Jesus will be your everlasting light, and the Saviour God a glory that will never wane.

GEMS FROM JOHN FLAVEL.

What an excellent, lovely one is Christ! Put the beauty of ten thousand paradises like the garden of Eden into one; put all trees, and all flowers, all smells, all colors, all tastes, all joys, all sweetness, all loveliness in one; oh what a fair and excellent thing would that be! And yet it should be less to that fair and well-beloved Christ, than one drop of rain to the whole seas, rivers, lakes and fountains of ten thousand earths.

To be studying Jesus Christ, what is it but to be digging among all the veins and springs of comfort? and the deeper you dig, the more do these springs flow upon you.

Christ is the original and fountain of all the light which is ministerially diffused by men. Ministers are but planets which shine with a borrowed light from the sun.

As when God looks upon the rainbow, which is the sign of the covenant, he remembers the earth in mercy; so when he looks on Christ, he remembers us upon his account.

"I AM."—Who ever conceived a more beautiful illustration of a sublime text than the following by Bishop Beverige? "I AM." He doth not say, I AM their light, their guide, their strength, or tower, but only "I AM." He sets as it were his hand to a blank, that his people may write under it what they please that is good for them. As if he should say, "Are they weak? I AM strength. Are they poor? I AM riches. Are they in trouble? I AM comfort. Are they sick? I AM health. Are they dying? I AM life. Have they nothing? I AM all things. I AM wisdom and power; I AM justice and mercy; I AM grace and goodness; I AM glory, beauty, eoliness, eminency, supereminency, perfection, all-sufficiency, eternity! JEHOVAH, I AM! Whatsoever is amiable in itself, or desirable unto them, that I AM. Whatsoever is pure and holy; whatsoever is good or needful to make men happy, I AM."

POSITION OF SABBATH-KEEPERS.

It is the universal sentiment of mankind, in civilized society, as well as in savage life; in the church, as well as out of the church; at present, as well as in all former ages, that he who will not assert and manfully defend his rights, by all proper means, is not worthy any high privileges; that he who sits down supinely and allows his inherent rights to be wrested from him and trampled upon, will soon, very soon, have none left to enjoy, or none to be taken away.

Opposed as we are in principle to contention and conflict, under ordinary circumstances, yet it often becomes our duty to maintain our rights with all our ability, especially when fidelity to our high calling involves vital principles, and those which are not simply personal but which pertain to the welfare of others; and that the more imperatively, when the integrity of the law of our Maker is concerned and the peculiar privilege of honoring Him and his institutions is put in jeopardy, by having the crafty inventions of man foisted on our observance, by fines and penalties, in direct violation of our inherent rights and charter immunities. To receive the testimonies of the Lord into honest hearts and resist "the commandments of men," which conflict with His prerogatives and detract from his unlimited sovereignty, is the liberty wherewith the Gospel has made us free. The Lord alone is lawgiver in Zion, and his Word the only rule of faith and practice. As his disciples we are required to "contend for the faith once delivered to the saints." In this matter we are not our own; "we are bought with a price;" we have pledged our allegiance to Heaven, and have to "fight the good fight of faith," like true "soldiers of the Cross." None but a dastard will deny his Master or forsake his Master's cause in the hour of trial or dismay. None but a craven spirit, unworthy the name of a disciple, will refuse to magnify his name and his requirements when persecuted for the truth's sake.

Our lines have fallen to us in pleasant places; we have a goodly heritage; we ought to appreciate it above all earthly blessings, and ever be ready to defend it as the periapt of our lives. It would be criminal in us, who have had these high, these inestimable privileges bestowed upon us by our Heavenly Father, not to continue steadfast and faithful, giving him all the glory; more criminal than Esau, to sell his birthright for a mess of potage, yea, infinitely more criminal, doubly criminal, for those who have inherited this peculiar favor of God, not to battle, and battle zealously, for his truth and his supremacy.

Heretofore our high privileges have not cost us, the present generation, any thing. Like the bursting fruit, it has fallen into our lap. Not so with our fathers. Persecuted for conscience sake, and pursued with fire and fagot, yet they endured all things, and were faithful unto the end, rather than renounce or forsake their holy principles; and when there was no City of Refuge on the iron glebe of Europe, rather than submit to ecclesiastical domination in any form, they sacrificed all earthly possessions and social endearments—their homes and the graves of their kindred, to seek an asylum in the western main, beyond the raging billows. After encountering the perils of the deep and the ferocity of the wild savage, and even facing the cannon's mouth to gain their freedom, they esteemed it cheaply earned, to sit down under their own vine and fig-tree, to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own consciences. And if they endured all these sacrifices to gain that inestimable privilege, shall we, their descendants, prove ourselves unworthy our noble ancestors, by relinquishing the blessed boon, without an effort to save it when trampled upon by sectarian prejudices and unjust legislation? Thank God! we have not to go into the battle field and shed human blood to save our rights being wrested from us; but craven, truckling paltroons would we be, were we not to fly to the rescue and exert our every peaceable effort, to sustain our rights against legislative enactments, when this can be done by simply appealing to the charter of our liberties, and the constituted authorities established for our defence.

Happy, thrice happy are we in the wise construction of our government. Its fundamental principles, secured by a Constitution that cannot be changed or cast aside by the fitful caprices of ephemeral demagogues, but which are placed beyond hasty, meddling legislation, or the machinations of an arbitrary Executive, give a stability to our institutions not surpassed by any nation or people on the face of the globe. When infringed by partial legislation or despotic power, we have a resource beyond the treachery of brawling politicians, or aspiring ambition, in an elevated and independent Judiciary. It is to that tribunal we must resort for redress—not to the battle field, not to legislative halls, not to an imperious Ruler, to beg for what belongs to us, but to demand an award to our constitutional immunities. When the Supreme Court of the United States shall sustain the Sunday laws of the States, and shall proclaim a sentence which will make all freemen blush for their country, and I am forced to believe, that I have no religious freedom, no religious rights but what the body politic may choose to bestow or withhold—then, and not till then, will I go to any legislative body to ask for what belongs to me as a right, and a right that is not to be taken from me.

The Seventh-day Baptists, in common with all citizens of our happy Republic, are secured in their religious rights, religious equality, and religious privileges. That glorious Constitution suffers no ban on any individual's religious principles, no preference to be given to any sect or party; and in that wise provision is our only hope, our only security; yet, by legislative enactments, many of the States have imposed fines and penalties, and Justices of the Peace have enforced them against freemen of the Republic for exercising their constitutional right of worshiping Almighty God on his own appointed, hallowed, sanctified day, and pursuing their own avocations the other six days of the week. Thus the Seventh-day Baptists, on violation of vested rights and immunities, are forced to yield two sevenths of their time to religious rest, while other denominations observe but one seventh, and that not the day required by the Word of God; and strange inconsistency, their persecutors, proven on trial to be the greater violaters of the statute—guilty of open, flagrant immoralities, reveling in vices and crimes, regardless of God or man, on that very day—escape, and prosecute with perfect immunity—strange as it may appear, yet it is nevertheless the fact, with this testimony before the public functionary, the Seventh-day Baptists are mulcted and the vagabond escapes. Thus, under these unjust enactments, the ungodly oppress and the righteous suffer; and this in the land of vaunted liberty and equality. And thus they must suffer until they appeal to the charter of our liberties, the ever glorious Constitution. By that instrument, our liberties, our religious equality, and religious rights, are inviolably secured, and so secured that they cannot be shaken or wrested from us by the action of any State Legislature. Our legislatures have not any thing to do with the toleration of religion. It is an inherent right, a reserved right in the people, in each individual himself, never delegated to Congress, or any legislative body. All toleration, or attempts at toleration, in matters of religious faith or practice, is not only a usurpation, but the vilest tyranny; because it assumes the power to grant or withhold religious privileges. We utterly deny, that any State, or the Federal Government, have any power to legislate on this subject. Neither of them have the power to pass any law abridging the religious rights of any citizen or class of citizens. It is an infraction, a wanton infraction of the Constitution of the United States. None but infatuated bigots have the effrontery to justify the assumption.

When first adopted, the Constitution of the United States contained no express provision for the security of religious freedom; though no power whatever was delegated to interfere in any way, whatever, with it. It was silent on the subject, from the general conviction of the absurdity of that point ever being disputed. It was, by common consent, recognized as an inherent and indefeasible right that could never be assailed; that could not be questioned for a moment by any one who had the least sense of the meaning of American liberty! The power to interfere was not delegated, and consequently no attempt to act on it could ever be entertained. This is to be inferred, fairly, from the reply of General Washington, who was President of the Convention which formed the Constitution, to a letter received from a First-day Baptist church in Virginia, bearing date, August 4th, 1789, in which he emphatically remarks: "If I had the least idea of any difficulty resulting from the Constitution adopted by the Convention of which I had the honor to be the President, when it was framed, so as to endanger the rights of any religious denomination, I never should have attached my name to that instrument. If I had any idea that the General Government was so administered that the liberty of conscience was endangered, I pray you be assured, that no man would be more willing than myself to revise and alter that part of it, so as to avoid all religious persecution. You can, without doubt, remember, that I have often expressed as my opinion, that every man who conducts himself as a good citizen, is accountable alone to God for his religious faith, and should be protected in worshiping God according to the dictates of his conscience." Looking on the Constitution, presented for their adoption, as not expressing explicitly a full guarantee on this, as well as some other subjects of much moment, "the Conventions of a number of the States, at the time of their adopting the Constitution, expressed a desire, in order to prevent misconstruction, or abuse of its powers, that farther declaratory and restrictive clauses should be added."* The following amendment (Art. III.) was proposed and formally ratified: "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." This was incorporated to settle the question forever—a provision which extends over all States and Territories from the Atlantic to the Pacific—from the Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico—throughout the whole length and breadth of the Union; for the second section of Art. IV, declares: "This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, shall be the supreme law of the land, and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, any thing in the Constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding." This, and this only, is our security. It covers the whole ground. State legislatures have and may continue to enact Sunday laws and impose penalties for laboring on the first day of the week, and thus trample on the rights of those who conscientiously observe the seventh day as the Sabbath, and they are null and void, and will be swept to the winds wherever the issue is carried up to the proper tribunal provided for our case, and the only resort left us. We have been despoiled of our sacred rights and denied redress, time after time, at legislative halls. The prejudices in favor of Sunday exclusively, even to the injury of those who religiously observe the seventh day, are too inveterate to listen to our claims. Relying on their own numbers, and our slender minority, they superciliously repulse us, and taunt us with our inability to stay the injustice inflicted upon us. This was unblushingly expressed, repeatedly, by members of the legislature, to whom we appealed, on setting us aside unceremoniously, openly avowing that we "were too few to be regarded." Others do not, and are determined not to look at the justice of our claims, or the injustice with which we are treated, as compeers of the Republic; they look not, and are determined not look at the principle involved; they look not, and are determined not to look at the violence done to the fundamental law of the land, nor the violence done to our rights and our feelings. They have the advantage by fair or by foul, and they are determined to keep that advantage, right or wrong. Their prejudices are gratified, and they are determined to keep them gratified. They look not to the past to estimate correct principles, neither do they look forward to contemplate consequences. The present is all with them. They have the advantage now, and they will maintain the advantage at all hazards.

The truth is, we, as a nation, have deteriorated incalculably since the days of the Revolution, in virtue and in patriotism. There is now scarcely a vestige of the self-sacrificing devotion to the public weal and republican rectitude left; we are fast degenerating into a contracted, headstrong cabal, reckless of principle and utterly disregarding those high ennobling purposes which alone can make us a great and prosperous people. The virtue and integrity of the populace have long since ceased to inspire my confidence, especially in matters which come in conflict with their prejudices. If our rights are not secured in our Magna Charta, I shall despair of ever having them restored by popular clamor. Popular clamor crucified the Redeemer—they "hated him without a cause," they will hate us without a cause; popular clamor and sectarian bigotry, murdered the Apostles, and persecuted the saints unto death. Human nature is still the same. Give man power and he will abuse it—the strong will trample on the weak; and if left to the tender mercies of sectarian prejudices, we may never hope for restitution of our rights which have been wrested from us by unjust, by iniquitous legislation.

As I have but little confidence in popular clamor, I have still less in the miserable tools they often invest with a "little brief authority." Fawning sycophants at one moment, they become intriguing and arrogant the instant they are clothed with power to menace. We look in vain now-a-days, for the republican simplicity and stern integrity of the statesmen of the Revolution. For years past I have been completely disgusted with the hollow-hearted professions of demagogues, during an electioneering campaign, and their subsequent treachery and prostitution. At the polls, their whole souls are burdened with love for the "rights of the people"—the "dear people"—"Equal rights! equal rights!! equal rights!!!" they shout and reiterate, again and again; but when an opportunity is presented of giving proof of their professions, they skulk away and deride appeals; leaving the dear, deluded people, to stare at their over creduility. There is but little of the high minded, magnanimous patriotism of our revolutionary sires left amongst us; but few retrace the spirit which animated the founders of our Republic, or recognize the fundamental principles of the ground work of the compact. Self, clique and sect, are the main considerations of our public men, and so long as we have in private life a body of contracted men, exercising a superstitious awe over the actions of the populace, with narrow minds and flinty hearts, yet swaying the ignorant mass by operating on ther prejudices, I have but little hope from any appeals to the people or to legislatures. I trust not in their magnanimity—my hope, my only hope, is in the Constitution. True there are some enlightened, generous minds, who look beyond the bubbles of the day, and take a comprehensive survey of our institutions, acknowledge the fundamental principles of our confederation, and concede our rights; but they take no special or active interest in our cause; they run not against public prejudices; they espouse not, succor not, with a true patriotic, self-sacrificing spirit, the cause of oppressed rights, from pure devotion to the sacred principles of liberty, of religious freedom and human rights. The day may come, however, when all the protestant family in the land, may see this their present error. The day of retribution may come, when they may be trodden down by a wide spreading hierarchy, avowedly proclaiming ecclesiastical control over the whole globe—then, and not till then, will they awake to the danger of tampering with religious immunities, and restraining religious rights by coercion laws. I have no hope, no expectation of finding the mass or the leaders of the mass, fall back on fundamental principles and be willing to yield to us our indefeasible rights, until they are overtaken by a like persecution. All is darkness in the political hemisphere; and, with but few exceptions, all is darkness, thick darkness, impenetrable darkness, in the benighted ranks of the protestant phalanx. The hand of our natural ally is against us—her sullen mien and treacherous kiss, as dark and repulsive as the casas santas of the Inquisition—dark and as unrelenting as the anathemas of the Roman Pontiff. Our hope, and only hope, is in rights secured by the charter of our liberties. The experience of every day, all my intercourse and every transaction of life around me, impresses me more fully of the fallacy of looking for justice or sympathy to bigoted partizans or prejudiced legislators. Our moorings have been cut loose—we have been sent adrift—our only Ararat is the Constitution of the United States.

During a professional trip to Massachusetts in May last, I felt some interest in visiting the classic spots of the Revolution—ground sacred to the cause of American Independence. I was carried to Lexington, whose soil was stained with the first blood in the cause of American rights; and as I read the inscription on the modest tablet erected to commemorate that event, the thought irrepressibly arose and struggled until it gained utterance: "How sadly are your pure spirits repaid, on witnessing within the first century of the Republic, a pilgrim, visiting this shrine of freedom, and bewailing the degeneracy of its pristine glory—lamenting, deeply lamenting, to find the cause, religious liberty, for which ye shed your blood so freely, is now, even now, trampled upon in this land of vaunted equality." I then walked the rounds of Bunker's height, where American chivalry posted themselves against immense odds, to resist monarchical enactments, and maintain the free exercise of civil and religious liberty. I looked up to discover some device proclaiming the eternal principles of universal, unsullied freedom!—but I looked in vain. There stood the cold massive pile, without any insigna that told of an asylum for the oppressed, or proffering a refuge to the persecuted for conscience sake. I looked in vain, for its foundation is laid in soil overshadowed by Sunday enactments and coercion laws. I next stood in Fanueil Hall—the cradle of American Liberty—where the tocsin of Freedom was first sounded; where a Hancock and the Adamses proclaimed the heaven-born principle of unfettered equality. As I stood on the rostrum on which they stood, in times that tried men's souls, rallying the people to the defence of their unalienable rights, methought their guardian shades still hovered over the sacred spot, and my spirit partook of their dewy blessing. My bosom beat with holy transports, my soul burned with irrepressible enthusiasm, and I insensibly shouted hosannas to American Freedom!———but when I thought of my brethren at Snowhill, suffering persecution and fines for conscience sake, I turned to the wall and wept. It blighted my spirit, smothered all my aspirations, and crushed my very soul. In Fanueil Hall I had to mourn the loss of all that is dearer than life, the loss of religious liberty, and was brought to realize, that on American soil religious liberty is but a name.

I left these time-honored walls with a stricken spirit; but on approaching the Common, Old Boston Common, animate with life, crowded by a gay multitude, disporting on its beautiful sward, in commingled freedom, I was forced to acknowledge, that we must still be a favored, a free people. Strains of martial music reached my ears, and the waving plumes of the veteran military met my sight, while the busy hum and loud peals of merry glee, proclaimed it to be a gala-day. It was the anniversary of the "Honorable Ancient Artillery Company"—a company of two hundred years standing; on whose annual parade, the people go out, en masse, to celebrate the day with them, and it is the custom for the Governor of the State, on that occasion, to take his chair into the enclosure, to give additional zest to the festivities. There sat the old Governor, and over his head waved the flag of my country, floating gracefully in the balmy breeze. As I beheld its playing folds, I could not but exclaim: "Long wave the star-spangled banner!"—but as I looked, its stripes reminded me of the stripes and imprisonments of my brethren for conscience sake, and I was cast down almost to despair. I looked again, and in its circle of glittering stars, and in its E pluribus unum, I beheld new hope—abiding hope. Whatever States have done, by Sunday legislation and coercion laws, whatever shadows they have cast over the hills and valleys of our respective commonwealths, that flag has never been sullied, has never sanctioned any encroachments on our religious liberties; that flag has never covered any oppression or persecution for conscience sake. New life animated my desponding heart, and I thanked God that there was still a City of Refuge; that in that flag there was a full guarantee of having our rights respected and defended; that we must appeal to it, and it only. And on reflection I rejoiced to find that it has never been appealed to in vain. The only instance in which it has ever been invoked, in this matter, was in the case of the attempt to stop the mails on Sunday—another mode of Sunday coercion—another step to ecclesiastical tyranny—and the response found in the Report of the Committee of the Senate, which was adopted with great unanimity by that venerable body, is an assurance, that the Federal Government is true to its first principles of liberty, and that we may ever trust in the panoply of the Union. That report clearly recognizes the fullest, most perfect religious freedom, as it most unequivocally declares that "Congress acts under a Constitution of delegated and limited powers. The Committee look in vain to that instrument for a delegation of power authorizing this body to inquire and determine what part of time, or whether any, has been set apart by the Almighty for religious exercises. On the contrary, among the few prohibitions, which it contains, is one which prohibits a religious test, and another which declares that Congress shall pass no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof. The law, as it now stands, makes no distinction as to the day of the week. It is the duty of the Government to afford to all—to Jew or Gentile—Pagan or Christian—the protection and advantage of our benignant institutions, on Sunday as well as every day of the week." Up to that glorious standard, then, must we go for the vindication of our rights; for release from oppression; for redress from legislative enactments—to the tribunal established under its authority, to secure the citizens of the republican family, and the States themselves, in their respective rights; and we cannot, and we must not, as a denomination, be satisfied with any decision, depriving us of our rights, until we carry it up to that tribunal—until we put it to the Supreme Court of the United States to declare in the face of the world, if they can, that the American Republic does not tolerate Religious Freedom! They cannot, they never will stultify our Constitution and make our government a laughing stock to all Europe—to the whole civilized world.

This is unequivocally our true position; and our duty, our imperative duty, is equally clear and explicit. The Sovereign of the universe has commanded us to "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work, but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God, in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy man servant, nor thy maid servant, nor thy cattle, nor the stranger within thy gates; for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day; wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it." This Sabbath he has imposed upon us, by a power which belongs to himself, and himself alone, and it is perpetually obligatory on us to "sanctify" that day, until He himself abrogates it, or absolves us from the service. He has never abrogated it, or substituted any other day to be sanctified in its stead, neither has he delegated power to any Potentate, Church, or Legislature; to any Bishop, Priest, or People, to do so—it remains untouched by Divine authority, and is as abiding as the tablet of stone on which the statute is written by the finger of God, the Sabbath of the Lord forever. Until He abrogates it, or absolves the service, it is our solemn duty to observe it, and it only, and not to recognize any other substituted or enforced by man. It is due to the Majesty of Heaven, that we be faithful to this his command; and it is likewise due to ourselves and our posterity, that we preserve, unimpaired, the high privilige of worshiping him according to the dictates of our consciences, and in accordance with his requirements. It is also our duty to resist the encroachments of the secular power, in interfereing with the promotion of the cause of God our Father; for if we suffer the rights of citizenship, the inestimable privileges of religious liberty to be wrested from us, and succumb to the usurpation of political power, in forcing the sanctification of the first day of the week, we do His cause much damage, by recognizing that infringement, and by suffering that encroachment to deter others from embracing the unmutilated Truth. These Sunday laws and their penalties are hindrances to the reception of the truth; and if acquiesced in, must eventually destroy its promulgation throughout the land. Under this unrighteous law, it cannot have free course to glorify God its founder.

Here is a work for us. God has suffered this evil to come upon us to try our loyalty—to test our adhesion to his truth. He has given us a goodly heritage, but has allowed that heritage to be invaded to prove our fealty; to wake us up to our work; to agitate a knowledge of his truth among the nations of the earth sitting in the shadow of darkness—the darkness which leaves them to believe lies—and bowing to idols or idolatrous days. If we prove recreant to our duty, he may destroy our privileges altogether; yet, for the faithfulness of a few, he may save a nation, that has despised his law and trodden down his testimonies. He has committed this trust to our keeping in this portion of his moral vineyard—we have pledged our lives even unto death, to keep his covenant and his testimonies. "Thy testimonies have I taken as an heritage forever; for they are the rejoicing of my heart. I have inclined mine heart to perform thy statutes always, even unto the end," is the implied vow of every true disciple. If we are faithful, the heritage of the saints shall not be wrested from us. "No weapon, saith the Lord, that is formed against thee shall prosper; and every tongue that shall rise against thee in judgment thou shalt condemn. This is the heritage of the servants of the Lord, and their righteousness is of me, saith the Lord;" and his promise, which is sure and steadfast, is renewed in an especial manner to Sabbath-keepers, to encourage them in the performance of their duty, and to sustain them under their trials. "If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable; and shalt honor him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasures, nor speaking thine own words; then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord, and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy father; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." These are our privileges, and this our incumbent duty to inherit the promises. The Lord requires it at our hands; "It shall come to pass, that whosoever will not hearken unto my words which he shall speak in my name, I will require it of him."

Here, then, I repeat, is our veritable position, and our incumbent duty. We must put on the armor of faith and "wrestle with powers and principalities," until we triumph in the name of the Lord. The secular arm has usurped our religious immunities; and inasmuch as it interferes with the free exercise and the reception of the Word of God, it is an infraction of the Constitution of the Union. Requiring any man or set of men to yield more than their voluntary consecration of a seventh part of their time to the service of their Maker, which is all HE requires, is a vile infraction of vested rights, and an insurmountable impediment to the free exercise of religious sentiment, secured to all persons, sects, and denominations. We are called upon by the most sacred sense of duty to arise and wipe out this oppressive, this intolerable invasion on our rights, from the statute books of the land. We owe it to ourselves, to human rights and to our Maker. It is not at variance with the principles of our profession—not inconsistent with our high calling, to resist the wicked subjugation of God's heritage, and maintain, by all peaceable measures and means, our religious privileges. They are the gift of God, and none has the right to make us afraid in the enjoyment thereof. They are secured to us by our Magna Charta; and to that we appeal. Paul, when in bonds, and under sore oppression, appealed to Cæsar. We do no more in appealing to the constituted authorities of our country, and claiming the protection of the privileges due to our citizenship of the Republic. Where is our religious liberty! if we are not permitted to follow the dictates of our own consciences freely, fully, in worshiping our Maker, but are forced to yield another portion of our precious time, than that required by our legitimate Ruler, by the enactment of unequal, inequitable, State statutes? Where is our religious freedom!! if compelled to cease from our indisputable right of the "pursuit of happiness" and the maintenance of our families, by arbitrary penal enactments? Our liberty is but the liberty of slaves—our freedom but the freedom of the dungeon. If we prove recreant to our high trust, we are worthy of fines and shackles; and if we submit to the impious desecration of God's prerogatives and our own privileges, we deserve the rack and the stake.

* Preamble to Amendments to the Constitution, 1789.

THE POOR IN ITALY.—His Eminence Cardinal Gizzi has addressed a circular, dated Rome, August twenty-fourth, to the Governors of the Provinces of the Roman States, calling on them to adopt measures calculated to improve the religious and temporal condition of the poorer classes. The document states that the Pope beholds with the utmost pain the quarrels, thefts, and other misdemeanors constantly recurring throughout the Pontifical States, that the chief causes of this state of society must be found in the idle life which the younger portion of the population are accustomed to lead, and in want of proper instruction to prepare them for gaining an honest living by their industry. His Holiness, in consequence, in addition to his wish to see education and habits of industry generally disseminated throughout his dominions, proposes founding without delay an establishment at Rome for the education of a certain number of boys belonging to the working classes throughout the States, so that they might be, in the first place, removed from the spot where they were likely to contract bad habits; and in the next, might form a nucleus of well-instructed non-commissioned officers, calculated to suffice for the Army required by the State.

ROMANISM IN OREGON.—Accounts are published by the Roman Catholics of their success in Oregon. They claim already more than 6,000 converts among the Indians residing in this territory. Many of the whites are said to be eager to receive instruction in the same religion. The Bishop's college has about forty students, and the Sisters of Notre Dame have fifty boarders. Besides the churches already erected, or now going up, a cathedral is to be built soon. Two convents at least will be in operation at no distant day.

REVIVAL.—We rejoice to learn, that a revival is in progress in the 3d Seventh-day Baptist Church of Hopkinton, R. I. Meetings have been held for some three weeks past by Elds. Alex. Campbell and Alfred B. Burdick. Forty-eight persons have been baptized, of whom forty-six have united with the church.

PROGRESS OF POPERY.—The Rev. Dr. Vaughan, speaking of the popular alarm on account of the progress of Romanism in this country, says:—

"Be not alarmed about the progress of Romanism. You give it strength by that fear; you croak it into power by not treating it as an impostor that it is to be exposed and destroyed; never talk of it as any thing else; never let your children hear you speak of it but as a thing of that character; and let your press always speak of it as that which is to be withered by the advancing enlightenment which is abroad. Be sure of this, the mind of Europe is now teeming with elements of culture that will unfit it for ever bowing again to that degraded yoke. Aye, the men of Europe are already spoiled for tricks of that sort; and women, too, are in the same position. They are both learning—though in some cases, perhaps, rather late—that a noble nature was never designed to be the victim of priestly meddling, priestly craft, and priestly oppression."

EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.—The Doctrinal Basis adopted by this London Convention, after a four day's discussion, is as follows:—

"That the parties composing the Alliance should be such persons only as hold and maintain what are usually understood to be Evangelical views, in regard to the matters of doctrine understated, viz:—

"1. The Divine inspiration, authority and sufficiency of the Holy Scriptures.

"2. The right and duty of private judgment in the interpretation of the Holy Scriptures.

"3. The Unity of the Godhead, and the Trinity of Persons there.

"4. The utter depravity of human nature in consequence of the fall.

"5. The incarnation of the Son of God, his work of atonement for sinners of mankind, and his mediatorial intercession and reign.

"6. The justification of the sinner by faith alone.

"7. The work of the Holy Spirit in the conversion and sanctification of the sinner.

"8. The immortality of the soul, the resurrection of the body, and judgment of the world by our Lord Jesus Christ, with the eternal blessedness of the righteous, and the eternal punishment of the wicked.

"9. The Divine institution of the Christian ministry, and the obligation and perpetuity of the ordinances of Baptism and the Lord's Supper."

RIGHT.—The Advent Herald, which is the principal paper published by the Millerites, has some hard cases to deal with. The following piece of advice to one of its correspondents is a specimen. It speaks our mind exactly.

"Albert Lyford, of Thornton, N. H.—We should willingly continue the papers to you without pay, if you were conforming to the apostolic rule, to 'be not slothful in business, fervent in spirit—serving the Lord;' but when you say, 'I have not done enough work to earn one cent since last January,' and 'I should consider it as great sin as I could commit, with my present light, to do a day's work—if it were to prevent myself and family from starvation or death;' we must frankly tell you, that we do not consider you a subject of charity, and must discontinue your paper after this number. We are told that he that will not work shall not eat; we cannot, therefore, find you with spiritual food even. Again, he that provideth not for his own family, hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel. We do not know that those who are worse than infidels have any claims to receive a gratuitous support, because they are 'living on their faith.' We cannot publish the 'Herald' without working laboriously, and keeping others to work. We cannot, therefore, be so inconsistent to send the result of so mnch labor to those who consider it a sin to labor."

General Intelligence.

FROM THE ARMY—MONTEREY TAKEN.

An extra of the New Orleans Picayune, dated Oct. 4, contains a full account of the storming of Monterey, turning the enemy's guns upon himself, and a victory to General Taylor's Army. Gen. Taylor reached Monterey on the 19th of Sept., with a force of about 6,000 men. Operations were immediately commenced, and one point after another of the entrenchments was taken. On the morning of the 24th, a communicatin was sent to Gen. Taylor from Gen. Ampudia, making an offer of capitulation. After a long consultation, Gen. Ampudia sent to inform the American General that to avoid the farther effusion of blood, the national honor being satisfied, by the exertions of the Mexican troops, he had decided to capitulate.

The terms of capitulation were in effect as follows:—That the Mexican officers should be allowed to march out with their side arms; that the cavalry and infantry be allowed to march out with their accoutrements; that the artillery should be allowed to march out with one battery of 6 pieces and 21 rounds of ammunition; that all other munitions of war and supplies should be turned over to a board of American officers appointed to receive them; that the Mexican Army should be allowed 7 days to evacuate the city; and that the American troops should not occupy it until evacuated; that that the cathedral fort, or citadel, should be evacuated at 10 A. M. next day, 25th; the Mexicans then marching out, the American garrison marching in; that the Mexicans should be allowed to salute their flag, when hauled down; that there should be an armistice of eight weeks, during which time neither army should pass a line running from the Ranconada through Linares and San Fernando. This lenient offer of the American General was dictated with the concurrence of his Generals, and by motives of good policy. This consideration was due to the good defence of their city by the Mexican Army.

[Monterey is the capital of the State of New Leon. It is on the Fernando river, about 220 miles from its mouth. It has well paved streets and mostly one sort of stone buildings. The population is about 12,000, and the city is situated on the main traveling route from the Rio Grande to the City of Mexico. The Mexicans defended this stronghold with more gallantry than was expected. The three days' fighting, and the heavy loss of our troops bear witness of this. The most reliable accounts of the matter, state our loss at three hundred killed, and two hundred wounded; but it is feared that the number of killed and wounded will prove somewhat greater. The Mexicans had seven thousand regulars and four thousand rancheros in the city. Their killed and wounded was less than ours, because they were protected by their walls.]

THE TAKING OF CALIFORNIA.—On the 18th of August Gen. Kearney entered Santa Fe, and having hoisted the United States flag from the the National Palace, proclaimed New Mexico in possession of the United States Army, which was greeted with shouts of applause by the Mexican people. He administered the oath of allegiance to the Alcades of small towns and officers of Santa Fe. He proclaimed himself Governor of New Mexico, and took quarters at the Palace. Armijo, with 4000 troops, fled to Chihuahua, where report says strong resistance would be made by a large army. Gen. Kearney was preparing to march to Chihuahua.

EXCESSIVE EATING.—Commissioners have been appointed to examine into the accounts of the agents having the Camanche Indians in charge. One of the witnesses, Mr. Robert Cooke, said, "I have seen a Prairie Indian eat and destroy, upon his arrival in camp, fifteen pounds of beef in twenty-four hours. I am further of opinion that they will eat, daily, ten pounds throughout the year." Major Armstrong stated, that they each consume from six to eight pounds of meat per day, and generally they eat meat alone. Capt. Duval, who had lived 20 years among them, says that a Prairie Indian, particularly the Osage, often eats from ten to fifteen pounds of meat in the course of twenty-four hours, and when greatly fatigued could consume from five to six pounds at a meal.

DIP YOUR SHINGLES IN OIL.—Mr. B. Nason showed us the other day a few pine shingles which he took off the edge of the roof of his house will making some alterations. These shingles had been on the house over twenty-seven years, and are now as sound as when first put on. What is the cause of this wonderful preservation, in this instance, while in other cases shingles have so often rotted so much in five or eight years as to make it necessary to re-shingle the roof? The cause is this: when these shingles were put on, they were simply dipped in hot oil. It will be well for carpenters to note this fact. [Maine Cultivator.

WOMEN'S RIGHTS.—The New York Constitutional Convention has adopted the following very important section in respect to the pecuniary relations on parties the marriage contract:

"All property of the wife owned by her at the time of her marriage, and that acquired by her afterward by gift, devise, descent or otherwise than from her husband, shall be her separate property. Laws shall be passed providing for the registry of the wife's separate property, and more clearly defining the rights of the wife thereto, as well as to property held by her with her husband."

DEEPLY BEREAVED.—The editor of the New York Evangelist says he has known but few so deeply bereaved, and whose home has been made so desolate, as that of our friend and brother the Rev. J. L. Hodge, the esteemed pastor of the First Baptist church in Brooklyn. Within a few short years he has buried all his children six in number, and is now childless. On the 4th of August, Mrs. Hodge deceased at Suffield, Conn., her native place.

In the Duchy of Luxenburg, a well is being sunk, the depth of which surpasses all others of the kind. Its present depth is 2,336 feet, nearly 984 feet more than that of la Grenalle, near Paris. It is said that this immense work has been undertaken for working a large stratum of salt rock.

On the 19th ult. in Overton County, Tenn., a brute in human form, named Edward O'Niel, murdered his wife and five of his children, set his house on fire and then committed suicide, throwing himself upon the horrid pile of murdered victims. It is scarcely necessary to say the man was a habitual drunkard, and was drunk at the time. A daughter of 16 escaped the general massacre.

A Sunday School in Boonsborough, Ky., was recently disturbed by the keeper of a neighboring grogshop, who rushed in and shamefully abused the superintendent. He was tried before a justice's jury and acquitted on the ground that a Sunday School is not a religious meeting.

The St. Louis Union says that all of its correspondents describe Santa Fe "as being extremely poor, and not well adapted to agricultural pursuits." The same opinion as to the sterility of the land, was expressed in a well-written letter from Santa Fe, which appeared in a late number of the National Intelligencer.

Goudot infers that it might be cultivated in Europe.

Danger from fire is avoided, and the cost of fuel, stove and attendance, is all saved.

DIED,

In Brookfield, Madison Co., May 14, Miss MARY BROWN, daughter of Nathan and Lydia Brown, in the 32d year of her age. Miss Brown was for many years afflicted with a chronic disease of the stomach, which defied the skill of our most accomplished physicians. Although her sufferings were extremely great, she invariably appeared with that cheerful and serene countenance becoming a Christian. We trust she has already received a crown of glory in the kingdom of heaven. Scarce had the afflicted family consigned this beloved object to its kindred earth, when they were again called to take a last sad look at another of its members. Miss CAROLINE, their youngest daughter and sister, departed Sept. 13, aged 26 years. For nearly two years the consumption had been lingering about her system, yet she was able to go out until within a few weeks of her death. The family has lost one of its brightest ornaments, society a worthy and valued member. The voice, which has often enlivened the domestic circle with its melodious strains, we trust has already joined the angelic choir with the sweet singer of Israel. Her intellectual mind, together with her amiable disposition, won for her a large circle of young friends, who will long mourn her early death. While passing through the dark valley, she cast a smile on her weeping friends, and the happy spirit took its flight to the celestial city.

In Westerly, R. I., on the 13th ult., of consumption, EUNICE M. STILLMAN, aged 18 years and 5 months. The subject of this notice embraced the precious Saviour when very young, and united with the 1st Seventh-day Baptist Church at Hopkinton, where she remained a living member until she was removed by death to join the Church triumphant. She was amiable and lovely in all her associations in life, and her death was peaceful and happy. A. C.

In Alfred, Sept. 6th, Mrs. ANGELINE GREEN, wife of Clark Green, in the 38th year of her age. She was a worthy member of the 2d Seventh-day Baptist Church in Alfred, and died in the full hope of a blissful immortality.
